Success now seems certain for the trans-Mississippi and international show, familiarly known as the Omaha Exposition. All the West is in line, and working with vigor, to make the exhibition next year a thing to be remembered, and the abundant crops of the farmers have encouraged them to join in the demonstration. Great resources will be seen, and it will prove astonishing and interesting to view the material, mineral, agricultural and industrial wealth of a section only thirty years old. The motto of the exposition is "Expositions are flashlight photographs illustrating the progress of the world," and no better place to illustrate the marvelous progress of the United States could be selected than Omaha. It had a population in 1880 of a little over 30,000; in 1890 it had within its limits over 140,000 persons. Omaha's growth is only one instance of the marvelous progress of the entire trans-Mississippi country. In 1870 the states west of the Mississippi river had 6,435,167 people; to-day the population is over 20,000,000. Many of the states whose wonderful progress and whose diversified resources will be shown in the exhibits to be placed in the exposition buildings were carved out of a region that three decades ago was a wilderness of prairie, sage brush and sandhills.

It is to signalize the achievements of the builders of this great district, that the exposition was projected in 1895. At a congress held at Omaha, delegates from twenty-four states formulated the enterprise, and work has been going on until it is now settled that its gates will open June 1, 1898, and close November 1 of the same year. Financially the enterprise is in excellent shape. Subscriptions to the stock amount to over $500,000, the greater part of which was pledged and paid by citizens of Omaha. Included in this sum are the subscriptions and donations of the great railway systems and street car lines, amounting in all to $100,000. Other railways whose lines traverse the territory will donate liberal sums. The manager of the department of ways and means is confident the grand total of stock subscriptions will reach $1,000,000 during the present year.

The Nebraska Legislature appropriated $100,000 to cover the cost of state buildings and exhibits.

Illinois has appropriated $43,000 for a building and exhibits, to be administered under a commission appointed by the Governor. Iowa was the first state to make a preliminary appropriation to cover the cost of representation at the exposition. Montana has appropriated $15,000, while individual citizens have pledged a like amount, making $30,000. Utah appropriated $8,000 and the Governor was authorized to name a commission. Other states and territories will send large state exhibits collected through private enterprise, relying upon their Legislatures to reimburse them later. Under an act of Congress approved in June, 1896, the exposition is granted recognition as a national and international affair.

The men and women, to whom the work of the exposition has been entrusted thus far, represent all the western states. The president is Gordon W. Wattles; president of board of woman managers, Mrs. Winona S. Sawyer. Following are the vice presidents appointed to date:

Electricity, applied in different scientific, industrial and decorative ways, will prove a prominent feature of the Exposition, and will cut quite a figure in the beautifying of the site now going on. The late falls and early springs of the Missouri River Valley will give ample opportunity for the landscape works and construction of the buildings in time for the opening day. This site is admirably located. It is on the bank of the Missouri River in what is known as North Omaha. On the east is the uncertain Missouri, whose swiftly running waters commence in the mountains of the northwest and continue until they mingle with the father of waters. Across the stream can be seen the high bluffs from which Council Bluffs takes it name. The tract selected as the focus for the group of main buildings measures about half a mile in length by 670 feet in width.

The main entrance will be through the Arch of States in the Grand Canal court. This arch, one of the most noticeable in the group of structures, is decorated with a frieze composed of the transmississippi states, the whole being surmounted by sculpture figures bearing the United States shield. The bright colors of the shields, contrasting with the monochrone background of the arch itself, and the gay effect of streamers flying above, will form a brilliant point that can be seen the whole length of the boulevard. This arch will be built of stone and will remain a permanent monument to commemorate the exposition.

Active work has been done by the department of exhibits. More space has been allotted to exhibitors than was taken at the Atlanta exposition by three months prior to the opening of the gates. Space aggregating 20,000 feet has been contracted for. The work is divided into the following bureaus: Fine arts, education, manufactures, mines and mining, liberal arts, agriculture, horticulture, forestry, irrigation, live stock and dairy. The electricity, machinery and fishery sections are in charge of the commissioners. The bureau of fine arts is in charge of the Western Art Association. The bureau of education is under the superintendency of the woman's board. Manufactures, mines and mining and liberal arts are under the direct control of the manager of the department of exhibits.

The ground plan discloses the intent of the managers to devote liberal space to live stock and agricultural exhibits. Nearly eighty acres at the north end of the vast inclosure have been set apart for a racing course, live stock stalls, a ten-acre irrigating exhibit in operation, agricultural exhibits, etc. The aggregate premiums for live stock will not be less than $30,000 nor more than $80,000.

Special prizes consisting of six gold trophies, six silver cups and six gold medals will be awarded to competitors in each of the following classes: For the best display of irrigating system in operation, for the best electric light service and display, for the best display illustrating the process of the manufacture of beet root sugar, for the best display of manufacturing plant in operation, as well as two more lots of similar prizes for other high-class exhibits to be designated hereafter.

Visitors will enter by way of the magnificent arch, between the twin buildings of art and drama and opposite the administration arch, the palace of agriculture being on the right and the mines and mining building on the left. The canal is a smooth stretch of water, crossed occasionally by picturesque bridges. Its two ends terminate respectively at the government building and the bridge or viaduct kiosk. All the buildings, gateways, colonnades and bridges forming this main group are parts of a composition, each having its own share in the architectural effect to be produced. One point to be noted in the success of the designers is in keeping free from the influence of other expositions. The World's Fair is not in any way recalled by the transmississippi exposition except in such particulars as one great display of the kind must of necessity resemole another. Vine shaded promenades of columns, treated in the Pompeiian manner, extend between all the buildings and provide visitors with nearly a mile of continuous shade all around the lagoon. The mirror will be surrounded by a false perspective of columns by way of increasing the effect of distance; at this point its width is 400 feet and it is shaped like a trefoil. In this mirror will take place the water festivities, swimming and diving displays, which can be observed from the colonnades and from the steps surrounding the water.

The railroad terminal building will be situated at the base of the bluff defining the east edge of the section of the exposition grounds devoted to concessions. Two broad stairways follow a zig-zag line up the face of the bluff. These stairways will be about forty feet apart and the space between them will be converted into a waterfall. The distance from the level of the railroad tracks to the top of the bluff is about thirty-three feet, and this distance will be divided into three waterfalls, each having a fall of about ten feet. This arrangement will give the landscape architect ample opportunity for producing pleasing effects and will be an attractive feature to visitors. It will be necessary to dispose of over 1,000,000 gallons of water each day in order to keep the water in the lagoons in good condition, and it is thought that the waterfall will accomplish this result, while adding a pleasing feature to the grounds.

Visitors boating in the lagoon will pass all the main buildings of the Almeda, government, agricultural, mines, machinery, art, auditorium and manufactures. Terraces will show, with great hemicycle stairways crowned with kiosks; there will be electric water grottoes, a mammoth cave, a bluff transformed into a great park, and including the horticultural, forestry, dairy, apiary and other exhibits. The band terrace will seat 100,000 persons, and north of it will be placed the live stock and irrigation exhibits and athletic fields. A massive attractive feature in the architectural section will be Sherman's umbrella, a device invented by a Chicago man, by which passengers are elevated to a height of 250 feet and revolved slowly within a circle, whose diameter is 250 feet. At night the tower will be brilliantly illuminated by electricity, while at the apex a powerful flashlight will be placed. This stream of light may be seen for a distance of 150 miles. The mammoth umbrella will stand on the bluff east of the viaduct and not far from the terminal station from which passengers ascend to the Midway or amusement section. This bluff rises many feet above the level of the river, and when the arms of the umbrella are extended passengers in the cars will be over 500 feet above the river.

Omaha is not worrying about her ability to care for the attendance at the exposition. Bed and board for 100,000 strangers are to be provided for. There will likewise be no difficulty in getting in and out of the city during the most crowded periods of the exposition. Thirteen railway systems converge at the city. In this respect it is one of the most favorably located centers of population in the country. Eighty passenger trains arrive and depart daily, and five great railroads maintain headquarters in Omaha. A new union depot is now under construction. It will cost $400,000 and will be completed in the spring of next year.

A REALLY PROGRESSIVE WOMAN

Is She Who Follows the Well-Beaten Paths of Life.

Edward W. Bok, writing on the theme "On Being Old-fashioned" in the Ladies' Home Journal, contends that much of the so-called progress of to-day is not progressive; in fact, that "old-fashioned" women who follow well-beaten paths, adhere to old customs and accept well-established teachings, are the really progressive ones, for the reason that their efforts meet with no interruptions, nor is there possibility of collapse in whatever engages their attention. "In domestic life the 'progressive' woman has had a very busy time," says Mr. Bok. "She began by upsetting the old sewing-basket. It was narrowing to a woman, she discovered one dark morning. Likewise was cooking, and the care of children. A woman who stayed at home and looked after the comfort of her husband and children was 'wishy-washy'; she cramped her life, dwarfed her intellect, narrowed her horizon. Clubs by the score, societies by the hundred, schemes and plans by the thousand were started, organized and devised to rid 'poor woman' of her 'thraldom.' And these 'progressive' women were so busy for the elevation of their sex! But there were a few hundred thousand women who kept right on being busy elevating their children, helping their husbands, and believing that the sex in general was perfectly able to take care of itself. And these women are still busy sewing, cooking and caring for their children. And, gradually, they have seen sewing classes introduced in college and seminary courses, domestic science branches attached to nearly every educational institution which girls attend, while the care of children has received the endorsement of state and the specific attention of the national government. And what of the 'progressive' woman? Truly, the places that knew her once know her no more!"

THE YOUNGEST WHEELMAN.

Harry Slining Rides the Smallest Wheel Bicycle Ever Built.

This is the picture of Harry W. Slining, the tiniest cyclist in the world. He is only seventeen months old and rides what is probably the smallest wheel ever built for practical riding. His mount weighs 5⅝ pounds, has a frame 7½ inches high, and the diameter of the wheel is 10 inches. It is perfect in equipment, all the parts having been made especially for the diminutive machine. Even the lamp is a midget. Under the guidance of his father or some friend of the family the little fellow pedals along Chicago boulevards with a solemn and dignified air, taking no heed of the attention he is attracting. Occasionally observing a scorcher flash by crouching over the handlebars, Harry tries to do likewise, to the huge delight of the spectators. He is learning the pedal mount and is already making feeble tries at simple tricks.

Roman Baths.

Every Roman in early days had the use of the public baths on payment of about half a farthing. These were not such structures as we call public baths, but superb buildings lined with Egyptian granite and Nubian marble. Warm water was poured into the capacious basins through wide mouths of bright and massive silver. The most magnificent baths were those of Caracalla, which had seats of marble for more than sixteen hundred people, and those of Diocletian, which had seats for three thousand people.

Some Large Fruit Yields.

An orchard of 90 trees in New Canaan, Ct., produced 206 barrels of picked apples the eighth season from planting. A 15-year-old tree in the same neighborhood yielded 12 barrels of choice, picked apples. A grower in Ontario county, New York, sold 379 barrels from his orchard of 1½ acres and in addition had between 300 and 400 bushels of paring and cider apples. A tree in Glastonbury, Ct., produced 95 bushels of apples. In 1891 Hale Bros., of Connecticut sold about $24,000 worth of peaches from 35 acres.—American Agriculturist.

FUNNY, AINT IT?

The Dispatch is so hard up for buncombe on its pretended "reform" business that it publishes for two weeks, the same twaddle about it. The statements about Burford's steals are true, but the COURIER and all other papers have exposed these for years. So it is pretty late for the Dispatch to claim the least credit. But there are some things in that twice-published article that should be noticed. It says, "Recorder Jones showed us a magnificent kit of German silver draughting instruments in his office when he took possession, that must have cost a good deal of money. Can anyone imagine what use a county recorder can make of a set of draughting tools?" Now that is funny. Here is a man who has been elected to copy and preserve in exact form, valuable deeds etc. for all property in the county, at least all there is call for. And here is a so-called editor who claims he is teaching the people, and neither one seems to know what use a recorder could have for a set of draughting or platting tools. Go to! This is ridiculous. Suppose the recorder was called on by one who had purchased an irregular plat of land one that in order to be safe must be accurately platted and the deed and plat both put on record. What would he do without the tools? No man can draw such a plat "free hand." For example: Suppose A has bought of B an irregular plat of ground like this: All that part of sec. blank bounded by lines as follows:

"Beginning at —— and running North, 45 degrees east, 9.30 chains; South, 60 deg. E. 11.85 chains; So. 20 degrees W., 5.30 chains; So., 70 degrees W., 10.90 chains; No. 31 degrees W., 9.40 chains."

We would advise the recorder not to throw that little German silver set out of the window just yet. Something might happen and then "How handy it would be to have them in the house."

WITHOUT A DOUBT.

Unquestionable Proof that Effect of LaGrippe is Cured by

Dr. WHEELER'S NERVE VITALIZER

The number of physical wrecks resulting from the La Grippe is truly alarming. The peculiarity of the disease asserts itself after the attack, by becoming seated in some of the nerve centers, usually the brain. The many remedies and methods of treatment by physicians have little if any benefit. Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer has proven to be a specific, it cures every case. A recent instance coming to our notice, is that of Joseph Lee, Entrican, Mich., who writes the following under date of Oct. 31st.

"I was prostrated from the effects of La Grippe; during the first six months I was treated constantly by two physicians without benefit. I then changed and was treated by another during the six months following with same result. I continued to grow worse until I could not sleep day or night; my mind was harassed by evil thoughts—I was frantic. In this condition I commenced using Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer; after taking one bottle I felt much better; I took two more and was restored to health. I heartily endorse Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer; for all forms of nervous disease." Signed Joseph Lee. Nerves are alike in all, you can be cured as Mr. Lee was.

If you have not fully recovered from La Grippe use this valuable medicine at once. Your case is the same as thousands of others cured by it. It cures every case.

New Lumber Yard.

The new Auburn institution is now ready for business, a large part of the stock being now here, or on the way. The buildings are going up under direction of John Weaver and his men, and will be large and commodious for this business. The yards and buildings occupy the land lying between Jackson and VanBuren-sts at the south end, and between the wagon road and the Wabash railroad. It is a three cornered piece, but large enough to contain an immense amount of lumber etc. At present the west end of this ground, next to VanBuren-st is occupied by a large rick of staves belonging to the Greenler Co., and they have three sets of jointers at work jointing and tying them up, so they can be moved away. By the end of the week, the ground will be cleared. Then the large building, 2 stories high and 52 by 96 feet will be put up. This is the main building and will be a fine one. At present, work is going on on another building on the sloping ground to the east. This will be 24 by 96. Mr. Weaver and Mr. Croy are now getting this ready and it will be up in a few days. The railroad has set the stakes for a new spur siding on that side. It starts from the main line at Jackson street and goes west slanting into the yard, so that lumber can be unloaded direct from cars to building. Mr. Weber, the proprietor has to do the grading, and then the railroad builds the track. They have already excavated for a big culvert extending from their present culvert north to the line of their right-of-way. This new establishment is an important one and Mr. Weber is a live business man, who will push it, by square treatment and fair dealing. He will keep a good stock of all sorts of lumber, shingles, lath, doors, sash, brackets, moulding, etc, etc. In fact everything our people will need when they go to build. It will pay to see him and his stock of material, and get his prices. It will also add to the great hum of industry that has already captured that part of town. Auburn and DeKalb county will welcome all such.

BUTLER.

Our Butler people turned out in liberal numbers to the Auburn Carnival and speak in flattering terms of the exhibition.

Alvin Ash's son, who has been dangerously ill from the effect of the bite of a rat, is some better and the chances are in his favor for recovery.

Charles Wilson has returned to his home in Southern Ohio.

A. G. Jones and daughter Nina are at some distant point visiting.

Our canning factory is running about forty hands and will have tomatoes to last a week or two longer if no heavy freeze occurs.

Seeding progresses very slowly, owing to the extremely dry condition of the ground.

Rev. Smith of the U. B. church has been recurned to Butler to the great satisjaction of his own people and our people generally.

Isaac Hose, our genial ex-marshal forgot last week that he was no longer a civil officer and made a prisoner of one of Butler's most fascinating widows. The writer wishes him and his bride, Mrs. Mary Baumer a long and happy life.

Isaac Hollinger has traded his interest in the old farm, for a part of the Yohey place near Butler and will become a farmer soon.

W. H. Weber and wife were here last week from Detroit where he is a motorman. They have sold their Ashley property.

A Silent Dinner Party.

Any stranger passing Sherman Dickinson's residence last Sunday would have thought it a bicycle shop from the number of bikes on the front porch. August Mœllering, Louis Bergham and Peter Schramm, of Fort Wayne, came down on their wheels. Elijah Marvin, of Findlay, Ohio, was there also and took dinner with the family. Just as they were about done eating Peter told Sherm he smelt fire, and Mr. Dickinson went out into the summer kitchen and found sure enough it was all ablaze as well as the sides of the kitchen. But by hard work the flames were got under control, by the guests, assisted by such neighbors as were in reach. The roof of the kitchen, and all the summer kitchen were destroyed with its contents. The fire had caught from the little table their little girl Hazel used to play with. She had set it behind the stove, in which Mrs. Dickinson had a hot fire cooking the dinner. The heat fired the little pine table and then the flames spread to the near by wood work.

We should add that all the persons at this gathering were deaf mutes, except the little girl, Hazel.

AUBURN COLORS.

A friend from the country asks the COURIER how it happened that our bunting decorations were yellow and blue, and why everybody used the same kind. The answer is that these colors have been adopted as Auburn's colors. When it came to considering how we would decorate the town, the question arose as to what color we would adopt. After some discussion, the Carnival Association decided on yellow and blue, and the goods were sent for. So it is not only the Carnival colors, but will be our city's permanent colors. Now when we have another big day, the same colors will deck the town. We believe the choice a good one, for the two colors looked well to the eye when used together. Of course the national "red, white and blue," will be used all over the country and here as well on proper occasions, such as 4th of July and G. A. R. meetings. But on other occasions, Auburn will display her own colors.

WATERLOO BOY.

The friends of Will Baxter, formerly a Waterloo boy will be interested in hearing that he is still a journalist, though it is lively work to keep track of him. He is now publishing, the "Beacon," at Foster, Bates Co. Mo. He gets up a good little paper, and as might be expected, he clubs it with the Toledo Blade. He shows his faith in his adopted state by offering to trade a map of the whole world for a map of Bates county.

Hypocrisy is not Reform.

While the Dispatch is boasting about "establishing a lower and uniform scale in public printing" it should tell just what it has done in that line. We venture to say it has not established a rate one penny lower. It has always charged and still charges, the legal rate, and sometimes a little more. And when it says it has been abused for its reform tendencies, it states an untruth. No one has abused it for that, but all ridicule its pretensions to a virtue it has not. Hypocrisy is not reform.

CRIPPLE CREEK IS A WONDER.

Enormous Output of Gold in the Month of June.

Our Cripple Creek correspondent estimates that the gold output of Cripple Creek district in June was $1,190,352, says the Denver Republican. He represents that this is a conservative estimate, and it is probable that it is not far from correct. It is difficult to get definite figures in a matter of this kind, but it is probable that the sum named is close enough to the actual output for practical purposes. It appears from this estimate that Cripple Creek is holding up well in its production of gold, and that if the same pace is maintained it will make a splendid record for the year. The output for the year should not fall below $12,000,000, or an average of $1,000,000 per month. In the event that this is done the total gold product of the state will far exceed that of California in 1896, and it is probable that California will not do much better this year than it did last. Cripple Creek is, indeed, a wonder. It is the greatest gold camp in the United States, which is equivalent to saying that it is one of the greatest gold camps in the world. It is producing at a greater rate now than at any time previous to this year, except that during the last two months of 1895 it probably produced $1,000,000 in each month. But that product was not maintained. January, 1896, showed a heavy decline. But the district is producing $1,000,000 per month as a regular thing. It promises to average this during the remainder of the year, if it does not do even better. It should be observed that there is nearly every reason to believe that the annual product of this district will be increased in the future, as new properties are developed into ore producers and shippers. The camp is still greatly in need of development, which it will receive in the course of time. Of course, it cannot be reasonably maintained that every property will become a regular producer of gold. Much of the area of the district may be barren. But on the other hand, it is altogether reasonable to suppose that much undeveloped territory will prove productive in the course of time. We know no reason why, in the course of time, and as a result of extensive development, Cripple Creek should not produce $2,000,000 instead of, as now, $1,000,000 a month. An annual product of $24,000 would still leave the district far below the output of the Rand country in South Africa. This yield is within the reach of Cripple Creek, we believe, and we hope it will be attained before a great while. It will, however, require the development of properties which now have comparatively little work on them, but upon which development ought to be vigorously pushed.

A Queer Case of Amnesia.

The queerest case of amnesia ever known in Connecticut exists now in Plantsville. Rev. T. C. Hanna, pastor of the Plantsville Baptist church, is the victim. On April 17 Mr. Hanna stopped his horse to adjust a strap of his harness. This act cost him his education; in fact, his mental strength. As he attempted to jump from his carriage his feet caught in the robe, he was thrown headlong to the ground and knocked unconscious. He was found and taken home by friends, but his mind was gone, and when consciousness returned his memory was a blank. His parents stood by his bed when, an hour after the accident, he moved again and mumbled something inarticulate, but he did not know them; he did not even know the meaning of the words "father" and "mother." He could not speak a word of any language, and the task of teaching him to talk, walk, and act was begun all over again. The relations of his family were explained to him, and, like a new-born babe, he was again taught to read, write, and even eat. His loss of speech proved easily overcome, as he remembered, with wonderful mental tenacity, the meaning of the longest words as soon as they were explained to him. As the child, before he begins to go to school, picks out familiar words on household objects, Mr. Hanna began to learn language and words from a scripture roll that his father hung up over his bed. Every bit of the Bible that he had learned had slipped from his memory, but he has memorized much since then, although he cannot yet read the Bible understandingly. He does a little light reading, mostly of simple story books. All his former accomplishments, such as sketching, drawing, typewriting, etc., are forgotten.

Recalled to Duty.

One word to the purpose will often turn the tide on the field of battle. At the affair of Friedland, General Rapp became aware that one of his regiments had been thrown into disorder by the galling fire of the enemy's artillery. He rushed at once into the midst of the fugitives. "Who are you?" he cried. "The Seventy-first Regiment," answered a voice. "What!" exclaimed the general. "The Seventy-first Regiment, and you give way a single step?" The suggestion of personal responsibility and of past achievement was too much. The ranks formed again on the instant, they marched upon the guns by which they had been assailed, and in a few minutes had possession of them.

Hurt His Pride.

MILLIONS IN PRUNES.

Magnitude of One of California's Industries.

The magnitude of the prune industry of California, writes a Los Angeles correspondent of the Chicago Record, is little realized by the people in the eastern states. In a decade the growing of prunes has gone forward in California by leaps and bounds, and today $20,000,000 is invested in it—that is, in lands, trees, irrigation systems, agricultural tools and packing houses. Notwithstanding damaging frosts last spring throughout the lower part of the San Joaquin valley, and all over the horticultural valleys of Pomona, San Gabriel and Santa Ana, the total product of green prunes now on the trees in this state is estimated at 83,000 tons. Of his quantity, about one-fifth will be shipped east as green fruit, for sale at fruit stands and for canning purposes; the remaining four-fifths will be dried for market, making about 24,000 tons of dried prunes.

Ten years ago the total area of bearing prune orchards in California was less than 7,000 acres. In 1888 there were 11,000 acres of bearing prune trees and about 6,000 acres more of young prune orchards. There was an import duty of two and one-half cents a pound on dried prunes in those days, and the growers sold their crops on the trees for sums varying from $35 to $50 a ton. In 1890 the total area of bearing prune orchards was 13,000 acres, and there was an enormous planting of prune trees that year in all of the fruit growing valleys of California, because of the large profit in the industry. Twelve thousand acres of prune orchards were set out in the winter of 1890-91, and 24,000 acres more were planted in the next two years. These orchards have now come into bearing, and the state board of horticulture finds that there are 53,000 acres of bearing prune orchards in California today and about 8,000 acres more to come into bearing. Conservative estimates put the total crop of California prunes in a favorable year at not less than 90,000 tons. In a few years more a full yield in this state will be more than 110,000 tons of green fruit.

CHILD BRIDES OUT OF DATE.

Sweet Angeline Does Not Wed at Seventeen Now.

Singular how sentiment changes with the modes of a century! Did you ever remark that, according to all authorities concerned, your mother and the mother of every one else of the present generation was wedded at 18? The grandmammas usually met their mates and married them while still at school, and according to tradition their "first long frock was the wedding robe."

Things have changed. The girl of 18 today is hardly finished school, seldom in society, and she very rarely marries until she has tasted two seasons of social joys. To be sure, even with this late marrying, divorces are more numerous than in olden time, but, then, they are less frowned upon.

Even a broken engagement in other days was a stigma which no young woman cared to bring upon herself. And the broken engagement is often a blessing in disguise.

The moral of the whole affair seems to be that young people should beware of impulsive betrothals. Boys and girls who are scarcely out of their teens can not be regarded as having any fixity of mind, and the chances are that before the hymeneal altar is reached both will have seen that they were mistaken. When this stage is reached it is infinitely better to draw back before the final step has been taken which may ruin two lives.—Philadelphia Times.

Time by the Forelock.

"Do you think the Japanese will really cause any difficulty?" asked one editor. "No," replied the other. "And the strikes are likely to be settled before long?" "Yes." "And the war in Cuba won't develop much that is new?" "I harly think so." "And congress is sure to adjourn quite soon?" "Undoubtedly." "Well," was the rejoinder, with a sigh, "I suppose we may as well go ahead and send a few men out to see sea serpents."—Washington Star.

WORDS OF PRAISE

For The Carnival by Those Who Were Here and Saw it,

Kendallville Daily Sun:—G. W. Hartsuck has returned from Auburn where he attended the Carnival. He was very much pleased with the exercises and display in general.

Fort Wayne Journal:—Mr. and Mrs. R. W. T. DeWald and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Muhler, jr., attended the Auburn Carnival last week, and report it as being one of the finest fights they have ever seen. They also report a royal reception from the Auburn citizens and are enthusiastic in their praise of the town's enterprise.

THE NEW BRIDGE.

Work is being pushed rapidly and this fine, dry weather is very favorable. A large amount of great blocks of stone are already on the ground ready to start the abutments as soon as the piling is ready. And the piling goes on as rapidly as possible. The piles have been driven on this side and men are digging down around them so as to cut them off several feet below the water line. Then the stone work can begin at once. They have an engine to pump out the water so the men can work. On the other side of the creek the pile driver is at work putting down the piles. If dry weather holds a couple of weeks, the work may be started soon enough to get above water, then the rest is easily done.

—APPRENTICE WANTED:—Steady girl. Apply at Trentman Sisters' Millinery store, North Main-st.

—David M. Hart, of LaOtto is among those who have lately been granted pensions.

—Miss Lula Miller was the guest of Tina Umber during the Carnival, she returned to her home at Hicksville, Ohio, Sunday evening.

—The electric fountain showed its beauties a short time last evening, and has stopped for good. We wish it could be kept up next year, so as to be used each night a band plays. But we presume it is too expensive.

—The Auburn Foundry and Machine Works Co. are asking for a switch from the Wabash track up to their buildings. This would save the company a great deal of expense and labor in loading their machinery.

—The L. L. C. have their first regular meeting for the coming year, on Saturday of this week, at the residence of Mrs. J. A. Barns. This first meeting is what they call "president's meeting" at which the presiding officer entertains them. Invitations are usually sent to absent members and all possible efforts used to make the occasion enjoyable.

One of the greatest, medical discoveries is Dr. John W. Bull's Pills for the cure of indigestion, sick headache, sick stomach and constipation. THE NEW WAY.

WOMEN used to think "female diseases" could only be treated after "local examinations" by physicians. Dread of such treatment kept thousands of modest women silent about their suffering. The introduction of Wine of Cardui has now demonstrated that nine-tenths of all the cases of menstrual disorders do not require a physician's attention at all. The simple, pure taken in the privacy of a woman's own home insures quick relief and speedy cure. Women need not hesitate now. Wine of Cardui requires no humiliating examinations for its adoption. It cures any disease that comes under the head of "female troubles"—disordered menses, falling of the womb, "whites," change of life. It makes women beautiful by making them well. It keeps them young by keeping them healthy. $1.00 at the drug store.

For advice in cases requiring special directions, address, giving symptoms, the "Ladies' Advisory Department," The Chattanooga Medicine Co., Chattanooga, Tenn.

W. I. ADDISON, M.D., Cary, Miss., says: "I use Wine of Cardui extensively in my practice and find it a most excellent preparation for female troubles."

Business Directory.

The management cheerfully recommend every business firm represented in these advertising columns. They are public spirited men who are assisting in making the Exposition a success, and all friends of the enterprise who are interested in the welfare of the town should see that their patronage goes to these firms. As a rule it is always safe to patronize the man who advertises; by that fact alone he certifies to frank, honest business methods which he may well invite the public to consider. While the man who does not advertise, as a rule, is an old fogy, or is guilty of misconduct and methods so unsavory that he can not safely invite public inspection, so we say look to your interest.

EXPOSITION!

A New Event in Waterloo.

THE INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITION

Opens Oct. 11, '97 and Closes Oct. 16.

NEW AND MANY ATTRACTIONS.—FINE EXHIBITS OF EVERY BRANCH OF INDUSTRY.—BIG STOCK DEPARTMENT.

The public in general is hereby notified that Waterloo will have an Industrial Fair and Stock Sale, on the grounds of the Northeastern Indiana Agricultural Association, for the week commencing Oct. 11, 1897, and ending with a great sale of live stock, on Saturday, Oct. 16. This new departure is under the exclusive management of Mr. John F. Shuman as superintendent and Michael Kiplinger as secretary. These gentlemen have a wide experience in fairs, and their names are a sufficient guarantee of good faith and responsibility. The character of this exhibition will be entirely different from any fair ever held in this part of the state, and is in no way connected with the old organization otherwise than to be held upon the large and commodious grounds belonging to the Northeastern Indiana Agricultural society, which society will not hold a fair this season. Some of the features will be a field of horses, in extent and speed never before witnessed in this part of the state. The races will be the best ever made in this section. Another feature will be a band contest for a cash prize of $250, in which the celebrated and best bands in Indiana will contest. In addition to the amusements, stock exhibit and races, there will be a magnificent display of all sorts of merchandise, which will be on sale during the fair All the halls will be remodeled so as to make booths of sufficient sizes and accommodations for tradespeople in general. Stoves will be placed in these halls should the weather be cold, and every safeguard placed around their exhibits. There will be no entrance fee for exhibitions in any of the departments, and the world at large is invited to participate. On Saturday, the closing day, an auctioneer will be furnished free, who will sell to the highest bidder, stock from the herds on exhibition. Stock growers are invited from every section to come and sell or exchange breeds worthy of introduction. The time is at hand in this section when farmers want and are ready to buy better breeds of stock, and this will be the grandest opportunity of bringing buyer and seller together ever offered and without cost, save the expenses of travel and the nominal admittance fee at the gate for those attending the fair. We assure every one who attends this great exhibition that they will not be disappointed, otherwise than that the entertainment will exceed their most sanguine expectations. Look for bills and announcment of other attractions. For particulars address either of the gentlemen named.

NOTES:

Be sure and take a meal at the Exposition Dining Hall. First class in every respect.

Fort Wayne horse breeders will have some very fine driving horses on exhibition and for sale at the public stock sale.

Good entertainment at the Opera House every night during Exposition week. Watch for later announcements.

Chronic kickers will find the latest invention in their line on exhibition. Do not stay away and then kick yourself because you were not there.

One of the most famous herds of cattle in America will exhibit and sell at the stock show. This herd took first award at the World's Fair.

Poultry fanciers will examine the fine display under the management of L. F. Stamets. Purchasers will find best breeds at reasonable prices.

While at the Exposition examine the fine herd of Berkshire hogs from the breeding pens of J. W. Jackman & Son and John Jackman, of Waterloo. Buyers especially invited.

Lovers of shorthorn cattle will be delighted to see the fine herd owned by E. F. Smith, of Ashley. Buyers will find no better in the state and Mr. S.'s honest business methods makes it safe to deal with him.

THAT SHIP CANAL,

A big ship canal route is being surveyed across the state of New York, from Buffalo to Oswego and thence to Albany, so that ships may go from Chicago to the ocean. It is estimated to cost over 80 millions. The Suez Canal cost 100 millions, but is not as long. If it is ever built it will be of vast value to commerce.

—Work has begun on the "tunnel" at Ft. Wayne. This means the tunnel that is to run underground from the new court house to the jail and power house, several blocks to the north. —Among Auburn's friends who came from a distance to see the Carnival, were Mrs. A. S. Lease and three lady friends who drove all the way from Bryan.

HAS BEEN IN THE KLONDIKE.

(Elkhart Truth.)

Thomas E. Eyanson, an extensive woolen manufacturer of Seattle, Washington, stopped at the Bucklen to-day. Mr. Evanson is about sixty five years of age and was formerly a resident of Columbia City, Ind., where he conducted a woolen mill until about fifteen years ago when he moved to Seattle. He has many friends in the city and is on his way to Philadelphia on a business trip. The Seattle Woolen Manufacturing Company in which Mr. Eyanson is partner makes a specialty of heavy woolen clothes such as are worn by miners and others whose destination is the Yukon gold fields. Mr. Eyanson has himself been to the Klondike and carries a small vial of gold dust as a sample of the precious metal which is said to exist in that country in large quantities. He also carries with him several samples of the cloth used in making miners' suits. Shirtings as heavy as the most expensive beaver cloth and everything else of a proportionate weight constitute the outfit. Blankets half an inch thick and underclothes of coarse heavy black material give some idea of the intense cold of an Alaskan winter. A list of supplies including tools, clothes and medicines as shipped by the firm with which Mr. Eyanson is connected weighs about 1,000 pounds and costs $150 in Seattle. Mr. Eyanson says his firm has been engaged in the manufacture of Mackinaw cloth and other heavy materials for several years and they have already built up a very large business. The mills are now running full blast and cannot begin to supply the demands for clothing caused by the present rush to the gold fields.

—Several sidewalks which were included in an ordinance passed over a year ago, will be sold Oct. 8th. We notice that the town has caused notices of sale to be posted up. No one certainly dare complain at the action of the board as they have been given over a year to do the work.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

PURELY VEGETABLE.

The cheapest, purest and best family medicine in the world! An effectual specific for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen. Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impurs accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

EVERY PACKAGE has the Z Stamp in red on the wrapper. J. H. ZEILIN & CO., Philadelphia.

Log Cabin Day.

Wednesday, Oct. 13 is to be Log Cabin Day at the Waterloo Exposition. All persons who settled in DeKalb County prior to 1850 will be admitted free. Good speakers, among whom is Hon. Charles A. Bowersox of Bryan, O. will be present and address the people. In the afternoon the Band Contest will open and good races will be held on their tracks.

Queer Forgery

A queer law case has just come up in Germany. A man imitated the handwriting of Martin Luther, the great Reformer, and wrote verses and scripture lines in various books and then sold them at a high price. He will be punished for forgery.

Miss Ilger is well known in Auburn, being the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Ilger, who for a time was in charge of the Swineford House. The groom is a Detroit young man and is to be congratulated on his good fortune. We wish for both, all possible happiness. They will be "at home" at Library Park Hotel, Detroit, after the wedding.

—There is some complaint on the part of our business men because no special trains were run during the Carnival. Some think that the officers did not try to secure these trains. We wish to state right here that the management did all in their power to secure these trains but as the Railroad Companies were not familiar with the nature of our entertainment they would not grant the request. Next year there will be no trouble in securing these trains as all over the country people are talking of the success of the Carnival. One of our business men who was at Chicago Sunday was riding down one of the streets on the car, and the general conversation of a lot of traveling men was about the "Carnival at Auburn." One stated that he would not have missed it for $50. That's the way we want people to talk about Auburn.

A Bird's Friendship for a Boy.

It is a rare occurrence for animals in a wild state to select man for a companion and friend, yet well-authenticated instances when this has been done are a matter of record. The following instance is vouched for by my correspondent, a young woman who is a close and accurate observer: Last week my brother (a lad of twelve) killed a snake which was just in the act of robbing a song sparrow's nest. Ever since then the male sparrow has shown his gratitude to George in a truly wonderful manner. When he goes into the garden the sparrow will fly to him, sometimes alighting on his head, at other times on his shoulder, all the while pouring out a tumultuous song of praise and gratitude. It will accompany him about the garden, never leaving him until he reaches the garden gate. George, as you know, is a quiet boy, who loves animals, and this may account, in a degree, for the sparrow's extraordinary actions."

I am perfectly convinced that the nesting birds on my place know me, and that they remember me from one nesting-place to another. I have repeatedly approached my face to within a foot of setting birds without alarming them. On one occasion I even placed my hand on a setting cardinal, which merely fluttered from beneath it without evincing further alarm; yet no wild bird has ever evinced toward myself any especial degree of friendship. When I was a lad I remember that a certain decrepit old drake would follow me like a dog, and appeared to enjoy himself in my society. I could not appreciate his frendship then, and greatly fear that I was, at times, rather cruel to the old fellow.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Acts of Heroism.

Acts of heroism were not wanting in the horrors of the fire in the charity bazar in Paris. While the flame was sweeping through the mass of delicate lightly-clad women, and the burning tar was raining down on them, there were men and women who remained calm, thinking of others instead of themselves.

A window was opened in the wall. The wife of the academician, Heredia, saw it and urged her daughter toward it. The girl pushed her mother forward. An old woman of the poorer class, named Surrault, had reached the chair before the window. She drew back and forced them to escape in her place. She was carried out later cruelly burned, and when asked why she gave up her chance said:

"They loved each other so much! I could not see them die."

One royal princess was present—the Duchesse d'Alencon. She was the chief patroness of the charity, and when they would have carried her out of the flames, drew back behind a stall, saying:

"Our guests must go first." She perished in the flames. None of her ancestors ever faced death more royally.

Among those who carried out the burning victims at the risk of their own lives were two scullions from the hotel, a poor cab-driver, a plumber, and a street-sweeper. These men worked encircled by sweeping rings of fire, and covered with frightful burns.

We very naturally explain the heroism of the high-born lady by saying that the feeling that she must be brave and courteous even in death had come down to her through generations of chivalrous ancestors. But how did it come to the scullion and the street sweeper? What, after all, makes the hero? Not familiarity with danger, for Sir Colin Campbell, after years of brave fighting, never drew his sword without losing color.

Most of us would like to stand for one glorious moment as heroes in the eyes of a watching world. But no spell has ever been found which will command the moment or the high courage to meet it. There are humbler virtues which we can master, and opportunities for them are always ready.

After all, a little candle burning every night through the slowly passing years makes as much light in the house as a lightning-flash once in a lifetime.—Youth's Companion.

The Tie Between Mother and Daughter.

"The careful shelter of the girls of the stately Colonial days in American history is as possible with us to-day as it was in the olden times," writes Edward W. Bok, deprecating, in the Ladies' Home Journal, the too great liberty young girls by their parents. "Not in the letter, perhaps, but in the spirit. But before we can bring back those ideal influences it is necessary that we should return to one or two of the conditions which existed and made those influences possible. Our mothers should should be more familiar with their daughters than they are. The multifarious outside duties into which women of this latter day have gone have not served to strengthen the tie between mother and daughter. If anything, they have loosened the relation. The Colonial mother lived in her home; the mother of to-day lives too much outside of it. The daughter in the Knickerbocker home was the first thought of the mother; the daughter of to-day is all too often the last thought of her mother. Such changes in home affairs are not marks of progress. In fact, it requires a reading of old books sometimes to see how little actual progress we have really made. More often, the wisest progress would be for us to go back a bit, and see whence we started. There are potent lessons for us in the past. Our grandmothers knew a thing or two. Some things they knew better than do their grandchildren."

A Trumpeter's Courage.

During a French campaign in Africa many brave deeds were done, but none braver, perhaps, than Trumpeter Escoffier's rescue of his captain.

The Arabs were pressing the cavalry of Captain De Cott, and everything was in confusion, when De Cott's horse was killed under him and the capture of the officer and the whole company seemed inevitable.

At that moment the trumpeter of the company leaped from his horse and gave it to De Cott, saying, "Take him. Your life is necessary; mine is useless. You can rally the men. It does not matter about my neck!"

De Cott mounted the horse, rallied the company and continued the fight. Trumpeter Escoffier was taken prisoner, but the Arabs, who adore courage, had witnessed the scene, and appreciating the nobility of the man, treated him with generosity. His trumpet was a source of great entertainment to his captors, who used often to make him give the signals of the various military movements. One day Escoffier gave the whole repertoire with great gusto, finishing up by blowing the summons for a charge with an extended flourish.

"What was that?" asked the Arab chief.

"Ah!" said Escoffier, "you will hear that soon, I hope. That is the signal for a charge!"

Jewel of Consistency.

The virtue of consistency is giving the citizens of Somersworth, N. H., a lot of trouble. First, Mayor Hanson caused the arrest of those who sold candy and soda water on Sunday, in order that the Sunday law might be consistently enforced. Then one of the men arrested thought that consistency required the arrest of the Mayor, who runs a livery stable which hires horses on Sunday. The Mayor was fined $5. Lastly, a citizen threatens to have the authorities of the Methodist Church arrested for the unnecessary ringing of the church bell on Sunday. The result of all this is that nearly everybody in the town is angry with somebody else.—New York Tribune.

BEST DOGS FOR USE IN THE KLONDIKE COUNTRY.

Thousands of men impregnated with the Klondike gold fever are now seriously discussing the means of transportation to the Alaskan treasure fields, with a scope of choice as to best motive power lying between horses, mules, reindeer or dogs. Horses have been tried and found wanting, being unable to stand the rigors of a frigid climate, while mules, it has been ascertained, are at a decided disadvantage with their small clean-cut hoofs on the hard frozen lands of the far north. Reindeer are good, serviceable beasts, but the supply is not equal to the demand, making the price of purchase too high for the average prospector.

Notwithstanding these proven facts, many adventurers will use horse, mule or reindeer, as fancy or accident influences him. The wise prospector, however, will choose dogs. These animals have been tried, and their value fully proven by constant use for centuries among the Eskimos and Indians of the frost-bitten regions, and by traders, and the hardy pioneer who undertakes the terrible overland trip with such intelligent guides, will stand the best show of pulling through.

A capable dog of the Eskimo variety can draw heavy sledges at a speed and for a length of time simply marvelous. He grows up among ice and snow, piles of fur and bales of hide, till he has learned his lesson by eyesight before a harness is attached to him. He is a shirk, and has to be whipped up, he is not intelligent, he is treacherous and vicious, but he can do the work. Kindness has no effect. He must have a stern master, and must know that he has one. Then he does his work slavishly, it is true, but well.

Other varieties of dogs are now under discussion for Klondike use. The St. Bernard is a cold weather dog and is very sagacious, but he is a large eater. The old English sheep dog could be readily trained, and is powerful, strong-limbed and capable of great endurance. The Newfoundland is dying out, but crosses have been retained, and this breed will certainly be utilized. Scotch collies are already in service in Alaska, and make excellent draft animals.

The Russian wolf-hound is probably the animal best adapted for the overland service. Its speed capabilities are large, and it would require small food allowance. There are numerous other dogs that may be tried, but they should have a strain of one or the other of the breeds mentioned. Even bulldogs may be found to fill the bill. At all events, poor prospectors, with their eyes towards Klondike, should settle on these animals as their beasts of burden, and would do well to take a team of their own, thereby saving great anxiety and expense.

Ten drops of tincture of iron in water, taken through a glass tube after meals, will prove a specific for chronic cases of nosebleed.

The aromatic syrup of rhubarb is a good remedy for hives in children. A teaspoonful should be given every three hours, as required.

Some of the pleasant-flavored powders injure the teeth. In case of doubt, you cannot do better than use the plain mixture of English precipitated chalk mixed with powdered orris root.

For dysentery, a physician recommends one dram of powdered cinnamon, mixed with a few drops of water to make into a ball. Take it morning and evening, washing down with a mouthful of water.

There seems to be only one sure way of eradicating warts, and this is to soften the excrescence with hot water, protect the surrounding skin with vaseline, and slowly burn off the wart with lunar caustic.

Many infants are troubled with eczema of the scalp. An excellent remedy for these troublesome minute white pimples is a soaking of the scalp daily, with a mixture of equal parts of castor oil and alcohol.

When a splinter gets into the eye and will not dislodge after several days, causing mistiness of sight, wash out the affected member with an eyecup every three hours with a saturated solution of boric acid.

Tincture of iron is one of the most indispensable household remedies, and should always be kept at hand. It will drive away ringworm, and, used in moderation, will cure the most painful of all ailments, a soft corn.

Sleeping in a narrow, hard bed is now considered conducive to a good figure; throw away your soft mattresses and even your pillows, and you are promised freedom from round shoulders and double chins. Many women are giving the experiment a trial.

It is not generally known that a mustard plaster made with the white of an egg will not leave a blister. The egg plays an important part in therapeutics, when understood. A raw egg will carry a fishbone out of the throat, and its white skin is a most efficacious application for a boil.

A bran-bag is one of the most grateful of all toilet accessories. It is cleansing to the skin, and very refreshing. It is made by filling a muslin bag with two quarts of bran, one ounce of orris root, one ounce almond meal, and one small cake of castile soap cut in small pieces.

Here is a physical training direction adapted to most individual characteristics: Sleep nine hours out of the twenty-four, bathe in cold water, exercise five minutes daily with light dumb bells, drink a cup of hot liquid before breakfast, spend half an hour every day in outdoor exercise, make the best of bad bargains and always keep your temper.

Every season there is a great inquiry for the famous cholera mixture which is so reliable. The prescription, which is a good one to preserve, is as follows, but should be put up by a skilled druggist, so that quantities may not be excessive: Equal parts of tincture of opium, tincture of rhubarb, tincture of red pepper, spirits of camphor and essence of peppermint.

Rustics who live on a bread-and-milk diet nearly always have heavy hair to an advanced age, while people who lunch and dine on meat rarely have after 25. A very clever and well-known doctor claims that meat eating and baldness go together, and he has often checked cases of falling hair by combining with local treatment a diet of milk, eggs and fruit.

In cases of scarlet fever, the entire body of the patient should be carefully sponged with lukewarm water twice a day, care being taken, however, to uncover only that portion of the body which is being bathed. After each sponging, some oily substance, such as vaseline or glycerine, and cold cream—one part to eight—should be thoroughly rubbed into the skin. This procedure not only relieves the itching and burning, but prevents the spread of the contagion.

What the man of to-day needs most, is not athletics in a gymnasium, but plenty of fresh air in his lungs. Instead of a quantity of violent exercise that leaves him weak for several hours afterward, he needs to learn to breathe right, stand right, and sit right. And if the woman who spends so much time and strength getting out into the air, would dress loosely, and breathe deeply, and get the air into her, she would have new strength and vigor, and soon be freed rom many aches and pains and miseries.

The safest way to reduce obesity is to begin by eating and drinking less, and to take as much exercise as possible, increasing it gradually day by day. Butter, fat, oil, sauces, haricot beans, peas, vermicelli, rice, tapioca, macaroni, all fatten. Bread should be eaten in moderation, and stale or toasted. All sweets are forbidden. Plainly roasted or boiled meats taken in moderation, with plain boiled green vegetables, may be eaten, also fruit—apples and oranges especially. Gooseberries and currants are good when in season, and for drink take lemonade unsweetened, weak tea, and black coffee.

Here is a wonderful developer for weak arms and wrists: Get a round billet of wood, tapering, if possible from two inches in diameter to three-quarters of an inch at the smallest portion. Attach a small line or rope to one end of it and run this rope by a small pulley so that by turning the billet or roller of wood the rope will run over the pulley. Attach a weight of five pounds to the end of the rope and roll up the weight by turning the roller of wood. As you get stronger take only that end of the roller which is the least in diameter.

Watch vs. Locomotive.

Very few of the millions of people who carry watches realize to what a wonderful extent lubrication is developed and what an extraordinary number of turns the balance wheel makes with one oiling. A Chestnut street watchmaker, whose knowledge of these wonderful pieces of mechanism is not exceeded by any man in this city, has made up an interesting table of comparison to show the perfection of lubrication in a watch.

A watch will run on one oiling from a year to a year and a half. Every minute the balance wheel turns on its axis 450 times, and 27,000 times in an hour. Accepting the year as the time the ordinary watch will run with one oiling he finds that if the driver of a locomotive was as well oiled as the balance wheel of a watch it ought to run sixty miles an hour day and night for 648 days, or well on to two years with one oiling. In that time it would traverse a distance equal to nearly four times the circumference of the earth.

In view of the fact that in reality few locomotives will run one day without reoiling, he maintains that the watchmaker has developed his art to a far greater degree than the locomotive builder has yet been able to reach.—Philadelphia Record.

He Wants More Speed.

A Washington correspondent tells of a Western Congressman whom he once heard declaiming in a Washington hotel about the new navy: "We must have speed in our new ships," he said; "if I had my way about it we would never build another cruiser that could sail less than twenty fathoms an hour!"

A Queer Epitaph.

In a cemetery in Solomon City, Kan., there is a small tombstone erected over a child's grave, seemingly by its parents, which bears this most singular inscription: "A little weazen-faced baby, head too big for its body; two great staring eyes seeming to wonder why it was born."

Atchison ball players are becoming stuck up; they call practice "rehearsing."

LARGEST STEAMSHIP IN THE WORLD.

The Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse of the North German Lloyd, the largest steamship in the world, recently sailed from Bremen on her initial voyage. Unless her scientific builders be mistaken, the ship will be a record breaker in the matter of speed as well as in size. It is expected that after a few trips the Atlantic will be crossed easily in five days. This monarch of the seas is 646 feet long, 66 feet beam, 43 feet depth, has a carrying capacity of 14,000 tons, and a displacement of 20,000 tons. She was built in accordance with the requirements of the imperial German navy department, and in case of war will be fitted with guns and serve as a cruiser. She has two triple expansion engines, each working on four cranks with four steam cylinders of the following dimensions: High pressure, 52 inches; intermediate, 89¾ inches; two low pressure, 96½ inches each. The propellers are three-bladed, 22 feet 3¾ inches in diameter, with a pitch of 32 feet 10 inches. Theyare built of bronze and each weighs twenty-six tons. Bilge keels attached to the hull on both sides of the vessel are expected to reduce the rolling motion of the vessel to a minimum. A departure from old models is made in the arrangement for first cabin passengers, their rooms being nearly all placed upon the upper and the promenade decks. The dining-room is situated amidships on the main deck, takes up the full width of the ship and seats 350 persons. There are also four smaller dining-rooms. Four cabins de luxe have a sitting-room, bedroom fitted with brass beds, and a bathroom. The crew of Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse numbers 450. She can accommodate 400 first-class passengers, 372 second class and 800 steerage.

That Terrible Scourge.

Malarial disease is invariably supplemented by disturbance of the liver, the bowels, the stomach and the nerves. To the removal of both the cause and its effects Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is fully adequate. It "fills the bill" as no other remedy does, performing its work thoroughly. Its ingredients are pure and wholesome, and it admirably serves to build up a system broken by ill health and shorn of strength. Constipation, liver and kidney complaint and nervousness are conquered by it.

Thirty thousand elk are wintering in the Jackson's Hole country of Wyoming, according to the estimate of the game warden, who says that in one herd which he saw there were 15,000 of them, stretching over a distance of six miles. The sight, he said, surpassed anything he had ever seen and utterly amazed him. The elks' trail over the snow was like flint ice, he said, so hard had the snow been packed down. The animals are seen by thousands any morning, moving along the Snake river from the Great Swamp to the Gros-Ventre hills, and at night the wails of the calves straying from their mothers may be heard.

Diamonds in an Extinct Volcano.

An interesting discovery from a geological point of view was recently made by an explorer in the mountains of Witzies Hoek, Natal. On the summit of an extinct volcano, on the edge of a lake that occupies the crater, soundings revealed a layer of sand inclosing small diamonds. It would be interesting to know whether these diamonds were there accidentally, that is, as the result of washing operations carried on by the natives or whether this discovery corresponds to an actual mine of diamonds, for the hills of Witzies Hoek are not situated in regions known to be diamond-bearing. On the last hypothesis the presence of precious stones in the crater of a volcano would doubtless throw some light on the formation of the gems in nature.—La Genie Civil.

MRS. PETERSON'S STORY.

I have suffered with womb trouble over fifteen years. I had inflammation, enlargement and displacement of the womb.

The doctor wanted me to take treatments, but I had just begun taking Mrs. Pinkham's Compound, and my husband said I had better wait and see how much good that would do me. I was so sick when I began with her medicine, I could hardly be on my feet. I had the backache constantly, also headache, and was so dizzy. I had heart trouble, it seemed as though my heart was in my throat at times choking me. I could not walk around and I could not lie down, for then my heart would beat so fast I would feel as though I was smothering. I had to sit up in bed nights in order to breathe. I was so weak I could not do anything.

I have now taken several bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and used three packages of Sanative Wash, and can say I am perfectly cured. I do not think I could have lived long if Mrs. Pinkham's medicine had not helped me.—MRS. JOSEPH PETERSON, 513 East St., Warren, Pa.

York lawyer, and as soon as young Woolworth left Hamilton College he began the study of law under the preceptorship of his father. As early as 1856 left Syracuse, N. Y., and went to Omaha. He was the first City Attorney of Omaha, and has steadfastly devoted himself to the pursuit of his profession, declining all temptations to wander into political fields foreign to the law. He was admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of the United States in 1862, and since that time he has argued more cases before that court than any lawyer west of Chicago. Apart from law books, Mr. Woolworth's studies have been wide and varied. His essays, addresses and lectures on general subjects show his great versatility and comprehensiveness of mind. In 1875 Racine College conferred upon him the degree of LL. D. In 1892 the University of Nebraska made him L. H. D., and in 1890 he was given the degree of D. C. L. by Trinity University of Toronto. He has laid by a snug fortune from his earnings, and is a large part of the backbone of the citizenship of Omaha.

The Pill that Will.

"The pill that will," implies the pills that won't. Their name is legion. The name of "the pill that will" is Ayer's Cathartic Pill. It is a pill to rely on. Properly used it will cure constipation, biliousness, sick headache, and the other ills that result from torpid liver. Ayer's pills are not designed to spur the liver into a momentary activity, leaving it in yet more incapable condition after the immediate effect is past. They are compounded with the purpose of toning up the entire system, removing the obstructing conditions, and putting the liver into proper relations with the rest of the organs for natural co-operation. The record of Ayer's Pills during the half century they have been in public use establishes their great and permanent value in all liver affections.

EASY WAY OF GETTING RICH.

Lets a Little Water Wheel Pull Wealth Out of His Barren Land.

Michael Grath of Bradford, Pa., a long time ago owned a little tract of land that was as sterile and barren as a strip of the Jersey coast. He tilled and plowed until he was wrinkled and bent, and all he got was barely enough to keep body and soul together. But one day he found that that barren little strip of land was oozing with oil. He said nothing about it, but he redoubled his efforts and after awhile he had enough money saved to put down a well. The well was not a gusher; it was what is known in the oil regions as a "small producer" and yielded on an average twelve barrels a day.

While Grath was looking about for some method to pipe his oil the rains came and swelled the tiny creek which passed through his farm until its course was changed and it flowed by his well. That was all the Irishman needed. At practically no expense beyond the cost of cutting a little timber from his land, he rigged up a water wheel and soon nature was merrily pumping her treasures into a neighboring tank owned by one of the big pipe lines, and Grath was charging her work up to the company at so much a barrel.

When she had slaved long enough for Grath to make some money he put down another well, which, like the first, proved to be a small producer. The supply from this well was pumped by the same wheel into the same neighboring tank, and the only increase in the Irish-man's labor was to charge double the sum for the work nature was doing.

Grath sometimes employs a man and sometimes he doesn't, but he gets rich just the same. On a rainy spell he can sleep most of the day and wake up to find himself just so many dollars richer, and when he goes off on a three days' fishing he comes back to find his fortune is just so much greater than it was.

It matters little to him what the price of oil may be. Even with it down to 50 cents a barrel he is sure of an income of $12 a day, and that is enough to meet all his needs. When there is dollar oil he waxes rich fast, and his slave does the work for him at the same rate. For years he has watched her, and never once has she gone on a strike or asked for shorter hours.

FOLLOWED THE TRAIL OF '49.

An Emigrant Who Made His Way Over the Mountains to California.

In these days of winged express trains and swift-flying Pullmans it is interesting to hear of the journey to California made over the old emigrant trail and mainly by a herdic.

A. G. Ross and his family wished to go to California to settle, but they did not have money enough for railway fares, says a New York exchange. So they fitted up a caravansary, consisting of a herdic, which was an old street car, a buggy and a wagon. In these they stored their possessions, and in one corner of the herdic they fitted out a knife-sharpening establishment. By Mr. Ross' gains as itinerant grinder they managed to make enough to live. They crossed the desert and the mountains by the old '49 trail, which had been so long in disuse as to be half obliterated and very dangerous.

How Julius Runs a Farm.

"Where is your brother now?" asked a citizen as he seated himself in a barber's chair to be shaved.

"Who, leetle Julius?" inquired the barber.

"Yes."

"Oh, he vas now a farmer."

"That's funny. I didn't think he was strong enough to farm. He didn't weigh more than a hundred pounds."

"He says dot der york vas bretty hard, but he stand him all right, undt you vouldn't know him now. He vas fatter as me."

"What kind of a farm has he got?"

"He's got a cow undt chicken farm."

"I suppose he milks the cows?"

"Nein. Julius' wife she milks der cows."

"He looks after the chickens, then?"

"Nein. Julius' wif she do dot."

"Well, what does Julius do?"

"He goes to market two times a veek."

Largest Dry Dock.

There is now in process of construction in England, at the order of the Spanish Government, for the port of Olougapo, in the Philippine Islands, the largest floating dock of its kind in the world. It is over 450 feet long, 117 feet wide, and 38½ feet deep. This dock, the sides of which are of steel, will rest on six iron pontoons, each fourteen feet deep. Powerful pumping engines will lift a vessel weighing 12,000 tons in two hours. The dock will accommodate a vessel 500 feet long.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

When a man attends a concert wearing a pair of new shoes he is pretty apt to find it necessary to stand up all evening.

Flat Levels.—We live too much on the flat level of our lives, and do not rise to the elevation of the beautiful things about us.—Rev. S. A. Eliot, Unitarian, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Worldly Hopes.—Our worldly hopes must die. The sap must all run out of them and leave them worthless and empty before our ambition and aspiration shall be fixed upon truth and righteousness.—Rev. Frank Crane, Methodist, Chicago, Ill.

The Faith Cure.—It is right and helpful to use prayer in the treatment of disease. But along with that and going before it natural means are to be used. If medicine is useless, why was the earth made a vast pharmacy of "materia medica?"—Rev. Walker Lewis, Methodist, Atlanta, Ga.

Masks.—We may mask for a season the inner man, we may still the heart's struggle so effectually that the world hears it not, but by and by nature asserts herself, and all the world know what we have felt and thought and done, for with a legible hand does God Almighty write in each face a life's history.—Rev. H. M. Cook, Baptist, Chicago, Ill.

Happy Workingmen. — Abundance does not and cannot produce happiness. The workingman who has a good job and a fair wage, thrifty habits, a happy home and a conscience void of offense toward God and man is the most independent man in the community.—Rev. W. H. Carwardine, Methodist, Chicago, Ill.

The Ministry.—The ministry is not a profession at all, not for the natural man at all, not of natural origin nor to secure natural results. The ministry is not one of any class of employment. It is a class by itself—unique, peculiar, a sacred calling of divine appointment. —Rev. W. F. Paddock, Episcopalian, Philadelphia, Pa.

Klondike Visions.—We look at the grains of gold in Klondike with a microscope, and at treasures within our reach and those laid up in heaven with an inverted telescope. Hold your position, spend less than your income, and some of your relatives will return from Klondike to share your bounty.—Rev. J. H. O. Smith, Christian, Chicago, Ill.

Mob Law.—Do we wonder at lynchings and mob law? Were the people assured that the criminal would meet the penalty of the law and that justice would not miscarry, they would be content to rest the matter with the courts. But justice and judgment having failed, our hands are defiled with blood.—Rev. Albion W. Knight, Episcopalian, Atlanta, Ga.

Thoughts that Burn.—A word is only a form, but it may contain a thought that burns. A number is only a form, but he who will not use the form will never weigh the stars and measure their orbits. A letter is only a form, but he who will not learn the alphabet will never read the world's noblest and best literature.—Rev. C. F. Winbigler, Baptist, Philadelphia, Pa.

Quiet Forces.—In this world it is the quiet forces that are the most powerful ones, and this is true in all of the wonderful forces of nature. The morning sun is not heralded by any loud or forcible demonstration. Reformations that changed the forms of Christianity have had their beginnings in the mind of a single person.—Rev. A. S. Yantes, Episcopalian, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Men for Sale.—In very truth, every man, unless the divine life abides in him, has his selfish price. The Word tells of only one who could bear all temptations, outward and inward, of the flesh, of the intellect and of the heart, and even he continually acknowledged that of himself, or by his nature, inherited from man, he could do nothing.—Rev. John Goddard, Swedenborgian, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Rich and Poor.—Sometimes strikes are not justified, but at other times I believe they are. All rich men are not Christians, and it is just as true to-day as in the time of Christ that it is hard for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven. Rich men have the power to oppress and to slay, and too often they use it. If a man becomes a money-making machine, he will, as the Scriptures say, grind the face of the poor.—Rev. John Stephens, Methodist, San Francisco, Cal.

The Family of Man.—It is as true of the whole family of man as of the Church of Christ that they have community of interests, oneness of life and a mutual interdependence. We are under the law of solidarity. We rise or fall together. Whatever affects the financial or moral or spiritual welfare of one is felt by all. If there be distrust, the capitalist banks his money and labor is unemployed; thus capitalists, laborers and the community all suffer.—Rev. G. W. Mead, Presbyterian, New York City.

Manhood.—No manhood can be truly beautiful which is not gentle. Yet there is a tendency in many men toward misanthropy. They strive to harden themselves against the world's sorrows. They would deaden the natural sensitiveness of their hearts. They think tenderness and sentimentalism unworthy of a manly man. Such a hardening of feeling is really the crushing in one's heart of that which is life's very radiancy and glory. The most divine thing in us is love.—Rev. J. R. Miller, Presbyterian, Philadelphia, Pa.

Cremation.

Among the ancient Greeks both cremation of the dead and burial in the earth were practiced, though it is uncertain which was the more common. The ashes of the dead were sacredly preserved in urns. Among the Jews burial prevailed, as it has since among Christian nations.

The largest man ever enlisted in the British army was Lieutenant Sutherland. His height was 8 feet 4 inches, and his weight 364 pounds.

The heaviest man whose weight is recorded authentically was Miles Darden, of Tennessee. He weighed a little less than 1,000 pounds.

Too Emotional.

If the men who become the objects of hero-worship could see the evidence of the feeling they inspire, they would possibly be even more reconciled to leaving this sphere for any other, better or worse. Sometimes they do know; and then they need to exercise abundant charity.

An American who has lived much abroad says that he was present, on one occasion, when a countrywoman of his met a famous poet. She saw the object of her idolatry. She rushed forward and struck an attitude.

"And is it possible," she cried, dramatically, "that I look upon Browning?"

One feels that Doctor Johnson, in the same circumstances, would have remarked, gruffly, "Don't be a fool, madam!"

Again, there are times when bathos is showered only upon the dead. T. F. Silleck says that on one of his holiday excursions he visited Mount Vernon, and there, in the grounds, he came upon a middle-aged lady, kneeling before a building at some distance from the monument. She was bathed in tears. Mr. Silleck walked up to her, and asked if she were in trouble.

"No, sir," said she, "thank you very much. I am not in trouble, but my patriotic feelings overcome me when I gaze upon the tomb of the Father of his Country."

"I quite understand," said Mr. Silleck, gently, "but, my dear madam, you have made a mistake. This is not the tomb of Washington. It is over yonder. This is the ice-house."

And drying her tears, the lady moved quietly away.

A GOOD THING

For Women to Remember.

That in addressing Mrs. Pinkham they are communicating with a woman—a woman whose experience in treating woman's ills is greater than that of any living physician—male or female.

A woman can talk freely to a woman when it is revolting to relate her private troubles to a man—besides a man does not understand—simply because he is a man.

Many women suffer in silence and drift along from bad to worse, knowing full well that they should have immediate assistance, but a natural modesty impels them to shrink from exposing themselves to the questions and probable examinations of even their family physician. It is unnecessary. Without money or price you can consult a woman, whose knowledge from actual experience is greater than any local physician living.

The following invitation is freely offered; accept it in the same spirit.

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to freely communicate with Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass. All letters are received, opened, read and answered by women only, thus has been established the eternal confidence between Mrs. Pinkham and the women of America which has never been broken and has induced more than 100,000 sufferers to write her for advice during the last four months. Out of the vast volume of experience which she has to draw from, it is more than possible that she has gained the very knowledge that will help your case. She asks nothing in return except your good-will, and her advice has relieved thousands. Surely any woman, rich or poor, is very foolish if she does not take advantage of this generous offer of assistance.—Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

China's Wonderful Pagodas.

No more interesting monument to the skill of the ancient architects is to be found than are the wonderful pagodas of China. The most remarkable of these structures, the porcelain tower of Nanking, was destroyed during the Taiping rebellion of 1853, but there are some remaining that present equally curious features. They are very old, no records showing exactly when they were built. There is as much difference of opinion as to the purpose of the builders as there is concerning their age. Some writers assert they were intended as watch-towers in time of war. But the most probable theory is that they were of Indian origin, and were introduced by the priests of Buddha as a receptacle for holy relics, such as thumbs, fingers, toes or any other portions of their god which might be found from time to time.

Real Rest and Comfort.

There is a powder to be shaken into the shoes called Allen's Foot-Ease, invented by Allen S. Olmsted, Le Roy, N. Y., which druggists and shoe dealers say is the best thing they have ever sold to cure swollen, burning and tender or aching feet. Some dealers claim that it makes tight or new shoes feel easy. It certainly will cure corns and bunions and relieve instantly sweating, hot or smarting feet. It costs only a quarter, and the inventor will send a sample free to any address.

The Incandescent Light.

It is said that singers, actors and public speakers find that since the introduction of the electric light they have less trouble with their voices and they are less likely to catch cold, their throats are not so parched and they feel better. This is due to the air being less vitiated and the temperature more even.

Fast Freight Runs.

The B. & O. S. W. has been making records on quick despatch freight within the past week or two. Two trains, one weighing 732 and the other 734 tons, ran from Cincinnati to Parkersburg, 200 miles, in 8 hours and 3 minutes and 8 hours and 4 minutes, respectively. The run from St. Louis to Cincinnati, 340 miles, was made in 16 hours. Considering that some of the grades exceeded one per cent., the performance ranks with the best on record and demonstrates that the track and motive power of the B. & O. S. W. must be in good condition.

SAPOLIO

I know a lady who was troubled with what her doctors termed intestinal indigestion. Her last doctor had her pursue the Salisbury treatment, which consists of eating only beef and bread dried in the oven and drinking all the hot water she could. I have seen her in the office where she is employed walk along with a glass filled with water steaming hot. The Salisbury treatment did give her some relief and she persisted in it for three months. It was then that she was induced to try Ripans Tabules, and now she finds that there are many eatables (chicken for instance) which she was not allowed to eat at first which she can now eat without distress. She says Ripans Tabules seem to counteract the acidity of her stomach. Their effect upon her has been wonderful and the relief she gets is as much as she ever experienced with the Salisbury treatment, and she can now choose from a more liberal bill of fare.

A new style packet containing ten Ripans Tabules in a paper carton (without glass) is now for sale at some drug stores—for five cents. This low-priced sort is intended for the poor and the economical. One dozen of the five-cent cartons (120 tabules) can be had by mail by sending forty-eight cents to the Ripans Chemical Company, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York—or a single carton (ten tabules) will be sent for five cents.

POODLES LOSE CASTE.

Fashion in Dogs in Paris Has Undergone a Change.

A Paris correspondent writes: "The fashion in dogs in Paris is as changing as any other. The canine exhibition which is now open on the Quai de l'Orangerie reflects the latest taste in the matter. The vogue of the poodle is at an end, and for the moment no dog can aspire to the epithet of chic unless he be very big or most diminutive. Danes are most in favor of the former class, and Scotch terriers and toy bull dogs of the latter. German bassets are also highly esteemed, and among the finest in the capital are those owned by Miss Maud Gonne, the indefatigable champion of the Irish cause in France. Some Parisian dogs enjoy a wide celebrity. Such is the case, for instance, of Ali, a blue Dane, belonging to the duchess d'Uzes, of Miss the comtesse de Bergues' Pomeranian, and of Flic and Flac, Mme Sarah Bernhardt's Russian dogs."

HOW SEEDS SCATTER.

The study of the various manners in which plants disseminate themselves over the globe would take a lifetime. It is one of the fascinating branches of botany. One remarkable feature is that different plants belonging to the same family have entirely different methods. The oxals or wood sorrel scatters the seeds by rupture and eversion of the valves of the seed pods, which turn inside out.

In geranium proper, or the "crane's bill," four carpels adheres till ripe to a long, beak-like receptacle. Suddenly each is released and throws the seed quite a distance.

In the nearly related "stork's bill," or erodium, the very long ends of the carpels are spirally twisted, and bearded besides. These tails are extremely sensitive to hypometric conditions, and when a carpel falls upon the earth by alternate changes from wet to dry it actually corkscrews itself into the ground. The same geranium family presents also the balsams, or touch-me-nots. The botanical name, impatiens, as well as the vernacular titles, refer alike to the impulsive character of the capsules. The tense, fully ripened pod bursts elastically into five valves, thus dispersing the seed.

So much for a single family of plants. Our gardens and forests offer many other interesting examples, while the account of travelers teem with illustrations.

In a recent number of the bulletin of the Torrey botanical club Prof. Byron D. Halsted points out that the pods of the well known Chinese wistaria are most effective catapults, expelling their seeds with a pistol like explosion and scattering them far and wide. Every one knows that our common witch hazel, hammamelis virginiana—acts similarly. Each cell of the woody capsule contains one large bony and shining seed wedged into a cell too narrow to contain it. The seed is finally ejected with tremendous force and considerable noise. If one carries home a fruiting branch of witch hazel and forgets about it he is alarmed some night by a violent bombardment.

Even more surprising is the propulsive action of the sand box—hura crepitans—of the West Indies. On one occasion an English traveler, carrying some of these fruit home in a steamer, had them explode in his trunk, and with difficulty proved that he was not a dynamiter. The squirting cucumber ejects its seed in a fountain like jet of mucilaginous water.

CARNIVAL MARRIAGE.

Rev. Meese Officiates at the Friend-Kester Marriage.

Thursday evening at six o'clock at the officiating clergyman, Rev. W. L. Meese's home at J. C. Lochner's residence on North Main-st occurred the marriage of James Friend and Miss Ida Alice Kester, both of Jackson township.

Mr. and Mrs. Friend are both well known to the people of their vicinity. Mr. Friend is a prosperous farmer, and they commence housekeeping at once on the old farm home.

They have the best wishes of the COURIER for their future happiness. Mr. Friend has been a COURIER subscriber for many years, and their home will continue to be made pleasant by its weekly visits.

THE CARNIVAL

The man is a patriot,
And stands for his town,
Who helps you boom it,
And not run it down.

It may not be his way
That makes the thing move;
But he sees it a moving,
And gives it a shove.

And when it's all over,
And the people feel proud,
He's a saying "we did it,"
He's one of the crowd

Men will be lavish
With money or time;
If in their free giving,
They see their town climb.

Men will play bear
And be shut in a cage,
And be hauled on a wagon
And act in a rage.

Men will play lion,
And act fierce and wild,
And roar at the people,
But not hurt a child.

Men will play tiger,
And growl at the crowd,
Men will play donkey,
And bray long and loud.

Men will play elephant,
And march through the street,
Glad of the laughter
Of all whom they meet,

Men will ride horses,
Dressed up in mail,
Or play they are sailors
In a boat that dont sail.

Men will play Indian,
And ride without rein,
Will whoop and halloo.
And act quite insane.

All these the men will do
To see the town boom.
For kickers and croakers,
They haven't any room.

Boys will play "Brownies"
And trudge through the town,
Until brown are the laddies,
But only one Brown.

Our ladies, God bless 'em!
By nature so fair!
Will play they are Naiads,
Or sprites of the air.

They'll play they're statues
Of wondrous art,
Not thinking the truth
They really impart

That they are real statues
More perfectly wrought
Than Phidias e'er fashioned
In marble or thought.

For God was their artist,
With consummate grace,
He fashioned their bodies,
And modeled their face.

He thrilled them with life,
And wreathed them with smiles.
He crowned them with virtue
That never beguiles.

So our ladies and lasses
They think it in taste
To do all they can do
To help boom the place

The tower on the court house
That's been wagging its tongue
For years for the lawyers
When e'er the bell swung.

Slyly opened its eye.
When the sun went down,
And took a good look
All around town.

Whatever it saw there,
It never will tell;
For its eye is divorced
From its tongue in the bell.

Well, the carnival came,
And the people are proud,
And they sing Auburn's praises,
But not any too loud.

For it was a success!
Who says it was not,
It's my "candied" opinion
Should be "Shot on the spot."

Many thanks to the men
Who conceived the fine notion
Many thanks to the men
Who kept it in motion.

Thanks to the ladies
For taste most exquisite.
Thanks to the people
For their generous visit.

Thanks to the committees
Who worked well together,
And thanks to the Lord
For very fine weather.

May Auburn be lucky
In business and pleasure,
May Auburn be prospered
Far beyond measure.

Fifty Years Ago.

Who could imagine that this should be
The place where, in eighteen ninety-three
That white world-wonder of arch and dome
Should shadow the nations, polychromes...
Here at the Fair was the prize conferred
On Ayer's Pills, by the world preferred.
Chicago-like, they a record show,
Since they started—50 years ago.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills

have, from the time of their preparation, been a continuous success with the public. And that means that Ayer's Pills accomplish what is promised for them; they cure where others fail. It was fitting, therefore, that the world-wide popularity of these pills should be recognized by the World's Fair medal of 1893—a fact which emphasizes the record:

50 Years of Cures.

A SMALL BLAZE.

Damage Done at the Greenler Factory This Morning.

Wednesday's Daily.

This morning just as the men (over 100 in all) were going to work at the Greenler Co. Hoop Factory, a small blaze was discovered in the brick building where the new saw mill is being erected. The company have ample fire protection and it was soon brought into use. And with the large force of men the fire was soon put out. The loss however will probably amount to $50. It is though the fire originated from a hot box.

Thursday, as the big crowd broke up the team of a man named Fell, who lives near Newville, took frieght, a little east of town, and Mr. and Mrs. Fell and their daughter were thrown out. The daughter had her leg broken at the hip but is getting along well under care of Drs. Nusbaum and Bowman. Mrs. Fell was not much hurt, but Mr. Fell is hurt internally, but we hope not seriously.

Keep Up Your Scott's Emulsion in Summer-time

What are your resources for the summer? Have you an abundance of health stowed away for the long, hot, depleting days, or does summer find you low in vitality, run down, losing flesh, and weak? Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil will give you the proper reserve force, because it builds up the system on a solid foundation. A tonic may stimulate; Scott's Emulsion not only "boosts," it sustains.

It is a wise precaution always to have at least a small bottle of Scott's Emulsion in the house. Unopened, it will keep indefinitely. Tightly corked, after using, kept in a cool place, it will remain sweet for weeks.

Waterloo Exposition

—The Industrial Exposition which is to be held at Waterloo, Oct. 11th to 16th is a departure from the old style of exhibitions that will no doubt supply the demand for something new. They are spending a great deal of money in remodeling the buildings suited to their new enterprise. The new building, the Dekalb County Board of Trade will be especially attractive and interesting. Every attraction except the horse racing will be in properly heated buildings, so that cool weather will be no hindrance to the Exposition.

Oiling the Hull of the Ship.

By a new invention a fine spray of oil is thrown against the outside of a ship's hull, thus lessening the friction and making the progress of the vessel much easier. It has been known that oil scattered over the surface of the water will quiet the action of the waves and now the proposition to oil the vessel's hull is received with great favor. There is an absorbent composition saturated with the oil by means of the spray, and the drip and spread of the oil is assured by the composition, which is a preparation of tallow, carbon and a number of other articles which the inventors do not mention. It is claimed that this invention will increase the speed of vessels about 25 per cent.

NEW YORK POSTOFFICE,

Will Be the World's Greatest Center for Mail Matter.

The question of consolidating the New York and Brooklyn postoffices will be considered in Washington later in the year, and Postmaster-General Gary is quoted as saying that by the time the consolidation of the two cities takes effect, his department will be ready to make the necessary changes in the administration of the postoffice. Meanwhile the various candidates for the postmastership of Brooklyn who are now in the field are of the opinion that the question of the salary to be paid to the successor of Postmaster Sullivan after January will be adjusted by a special act of congress. When the Brooklyn office is made a station, subordinate to the New York office, as it will be, the salary to be paid to the superintendent will be reduced to $2,000, which is the limit allowed for officials of this class. One of the Brooklyn members will introduce a bill in the house, after the consolidation takes place, increasing the salary of the superintendent of the Brooklyn station to either $5,000 or $6,000 a year. The present salary of the postmaster of Brooklyn is $6,000. The postmaster of New York receives $8,000, the same as a member of the present cabinet. The postmaster of Long Island receives $2,800. The duties devolving upon the postmaster of the enlarged New York will make this city, in many respects, the greatest postoffice center in the world. The revenue of the New York postoffice, from the sale of stamps, stamped envelopes and postal cards amounts in a year to $7,000,000; the sale of stamps for use by newspapers mailed in New York amounts to $700,000, or at the rate of nearly $2,000 a day. The other sources of revenue include $65,000 a year for postage collected for insufficient payment, $40,000 for the rent of the postoffice boxes and other items, bringing the total receipts up to nearly $8,000,000. Against this in the New York postoffice are expenses of about $3,500,000 a year, leaving a net profit to the United States of $4,500,000 from the operations of this one office. No other postoffice in the United States, of course, yields a profit nearly so large, and the net New York city revenues go far to pay up the losses in other states. The operations of the Brooklyn postoffice, though not, of course, so large as those of New York, are considerable. The receipts last year from the sale of stamps and stamped envelopes amounted to $1,000,000, this item also including the sums paid for newspaper stamps. The Brooklyn box rents amounted to $3,000 only. The expenses of the Brooklyn department amounted to $815,000, leaving a net revenue of about $290,000. The receipts of the Long Island City postoffice in a year are $35,000 and the expenses $25,000, the profit being $10,000. When all the offices are consolidated into one, and especially when the tubular system of communication between the various stations and substations is applied, the revenues of the enlarged city postoffice will, it is figured, be materially increased and the profit will be much enlarged.—New York Sun.

CARNIVAL PICKUPS.

What the Press of the County Says of Auburn.

(Waterloo Press)

Auburn is proud of her successful Carnival.The Auburn Carnival came near breaking up the Waterloo Schools on Thursday.Mrs. Stohm of Goshen, came last week to visit with her aunt, Mrs. Meyer, and attend the Auburn Carnival.Perry Fair's trial in Steuben county has been postponed to November term. It was almost impossible to get witnessess to leave the Auburn Carnival. It would have been a good time for Perry to have insisted on a trial as no one wanted to appear against him.Auburn made her best record, last week in the carnival, although it cost good money to make the display. The pace set will be hard to equal another year, as the returns in trade hardly warranted the large expenditures. However the people were well pleased with the show, and will have pleasant recollections of the town. The Auburn Carnival last week was a great success. The parade was fine and surpassed that of Barnum and Bailey's greatest show on earth. The costumes were elegant and everybody was pleased. The electrical fountain was a source of much interest and the decorations of the town in general were the finest Auburn ever ettempted. Seventy-five costumes at a cost of two dollars each were rented from Chicago customers and the additions of unique designs in amateur uniforms, the display was beyond all expectations.

(Angola Herald.)

J. W. McCrory and family and Marion McCrory attended the Auburn Carnival last week, and spent Sunday at their old home at Leo, in Allen county. The Carnival at Auburn, last week was a great success in point of attendance and in their street parades, in which the various societies of the town were well represented by their members. The balloon ascension each day, was first-class. A large number of our citizens attended.Quite a number from Hudson, attended the Carnival at Auburn, last week. They pronounce it a success.Mrs. Osburn and daughter Inez, of Hudson, went to Auburn Thursday, where they expect to live. Pleasant Lake turned out a good representation for the Auburn jubilee last week.Mesdames, A Shaffstall, E. Ferguson and J. Wagner, of Hudson, were the guests of relatives and friends at Auburn last week.Frank Frederick and family of Auburn, were among the relatives from a distance who attended the Frederick reunion at Pleasant Lake, and visited relatives here part of last week.

(Angola Republican.)

Many of the citizens of Hamilton attended the Carnival at Auburn, last week.Upwards of eighty of our citizens put in most of last week visiting relatives at Auburn.During last week nearly half the people of Angola, paid a visit to some other town or city, but the most of them were at Auburn, while many were at Montpelier, Ft. Wayne and other places.The Auburn Carnival was a magnificent success in every particular. Big crowds attended each day and on Thursday the rowd was estimated at from 15,000 to 20,000 people, Angola being represented by about 300. The street parade was long, rich and gorgeous, the free shows were numerous, the buildings, both public and private, were highly decorated with Old Glory and Carnival colors, yellow and blue. The balloon ascensions were the finest that ever took place anywhere. On Thursday, the baloonist went up right over the city and when about a mile high, he was shot from a cannon, and a moment later was making abeautiful descent to to the ground. The citizens of Auburn did themselves great credit by hospitality and in their royal welcome of visitors to their beautiful little city.

—New Era:—Quite a number from Albion and vicinity attended the street carnival at Auburn last week and pronounce it a grand success. The attendance on Thursday exceeded 10,000, and good crowds were present on Wednesday and Friday. Auburn people did their best and are deserving of much credit.

(Ashley Time.)

The Auburn Carnival last week was a great success both in attendance and entertainment. The program advertised was carried out to the letter, the attractions exceeding the expectation of most of the visitors. The attendance Thursday was estimated at 15,000 to 20,000. Her enterprising merchants added much to the attraction by their display.

St. Joe News

The Auburn Carnival was a success in every way.

Auburn people are somewhat stuck up over the success of the carnival, and they have reason to be, for it was a great affair.

Hicksville Independent.

Mrs. E. W. Walker was at the Carnival last Thursday.

Misses Minnie and Della Mastin were in attendance at the Auburn fair Thursday.

Misses Susie and Nettie Ainsworth attended the Auburn Carnival Thursday.

(Churubusco Truth.)

The Misses Sophia and Nora Maxwell were at Auburn the latter part of last week....Master Fred Metsker spent the the latter part of last week with his sister Ella at Auburn....Mrs. John Greene and baby visited with friends and took in the Carnival at Auburn, last week....Peter Davis and Frank Heffelfinger took in the sights at the Auburn Street Fair last Friday. They returned home "straight as a string."....Misses Rhoda and Ella Miller took in the Auburn Carnival the latter part of last week....Henry Hull and wife were at Auburn, Friday of last week, taking in the sights at the Street Fair and the balloon assension....Otto Welsheimer, Ed. BUTLER RECORD.

C. and David Steckley's were at the Auburn Carnival....Uncle John Phillips attended the Carnival and visited his daughter at Auburn, last week....Thomas Myers and Miss Minnie Lautzenheiser attended the Carnival at Auburn last Thursday....Those of our citizens who attended the Auburn Carnival are enthusiastic in praise of the exhibition....Auburn people are so elated over the success of their Carnival that they are already laying plans for next year.

MAY BE JEALOUS.

The Press says;

"Dispatches in the daily papers from Auburn Saturday say that there were 25,000 people at the carnival on Thursday alone. That means nearly every person in DeKalb County, or its equivalent. Now it is a fact that many farmers were too busy seeding to spare the time and there were a few too old and infirm to go. In fact, the claim will hardly be supported by the facts. We are willing to admit there was a large crowd and that besides tramping the grass on the public square to death, they crowded Cedar creek over to Eckhart's factory, but there couldn't have been over 7,000 people present and that's a big crowd."

Undoubtedly, as much as the Press would like it otherwise, there were between 15,000 and 20,000 present here at the Carnival on Thursday. DeKalb county did not probably furnish half the crowd. They came from Ohio Steuben county, Noble and Allen. Perhaps the Press did not think of this.

BURTON BROWN DEAD.

Friday's Daily.

Burton Brown an old and respected gentleman who lived east of town, died at 4 o'clock Thursday. He had been sick for some time. He is a brother to Mrs. Askew of this city. His funeral will be held from the house Sunday at 10 a. m. sun time. His death was caused by stomach trouble.

A SLUGGING MATCH.

There was a regular slugging match over at Kendallville, Thursday night. The parties had advertised a mild sparring match, but it was just the same thing that Corbett and Fitzsimmons get off, though on a smaller scale. It was undoubtedly a violation of law, but the Noble County sheriff and sixteen deputies looked on as if they enjoyed it. They were evidently there to see that there was no "prize fighting," and the taxpayers of that county will have to pay them for their time, spent seeing the plain letter of the law violated. The fight was soon over, as two rounds settled it for one of them. He was covered with blood and was a sickly sight. We do not know whether the city authorities of Kendallville, or the fair officers licensed the "friendly glove contest" or not, or whether it was "pulled off" secretly. But it could not have been a very secret affair, when the sheriff knew of it in time to get a lot of deputies to come and help him enjoy it.

TORN BY THE TRAIN.

Wednesday evening the north bound train took the bundles of COURIERS out for distribution to the several towns along the Lake Shore road. At Waterloo they are put on the main line, and so taken on night trains and on these trains such transfers are made east or west as will deliver the packages the quickest. There is a big package of COURIERS to throw off at Corunna, and in some way, the mail sacks at that place fell under the wheels, the sacks were torn open and various packages, letters, etc., torn into bits and strewed along the track. An Auburn man, who saw the pieces, says the right-of-way and track were literally covered with fragments of COURIERS, and but few of the fragments were large enough to read. A letter from postmaster Cremean, confirmed the report, and he asked if we could supply extras. But we could not, as the edition was gone, even the scattering copies left over had been bought up to send the Carnival article to distant friends. We are sorry this accident should have happened, especially just at this time, when we had written so fully of the great show, for the benefit of such as could not be here to enjoy it. The people on that way are all readers and we regret, even if the fault were not ours, that they should be deprived of the papers.

BROKE A LEG.

Friday's Daily.

Hardie Rohn and another young man started yesterday from Garrett to go to the Kendallville to attend the fair. The horse they were driving took fright and ran away and the young men were thrown out. Mr. Rohn had his leg broken, but the other was not much hurt. We have not the particulars. Mr. Rohn was pitcher for the Garrett base ball club, and a man on whom they greatly depended, as he was an expert at the game. So his accident will be a loss to the club as well as to himself.

SAGASTA CALLED.

Empowered by the Queen Regent to Form a Ministry for Spain.

Madrid special: Senor Segasta, the Liberal leader, has been entrusted by the Queen Regent with the task of forming a new cabinet, in succession to the Azcarraga Ministry, which resigned. Its probable constitution will be: Premier, Senor Sagasta; Department of State, Senor Gamazo; Finance, Aminos Salvador; Colonies, Senor Monterio Rios; Justice, Senor Maura or Pnigcerver, War, General Correa; Marine, Admiral Bermejo; Interior, Senor Moret.

Marshal Blancho, it is stated, in all probability, will accept the post of Captain General of Cuba, in succession to Captain General Weyler.

The financial question is demanding the greatest attention, and the Liberals, at the outset of the coming session of Parliament, will expose frankly the position of the Spanish Treasury.

Attempt to Rob a Bank.

The bank at Hume, Mo., was entered in daylight by two masked men, who, with two nitro-glycerine explosions, made an opening in the big steel safe containing about $5,000 in cash, but did not get the money. Sol Moore who gave the alarm, was compelled by the robbers to stand and watch the operations at the point of their guns. Marshal Powers arrived and put the robbers to flight. They stole a horse and carriage and left for the Kansas line. An armed posse went in pursuit. The bank building, of brick, was wrecked by the explosion.

Child Burned to Death.

A dispatch from Sutton, Braxton County, W. Va., says: The family of A. C. Hardin were burning a lot of refuse in their yard when the flames caught the dress of Myrtle, their 7-year-old daughter, and before she could be assisted she was fatally burned. In trying to save her child's life Mrs. Hardin had both hands and one arm withered by fire, and Misses Mary and Zeff Hardin, who went to their mother's and sister's aid, were both frightfully burned about the arms and hands.

Hunt for Buried Treasure.

Several years ago George Johnston, a farmer of near Sieuf-nville, Ohio, died, and ever since several of his heirs have been searching his farm for $12,000 in gold, which Johnston had, and which before his death he produced from its hiding place at midnight and showed his children. After his death the money could not be found. Several of the children were cited to appear before the Probate Court recently to see if they knew of its whereabouts, but nothing was developed.

A Village in Flames.

Chicago special: A greater part of the village of Willow Springs was destroyed by fire. Fifty families are rendered homeless, and the property loss will reach $50,000, with little or no insurance. The local fire department was unable to cope with the flames, and the Mayor telegraphed to this city for assistance. An engine company was sent out on a special train, but arrived too late to be of service. There were a number of narrow escapes.

Race Record Beaten.

In a race witnessed by at least 65,000 people, Star Pointer, on the Illinois State Fair Grounds, not only maintained his reputation as a king of pacers by beating Joe Pachen, but he also lowered the world's pacing record in a race by half a second, making a mile in 2:00½, the record in a race having been 2:01, which Star Pointer made on Saturday, Sept. 18, at Indianapolis, when he defeated Patchen.

A Big Vintage.

The vintage of California promises to reach 20,000,000 gallons, or 25 per cent. more than last season. Half of the grape crop has already been converted into wine. The growers are now receiving an advance of from $5 to $10 a ton for their grapes, the understanding being that they are to receive $1 for every cent per gallon the wine brings when sold.

Cuban Leaf Tobac co.

Havana special: Captain General Weyler has published a decree declaring still in force his prohibition of the exportation of leaf tobacco produced in the Province of Havana and Pinar del Rio. In December the matter will be opened to discussion.

SPANISH CABINET QUITS.

An Unexpected Crisis Announced from Madrid.

The Spanish Cabinet has resigned. The Queen has accepted the resignations, but has asked Gen. Azcarraga to continue in office until a solution of the crisis is found. Her Majesty will summon the leaders of the various parties and Presidents of the Chambers to consult as to the situation. Senor Segasta has been telegraphed for, and it is believed the Liberal leader will be asked to form a cabinet.

It is said Senor Segasta is in favor of superceding Captain General Weyler and granting autonomy to Cuba immediately. Senor Gamazo will probably be Minister of Foreign Affairs in the new cabinet.

The news of the resignation of the Spanish Cabinet created much interest in Washington. A telegram from Madrid states that American affairs did not bring on the crisis, but that it was due entirely to internal politics, of which the excommunication of Senor Navarro Reverter, Minister of Finance in the fallen Cabinet, formed a part. This fact has been previously mentioned in the cable dispatches.

BIG MARSH FIRE.

Farmers Compelled to Fight for Their Homes in the Kankakee.

New Carlisle (Ind.) special: A disastrous fire is prevailing in the Kankakee marsh, east of this city. The flames seem to consume the very earth and are causing farmers to work day and night to save their property. Every night and morning a dense cloud of smoke rises over the city and the smell of the burning peat is very oppressive. Many tons of hay have been burned, and the farmers are now fighting for their cornfields and buildings. A large stock barn on the farm of Edward Fack caught fire, and two houses, together with a large amount of hay, grain and implements, burned. Section men on the Vandalia road are trying to save the tracks as the fire is undermining them. A large amount of property has been destroyed, and unless rain comes soon the loss will be enormous.

Woman Receives a Fortune.

Mrs. Emil Michaux, wife of a poor glass worker of Anderson, Ind., got a twenty-thousand franc draft from France a few days ago in settlement of an estate. She did not even know she was an heir to any estate and was awestricken when the draft was placed in her hands. The executors have been searching for her for some time, and just got trace of her recently.

Half a dozen persons were seriously hurt in a collision between two cars on the Toledo and Bowling Green electric road at Toledo. Miss Mary Waite, daughter of the late Chief Justice Waite, is one of the injured and may die. Mrs. T. J. Marlow, Mrs. James J. Whalen and Miss Nellie Wallen, all of Toledo, were badly shaken up.

Wrecked in a Fog.

Plymouth special: The torpedo-boat destroyers Lynx and Thrasher grounded during a fog, on Woodman's Point. The Thrasher broke in two and it is expected the Lynx will do the same. Three stokers were killed and two stokers were injured by the bursting of a steam pipe on board the Thrasher shortly after she grounded.

Work of a Dynamite Fiend.

While Rufus Betz and wife were away from their home, which is situated near Patriot, Ohio, dynamite was placed at the front door of the house and exploded, doing much damage and nearly killing Betz's five children, who were sitting in one of the rooms. There is no clew to the perpetrators of the diabolical deed.

Oleomargarine Decreasing.

The production of oleomargarine during the last fiscal year was 45,531,207 pounds, being over 5,000,000 pounds less than in 1896, and over 24,000,000 pounds since 1894. The decrease is attributed to hostile State legislation. The number of manufactories decreased from 22 in 1896 to 16 in 1897.

Boston Wins the Pennant.

WILL LAST A MONTH.

CHICAGO'S GREAT MURDER TRIAL DRAGS ALONG.

Case of Sausagemaker Luetgert Is Far from Being Ended—Shotgun Quarantine in Texas—Irrigation Congress Meets—Government Report on Crops.

End Is Not Near.

The beginning of the sixth week of the Luetgert trial in Chicago brought to the court room a large and more heterogeneous crowd than usual. Long before the court room doors were open, men, women and children surged about the main entrance of the criminal court building and made violent efforts to get in. Policemen and court bailiffs on duty at the doors had much difficulty in handling the crowds and admitting those with tickets. The State's Attorney's office was overrun by people who importuned Assistant State's Attorney McEwen for passes. State's Attorney Deneen and Assistant State's Attorney McEwen avoided the solicitations only by locking themselves in the State's Attorney's private office, where they consulted for half an hour with Police Inspector Schaack and Police Captain Schuettler.

Never before at criminal trials in Chicago, the anarchist trial not excepted, has there been more widespread interest than has been aroused by the Luetgert trial. All classes of people have been attracted, including politicians, ministers, actors, jurists and men and women of prominence in other walks of life, to say nothing about the thousands of morbidly curious people whose frantic efforts to gain admission to the court room daily inject the only comedy element in the whole ghastly affair. During the progress of the trial a United States Senator, several ministers of national reputation, visiting judges from other States and attorneys of high repute have been among the interested listeners to the evidence. State's Attorney Deneen expressed the belief that at least four weeks more would be required to complete the presentation of the case.

Luetgert came into court smoking a cigar and greeted his attorneys and his son, Arnold, pleasantly. The alleged wife murderer seemed to be in an exceptionally pleasant frame of mind and joked and laughed with his son and Wm. Charles, his business partner, until Judge Tuthill appeared upon the bench.

Mary Siemering, the servant girl, whose cross-examination was in progress Saturday when court adjourned, was called. Around this witness, according to the theory of the prosecution, the motive for the alleged murder of Mrs. Louise Luetgert centers. Luetgert's infatuation for his pretty servant girl is claimed by the prosecution to have been the instilling motive to this celebrated crime. When she went on the witness stand to again endure, as she supposed, the cross-examination of State's Attorney Deneen, Mary Siemering appeared composed and defiant. Her cheeks were flushed, which indicated apparently some mental excitement, but the young woman, it was evident, had made up her mind to control her feelings, and not permit the State's Attorney to confuse her. His cross-examination was not severe.

"Did you not say before the grand jury that Mrs. Luetgert was a good and kind mother?" asked Mr. McEwen.

"I did," confessed the witness.

"Now you say she beat her children and was cross with them?"

"When I went to the grand jury room to testify Inspector Schaack was there. He told me if I did not say what I did he would punish me," said the witness.

The photographs which were identified by witnesses from Kenosha wehe handed to the witness and she identified them. The picture which included Mrs. Luetgert and her two children was taken two years ago, the witness said. Several questions of an impeaching character were asked and Mary Siemering was excused. She left the witness stand with a smile and took a seat within the inclosure and remained to listen to other witnesses.

Jacob Melber of Wheaton, Ill., testified that on May 6 he saw a woman at the depot in Wheaton at 5 o'clock in the morning whose description resembled that of Mrs. Luetgert. She inquired the way to Elmhurst. Melber is a butcher. He said he saw Mrs. Luetgert once last March. When asked upon cross-examination to describe the missing woman he could not do so and was excused.

Charles Boehnke, who had worked for Luetgert for sixteen years, testified that on April 28 he had a brief conversation with Mrs. Luetgert. She seemed much depressed, the witness said, and remarked that "things were going bad in the house." She said, according to the witness, that she would go to the country and go to work as a servant. "We are about ruined and I will go to the country and work out. I cannot stay here," the witness said were the words of the apparently distracted woman.

"I told her that times were as hard in the country as they were in the city," said Boehnke, "and advised her not to go."

When Mrs. Augusta Koch, a neighbor of the Luetgerts, who knew Mrs. Luetgert well, was called to the witness stand, Juror William Harler was called upon to act as interpreter. Mrs. Koch said she had known Mrs. Luetgert for eleven years and had lived near her most of this time. She saw and talked with Mrs. Luetgert the last week in April. Mrs. Luetgert was depressed and talked about going away. She told the witness, according to the statement of the latter, that Luetgert had been swindled by a man who had promised to pay a big sum for an interest in the sausage factory. Luetgert had let the man have a large amount of money and the man had run away. This evidence was in support of the statement of ex-Judge Vincent at the opening of the trial to the effect that a promoter had swindled Luetgert out of $25,000 and that this was the beginning of the troubles of the sausage maker. Other witnesses testified along this line.

William Charles, Luetgert's partner, testified that the caustic soda taken to the basement of the sausage factory in March was brought there for the purpose of cleaning the establishment. Several barrels of tallow and a barrel of chipped bones were emptied into the middle vat to make soft soap, according to the witness.

The report that Bishop Maas of Covington had been appointed to succeed the late Archbishop Janssens of New Orleans is unconfirmed.

BARRIOS IS HUMBLED.

Guatemalan President Sues Morales for Peace.

A private cipher cable dispatch received in San Francisco from Guatemala, when deciphered, reads that the revolutionists have Barrios cornered and that the general has been trying to compromise with Morales. He has sent word to the insurgent leader that he is ready to sue for peace. The proper construction to put on the message is that Barrios has probably been compelled to accept terms of surrender from Morales.

The members of the Central American colony in New York are horror stricken over the news of the shooting of prominent people on Barrios' orders. They say that if Barrios is bold and cruel enough to cause the murder of so eminent a man as Aparicio he will not hesitate to carry out wholesale slaughter among the people who oppose him, and the Guatemalans in this vicinity have the greatest fear for the safety of their families and friends at home.

PRESIDENT MANUEL L. BARRIOS.

SHOTGUN QUARANTINE RULES

Great Yellow Fever Scares Rage in All Parts of Southern Texas.

The yellow fever fright has struck Texas in earnest. Nearly all of the towns in eastern, central and southern parts of the State have declared shotgun quarantine against Houston. In Brazos County, County Health Officer Tabor has given out orders to the effect that every road entering the county will be closely guarded and no passenger trains will stop in the county hereafter. There will be no papers or other mails received.

GUARDS DRIVING REFUGEES FROM FEVER STRICKEN DISTRICTS.

The Houston and Texas Central has practically abandoned its train service out of Houston, only one train a day running. The Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad is running trains through Houston to Galveston, the cars being locked through Houston and nobody permitted to enter or leave the train. Galveston's quarantine against Houston is absolute. Nothing but telegrams are permitted to pass between the two places.

The Board of Health for the State of Louisiana announces the status of affairs in New Orleans as regards yellow fever to be as follows:

"During the twenty-four hours ending Tuesday at 9 p. m., there were: Cases of yellow fever, 19; deaths, 2. Total cases of yellow fever to date, 179; total deaths from yellow fever to date, 21."

IRRIGATION CONGRESS MEETS.

Judge Best of Washington Represented the Administration.

The sixth annual national irrigation congress convened Tuesday in Lincoln, Neb. When President C. B. Booth of Los Angeles called the convention to order in University Hall, 121 delegates, representing thirteen States, responded to the call for their credentials. Gov. Holcomb delivered an address of welcome, which was followed by the president's annual address. Among those seated there were: James A. Davis, Chicago; Commander Booth-Tucker, New York; Judge Emery F. Best, Washington; F. H. Newal, Washington; Dr. Clarke Gapen, Chicago; U. C. Wright, Los Angeles, Cal.; John E. Frost, Kansas, and Senator Carey of Wyoming.

S. A. HOLCOMB.

Judge Best was there as the representative of the Federal Government to submit a plan of donating all arid lands to the various States in which they are located in return for their reclamation. This will wipe out the account of the Government with the arid lands, and it is said the Government thinks this desirable. W. J. Bryan addressed the delegates on the agricultural situation.

GOOD FOR HARVESTING.

Past Week Has Been Too Dry for Fal lowing and Seeding.

The weekly crop bulletin of the Agricultural Department says:

Except on the Atlantic coast, where rains have fallen, the week has been exceptionally dry, and upon the whole very favorable for maturing and gathering crops. Like the preceding weeks, however, it has been very unfavorable for the germination of sown grain, as well as for fallowing and seeding, which is much delayed generally throughout the central and western and in some of the Southern States.

Cotton picking has been pushed forward rapidly in all sections of the cotton belt, although interrupted somewhat in the Carolinas, eastern Georgia and Florida by heavy rains . The crop has suffered further deterioration in Arkansas and portions of Mississippi and Louisiana, and damage from rains has resulted in the Carolinas and Florida. As stated in the bulletin of the previous week, the bulk of the crop will be gathered by Oct. 15.

In Nebraska, however, a large acreage of wheat has been sown, much of which is up and doing nicely. In the Atlantic coast States the conditions have been more favorable for fall seeding and satisfactory progress has been made.

The frosts of the early part of the week proved injurious to late corn in portions of Ohio, Kentucky, Pennsylvania and New York, but farther west no serious injury is reported, and in some States cutting is nearing completion.

RECORD OF THE WEEK

INDIANA INCIDENTS TERSELY TOLD.

Muncie Saloon Men Jubilant—Killed Himself While Angry with His Father—Mad Deed of a Flatrock Man—Prisoner Moved to Escape a Mob.

Liquor Men Victorious.

For the first time since the crusade was begun on Muncie saloon men by the committee of one hundred prosecuting them for operating saloons in the residence parts of the city, the defendants are victorious. In the former trials a dozen or more were found guilty, and some driven out of business. In the trials of John P Weisse, William Webster and John Shea the Mayor found for the defendants. With these findings, over two-thirds of the score or more cases will not stand, and saloon men are jubilant.

Killed His Wife and Himself.

Wesley Nading of Flatrock shot and instantly killed his young wife and then made an unsuccessful attempt on his own life. For years he operated a general store in Flatrock and was well-to-do. Several years ago his mind became unbalanced and he was given treatment in a private sanitarium, returning home about eighteen months ago apparently fully recovered. On Tuesday he ate breakfast at the usual time and in his usual spirits went down to his office. He returned home about 8 o'clock and found his wife scrubbing the back porch. Without a word he drew a revolver and fired a bullet into her back. She sprang up screaming and started to run, when he fired again. The second bullet entered her head just back of the right ear and she fell off the porch dead. Nading then placed the muzzle of the revolver against his left breast and fired. The bullet passed entirely through his body just above the heart.

Suicided in a Rage.

Clarence Parker of New Castle, aged 20 years, committed suicide at his home in the eastern part of Henry County. The boy's father had mounted a horse belonging to his son and rode to a neighbor's. When the son came in a short time afterward he became angry because his father had taken his horse and took down his double barreled shotgun. He then went to the orchard, cursing his father as he went, and a few minutes later he emptied one load of shot into his left breast, dying instantly.

The Reformatory Crowded.

The sessions of the courts over the State are causing an influx of convicts to the reformatory at Jeffersonville, and Superintendent Hert is wondering how he is going to accommodate all the new men. The cell houses are inadequate to furnish proper sleeping apartments if the rush continues. The number will shortly reach one thousand.

Fyfe Henderson Sentenced.

Fyfe Henderson, who raised a check on J. S. Stewart & Co., St. Louis, from $12.35 to $212.35 and left for Canada, where he was captured, was found guilty by a jury at Vincennes and sentenced to the reformatory at Jeffersonville.

All Over the State.

The last crop bulletin of the season announces that the Indiana corn crop will fall below that of last year.

William McMath, Thomas Dill, John Cavitt, Jr., and George King, all of Rushville, expect to start for the Klondike in the spring.

Thieves have carried away almost all the foundation of the McBride school house at Jeffersonville, and it is in such a condition as to be unsafe.

Henry Louden, a farmer living near Melbern, committed suicide by taking poison. His body was found in the barn by his 7-year-old son. No cause is given.

Nearly 400 members of the Porter-Lake County Veterans' Association attended the fourteenth annual reunion at Valparaiso of the association, which numbers about 700 members.

Edwin F. Carter of Evansville, a young theological student, has been missing for a week. He left for Alexandria, Va., and reached Cincinnati. A telegram was received from him saying he would immediately start for Alexandria. After this all trace of him has been lost.

Prof. Harrison Staley of Sandborn made an unsuccessful attempt at suicide by swallowing morphine. Three weeks ago Prof. Staley was arrested and committed for assault with intent to kill Mrs. W. M. Wilcox. After lying in jail at Vincennes for ten days he gave bond and was released, and he returned home to arrange for the trial.

Mrs. Charles Carter of Chesterfield and "Del" Crane, a traveling man for a Michigan lumber firm, have eloped on a bicycle built for two. Years ago, before she became Mrs. Carter, they were lovers. When last seen they were pedaling over a hill ten miles north of Anderson.

The State Auditor has completed the footings of the assessment of all classes of property in Indiana this year. Many farmers in the vicinity of Hagerstown, who planted their wheat at the usual seeding time, find that there was sufficient moisture to cause the germ to sprout, but not enough to sustain the life of the plant, and in consequence the wheat will have to be planted over.

John M. Sellers, aged 76, was found dead in bed at Darlington by neighbors, who were attracted by the odor from the house. The body was swollen to twice its size. There was a red hot gas stove burning in the room. Mr. Sellers lived alone and had not been seen for several days.

A supposed case of yellow fever is reported at Mifflin, seven miles southwest of English. The patient is Edward McKinny. Dr. George R. Hazelwood, secretary of the County Health Board, refuses to admit it is yellow fever.

Sheriff Starr prevented a wholesale jail delivery at Anderson by an accidental discovery. Sixteen prisoners were in the lower corridors. They got hold of saws in some manner, sawed their way through the inner bars and had the bars of the windows severed. They were just ready to let themselves down from the high window when one of the prisoners let one of the iron bars fall on the stone flooring. It awoke Starr and the turnkey.

MENACED BY DROUGHT.

Central and Western States in Danger from Lack of Rain.

Nearly the entire central and western portions of the United States are suffering from the long-continued drought. Danger and hardship exist in many of the sections where no rain has fallen recently, and the result is great fear among the people. Had not the crops matured before the dry spell they would have been scorched and ruined. And even now fire threatens the fields and pastures on the prairies of Illinois and other Western States.

In many instances the conditions have become such that there is actually severe suffering among the population. Farmers on both sides of the Missouri river are compelled to haul water many miles. Wells have become dry and men and animals must quench their thirst. The only rain that has fallen has been insufficient to affect the parched ground or to bring water into wells which have become dry or at least low. Instead of the fall rains, which would soften the ground for plowing, there is fair weather and an unusual and dangerous dryness.

One of the greatest dangers connected with this condition throughout the country is that of fire. Not only in northern Wisconsin, covered by timber land, is there fear of destructive fires, but in Illinois and adjoining States every farmer whose acres are traversed by a railroad or are near to any railway line is constantly afraid his corn fields may be set afire by sparks from a passing locomotive. The dried-up pastures all over the prairie land are in the same danger, and the least carelessness may result in enormous destruction and even loss of life.

As for the lack of water, it is daily becoming greater, and farmers do not know what they will do with their stock when present sources of supply give out, which will not be long if there is no precipitation of moisture soon. There is no State where these conditions do not exist. Kansas, Missouri, Iowa, Wisconsin, Illinois and Indiana all are included in the belt where there is nothing but dust and the parched remains of harvest fields and pastures where animals grazed a month ago. In Illinois, Indiana and Iowa there is the worst suffering, according to the reports received from all the cities, towns and hamlets in the country districts of these three States.

In Illinois and Iowa, where so large a portion of the crop is corn and corn fields cover every county and line every railway, the most fear of prairie fires exists. It is only the absence of a strong wind which has so far prevented them, for any small spark might kindle one which could spread over a large area. The farmers have exercised the greatest care during the last two weeks to prevent small blazes spreading.

But the fire danger and the suffering from want of water in some districts is not the only result of the drought. Nearly all pasturage has been made absolutely barren. At this time, when horses and cows usually are outside before the approach of the cold weather, they must be fed on hay. They have torn up even the roots in pastures in their endeavor to get grass, and dust has taken the place of verdure.

PUBLIC DEBT IS INCREASING.

Treasury Statement Shows an Addition of Nearly $4,000,000.

The monthly treasury statement shows that at the close of business Sept. 30, 1897, the public debt, less cash in the treasury, was $1,012,122,713, an increase since Aug. 30 of $3,787,592. This increase is accounted for by a corresponding decrease in the amount of cash on hand. The debt is recapitulated as follows:

Interest-bearing debt	$847,365,540
Debt on which interest has ceased since maturity	1,334,570
Debt bearing no interest	378,615,390
Total	$1,227,315,500

This amount, however, does not include $589,070,953 in certificates and treasury notes outstanding, which are offset by an equal amount of cash in the treasury. The cash in the treasury is classified as follows:

Gold	$184,561,664
Silver	513,481,747
Paper	133,611,339
Bonds, disbursing officers' balances, etc	18,713,880
Total	$850,368,631

Against this there are demand liabilities outstanding amounting to $635,175,844, which leaves a net cash balance in the treasury of $215,192,787.

MONUMENT FOR DUBUQUE.

Memory of the Iowa Pioneer to Be Fittingly Honored.

The Early Settlers' Association and the Iowa Institute of Science and Arts have formed a joint association which will rear a monument upon the grave of Julian Dubuque. This is upon the top of a majestic bluff a mile below the city of Dubuque and overlooking the Mississippi. Dubuque's claim to honor rests on the fact that he was the first settler.

PROPOSED MONUMENT.

SHOWS A DEFICIT OF $3,435,717.

Monthly Statement of Government Receipts and Expenditures.

The monthly statement of the Government receipts and expenditures during September, 1897, shows the receipts to have been $21,933,098, and the expenditures $25,368,815, an excess of expenditures over receipts of $3,435,717. For the three months of the fiscal year the excess has been $29,015,954. As compared with September, 1896, there is a loss of $2,651,146 in the amount of the revenues, and a decrease of $1,210,720 in the expenditures. The receipts for September last are given as follows:

Customs	$7,943,100
Internal revenue	12,701,975
Miscellaneous	1,288,022

As compared with September, 1896, this is a loss of about $3,400,000 from customs and a gain of about $1,000,000 from internal revenue sources.

THE WAY WITH LOVE.

When love shall say: "This is my way,
Through lonely lands and nours,"
With sweeping eyes, 'neath ruined skies,
Pass—to the thorns or flowers
Love only leads thee to the night
That makes a morning sweet with light.

Far off the dawn appears
Resplendent in still skies;
And love shall kiss away thy tears
And silence all thy sighs.
Love only leads thee to the night
That makes a morning sweet with light!

An Answered Question.

BY DORA HASTINGS.

"We all on us told Oscar better," said Mr. Frost, speaking of his son, "but he'd only laugh and say he always liked a good deal of vinegar, and so it was, too," he continued, flicking the old horse with the end of the whip, though that self-willed animal made not the slightest response to his suggestion; "he was the greatest hand for vinegar I ever did see. Sally, that's his mother, used to say she believed that pickles was sweet to him."

It was the evening of a summer day. The wind stirred gently. The omnipresent life of summer found voice in bird notes and insect chirpings. Through a foreground of maples or elms, one caught glimpses of white farmhouses, contrasting with long red tobacco barns, that added a dash of gayer color to the sober white and green. Mr. Frost had little appreciation of the values of color; but he scanned the crops along the way, with the eye of a connoiseur, noting height and quality with the precision of long experience and intense interest.

"That's Oscar's wife's," he said, pointing to an oblong, five-acre strip of tobacco. "Looks first rate. She's a better farmer 'n he ever was. He had a good notion of carpenterin' and machinery, but he never took to the land. His seeds always come up kind o' meachin' like, and the 'tater bugs and crows regerlarly laughed at his scarecrows and pisen. One time the squash bugs eat up all his squashes, and Dorcas"—with a short laugh—"she told him he'd better plant bugs next time and see if he couldn't raise some squashes.

"She's a tartar, I tell you, a black-eyed woman with a temper that matches. We all on us told Oscar better," returning to the chief motive—"but he'd laugh and say he liked his apples a little tart. Well, he found out, I guess. There never was no peace in the house. She was one of the arguin' kind, and she was bound to have her own way from the start.

First, she tried to make a Methody of him; but Oscar's kind o' set like, if he is good-natured, and it didn't work. They argued on fallin' from grace. Oscar said it made him think of havin' a little back door to one end of the Ark, where a body could fall out, and that made her madder'n a wet hen; then 'twas close communion and the mind cure; and then they quarrelled on politics. She used to have a tantrum every election day when he went away to vote, and went over to her mother's reglar.

Once she took the key and made him come in the suller way, and several times she was took with lockjaw, not sayin' a word for a week; and a blessed relief it must ha' been to Oscar. An' then it was women's rights, and the faith cure; but Oscar stood it well enough, always laughin' an' makin' fun of the way things went, till it come to the pound of nails—wire nails she was set on, and cut nails he was bound to have.

They quarrelled about it all the morning before breakfast, and when he went away she called out spiteful—for one of the neighbors heard her—'You needn't come home, Oscar Frost, till you bring them wire nails.' That's twelve years ago, an' he ain't been seen around these parts since."

"How's Dorcas got on?"

"First-rate," said the old man with animation. "Paid the mortgage and put money by. She's got more head for farmin' than two of Oscar. That's the place," as they drew near a large old-fashioned brown house. "She's got to speakin' o' Oscar lately as if he would be home in a day or two. She's been makin' cream puffs for him for some time—'mazin' hand he is for cream puffs. She keeps a stock of 'em on hand constant. I should think she'd be pretty near over hankerin' after cream puffs herself, by this time. You'll see her," said the old man, stopping at the gate, "I've got some kerosene for her. I guess," said he, nodding to his companion, "if Oscar ever does come back, she'll be middlin' glad to see him. Dorcas! Dorcas!" he called.

The screen door opened, and a tall, spare woman came towards them. She looked very trim and neat in a new gingham, and had even attempted some floral decoration in the way of sweet peas. "It's the season makes a body feel like it," she said once, apologetically, referring to the flowers. Her large, restive eyes fell carelessly upon the occupants of the wagon; then wandered of their own will down the street. That little strip of road leading from her home to the village center was stereotyped upon her memory. Through summer and winter, morning, noon, and especially at nightfall, she had watched it till it had become one of the factors of her life. It was deserted now except for some children playing. She turned toward the wagon.

"Did you get the kerosene?" she asked in a clear, crisp way.

"Yes," said he, fumbling about among the bundles, "it's somewhere here. Oh, here it is."

"Folks well?" she asked.

"Yes. You've got Bell's boy over here."

"Yes."

"Is he contented?"

"Seems to be."

"Any news up this way?" inquired he.

"They say John Sanders is worse," said Dorcas. "They had a council of doctors there last night. It's doubtful whether he'll get over it."

"That so? I hadn't heard of that."

"Yes. I was over this morning and that's what Annie told me."

"That's bad," said the old man thoughtfully. "Well, I must be goin'," he said, taking up the reins. "It's gettin' late. Goin' to the sociable this week?"

"I don't know—perhaps so. Perhaps," hesitatingly, "we'll both go."

Mr. Frost looked at her curiously. "Perhaps," he said slowly, "I'm sure I hope you will."

"We meant her and Oscar," he explained to his companion as he drove away. "I guess," he remarked, sententiously, "she'll be tolerable pleased to see him when he comes."

Dorcas went slowly back into the house. On the threshold she turned to look after the retreating wagon. "Father's growing old," she thought, "he'll be sorry to see it when he comes."

The lines of the lower part of her face relaxed as she stood by the door, nor showed that touch of rigidity, that lack of tenderness, so characteristic of her manner and so untrue to her real nature. Her hand fell caressingly upon the flowers at her waist. She needed the flowers to brighten her up, she thought, for she had grown somber with the years, like an old engraving. It was a picture of Washington near her that made her think of the comparison.

She looked about the room with all the pride of possession; for in her eyes it was the choice spot of all the world. It was large, and a bay window added light, and broke the otherwise rigid outline. In the winter that window was a miniature conservatory, redolent of pink and heliotrope, and gorgeous with geranium and oleander. Now it served merely as a shrine for a pot of carnation, set apart by its mistress, as especially worthy of honor.

The room had been rather bare when Oscar went away, for Dorcas had come to the house with a small dowry; but now there was a pretty carpet setting forth bright leaves relieved by a background of green; a sofa covered with gay Brussels, some eminently respectable, but hardly inviting, black walnut, including a table on which were laid some of the current magazines, expressing Dorcas's pride in being in the world and of it; some willow chairs, ribbon bedecked; and near her a large, well-filled bookcase—her medicine chest she called it, as she thought of the purpose which it had served.

During the first year of her loneliness she had been angry and resentful; but in time the anger had burned out; then had come a period of waiting, when she sat for hours, listening so intently that the fall of a book or a step in the house jarred upon her like a discordant note; then had come a period of regret and self-accusing. She tried to defend herself from the charge of being quarrelsome, by thinking that her theories were not like those of others, just patterns woven into the life texture; hers were a part of its very warp and woof, and she could not help trying to set them forth and enforce them, any more than she could help the color of her hair. She became more and more sure, as time went on, that if there were ever to be any happiness in her home when Oscar came back, and she made sure that he would come back, she must somehow establish a harmony of thought.

It was for this purpose that she had bought the books. Her hand ran lightly over their edges as if they were piano keys, while she remembered what they had meant to her. She had pored early and late over those on the first shelf, that she might unlearn a creed as dear to her as her own nature. Glancing up, she noticed, across the room, a painted face just outlined in the dusk. It was a portrait of her Aunt Dorcas, a prim, sweet-faced woman, who had looked upon "trinkets of gold" and bright ribbons as "instruments of the Evil One," and had even mourned her own gift of beauty as a snare set by this same Arch-contriver to catch the soul.

Dorcas remembered for years Aunt Dorcas had never looked into a mirror, they said, lest she herself might be led away to pay some slight, and as she would have termed it, idolatrous homage to the image reflected there. Yet once, when she was an old woman, they said, she had accidentally come upon a mirror, stood staring a minute, then turned away, and was very sad, and refused to speak for a long time. She had thought, it seemed, that the whole world had grown gray except herself.

On the second shelf were the books which she had studied when she had tried to unlearn a political theory, to renounce which was like trying to move out of her own brain. In time, she had succeeded so far as to give up her strong advocacy of and passion for proselytism. In the course of time, too, she had managed to sweep her mind's sky of all cobwebs of modern fantasy, till she felt that there could be no wrangling when Oscar came home—unless he should disagree with her on a certain question of national finance.

She had formed, through various influences—perhaps the very air of the locality was infected by it—a strong opinion upon this money question. Oscar had never spoken of it, and her heart sank within her, as she fancied that he had been wandering in a region of different thought and policy. She had for months seized every opportunity to learn the opposing arguments, in hope that in case he should differ from her, she might quickly avail herself of them to "break the fall." She might need them any time now, for she daily expected him. At first she had never set times, but looked forward patiently. Now her power of waiting had been stretched to its utmost tension. She felt that she could not bear more. He must come soon now, or they would find her there some day helpless, every nerve quivering like a string when the bow is drawn across it.

"Aunt Dorcas," called a child's clear, drawling treble. It was the voice of a four-year-old nephew, a visitor of hers.

Dorcas went into the bedroom.

"Tell me a story," said he, showing a pair of dark eyes set in a halo of brown curls.

"What about?" asked Dorcas lazily.

"Oh, bears—'bout bears."

"What bears?"

"The free baby bears the man found in a tree."

"Oh, yes," said Dorcas, beginning the tale, told so many times that she fancied she could reproduce it by involuntary action of the brain. When it was done there was a minute's silence, as if the little one were assimilating the interesting points.

"Now tell 'bout 'nuther," was the cry.

Dorcas recalled herself from some remote region of thought to relate the history of the three bears who lived in a little white house in a wood. This was a delicate morsel in the story-telling bill of fare. The boy's face suffused with satisfaction.

"That's good!" he said slowly. "Now tell 'bout 'nuther."

Then Dorcas related the rather tragic adventure of the bean, straw and coal that went out "to see the world." At the close there was a call for "'nuther."

"You tell me one," said Dorcas.

The little fellow raised himself, and seemed to be stretching his mental power to cover the request.

"Yes," he said, nodding. "There was once a great big grasshopper a-sittin' on the barn floor, and a chickie,"—his voice rising to show surprise and strengthen his climax—"runned into the barn and swallered him down. That's all."

"Yes," said Dorcas, "naturally, if the grasshopper was the hero of the story. Now let's see who can keep still longest."

Silence reigned for a few moments, broken once or twice by restless, whining demands for "'nuther;" then Dorcas heard the deep breathing that signaled the youngster's departure to dreamland. She lay resting, enjoying the coolness and quiet of the evening.

Suddenly there came the sound of a step upon the porch. Dorcas rose and went to the door. It was he surely, and no other. He was older, his dark hair streaked with gray, paler, as if the red tide of blood did not rise so high as once, and thinner, with the look of one who has not been surfeited with happiness or ease.

"Well," he said, half-shamedly, "how d'ye do?"

"All right," said Dorcas, cheerfully. "You're late to-night," speaking as if he had only been gone since morning.

"Yes," he said, laying a package on the table, "I've brought the nails."

"Are—they—wire?" she faltered. Her heart suddenly misgave her. She had given up certain faiths and doctrines that had seemed inalienable parts of her mind, she had created for herself a new heaven and a new earth of theory, had put away and unlearned, denied and renounced, some beliefs that had been almost as dear to her as the faces of those she loved; but she stood helpless now before the nails. She felt that this one thing she could not bear; she could not bear to have him set his will against hers in the matter of the nails. They had never given her a minute's thought, and now, because of them, her long hard labor of study and self-repression seemed likely to come to naught.

"Come!" she cried eagerly, meaning to put off the time of evil. "You're hungry."

"Not very. I had a piece of pie down home."

"Oh, you stopped there then. But I've got some custard and cream puffs."

"Yes," he said, his eyes downcast, "they said you had."

He looked about the room in an eager, embarrassed way.

"My, but you're fixed up!" he said. "They told me all about it down home. They said," he added, laughing. "I'd better hire out to you, if you want a man."

"I've been lucky," she said. "My things grow, and I don't raise bugs mostly," laughing, yet with a touch of the old asperity.

"Come!" she said, brightly, leading him into the dining room, "I've perfected the cream puff—that's one thing I've done since you've been gone."

"It's good," he said, later. "It's got a home flavor."

Then he went on to tell about his wanderings—how he had loaded coal in a mine in Pennsylvania, and then worked at carpentering as he made his way through the West; "always goin' farther on," he said, "and bound somehow to keep agoin' till I got to San Francisco, and then I said to myself, 'it's the Pacific Ocean now or old Connecticut;' so I came home."

Dorcas sat looking listlessly out of the window. When he had finished his story, she said, like one who has been only half listening in her eagerness to hear discourse of another subject, "Oscar, are you for silver?"

"Yes!" he exclaimed; then with a sudden, miserably defiant air, pushed back his chair and waited her attack.

She rested her cheek upon her hand a minute and listened, as if the cricket's chirping held all the meaning of the world; quick, eager, dissenting thoughts came pressing against the flood gates of her speech. She set her strength against them. She clasped her hands upon the sill, and, after one or two attempts to speak, said at last with a little effort at articulation, "I presume there's something to be said on both sides."

Oscar's face expressed intense relief. "Come!" he said. "Let's go out to see the farm."

They went into the sitting room.

"There are the nails," remarked Oscar, as he noticed the strangeness of the package among the pretty table appointments.

"Yes," said Dorcas, catching up the bundle, "and you mustn't tell me what they are. I couldn't bear it if they turned out to be cut nails, and I'd rather not know at all. I'll put them away, and we'll never speak of them again. I'll forgive you the silver," with an odd little tremor in her voice; "I've learned a new religion and a new politics, and I've given up the other things you don't like; but I can't give up the nails," with a pleading strange enough to her usually quick, wilful tone. "We women have to have our own way, sometimes, you know."

"Yes," he said, laughing, holding out his hand awkwardly. "The nails will always be my secret. Come, let's go out and see the farm."

She slipped her hand in his in an embarrassed way, and they went out together.—The Housewife.

A MARRIAGE MARKET

MILWAUKEE HAS ONE AND BUSINESS IS LIVELY.

But a Collapse Is Threatened—One Preacher Has Married 2,079 Couples in Three Years—Lax Marriage Laws of Wisconsin—Prosperous Justices.

Profitable for Preachers.

The Milwaukee marriage market is in danger of a collapse. Not that there is a slump in prices or a falling off (either in supply or demand) of hymeneal material, but because the higher morality of the town has made a protest against the business of marrying eloping couples. For a number of years this trading in marriage certificates has been flourishing there and each season has seen an increase. Milwaukee has become the Gretna Green of Chicago, and the entire West is pointing the finger of shame at her. The whole blame lies with the lax marriage laws of Wisconsin and the aroused moral sentiment of the community will ere long demand a repeal of these statutes and the substitution of others more in accord with the Christian sense of propriety.

All a man needs to get married in Milwaukee is a girl. He may take his first cousin, in case he cannot find a 15-year-old woman outside his own family who will have him. He will not have to bring the parents' consent if the parents live outside the State, nor does it matter if the girl is under 15, so long as she will swear that to be her age. No license is required and the preacher is not obliged to register the ceremony with the keeper of city records until 30 days have elapsed. There is a fine of $25 upon the officiating justice or preacher if the marriage is not recorded; if the groom is willing to pay that much for secrecy no record is made. All through the law there are loopholes for scheming men and women to slip through.

Milwaukee probably has double the number of marriages of any other city in the Union, in proportion to population. While eloping couples from the neighboring town and cities of this State come to have the knot tied, most of the business comes from Chicago.

In Chicago the lawmakers evidently regard the wedded state as a dangerous one, for they make it hard to get into and easy to get out of. Divorces can be easily obtained, but there are all sorts of difficulties to overcome when you want to get married, particularly if secrecy is desired. It is necessary to procure an expensive license and the publication in the daily papers of the names of the parties mentioned in the document makes secrecy almost impossible. That is why Milwaukee is popular with elopers. The boats that come up the lake, especially on Sunday, bring scores of unmarried couples who return home as brides and grooms in the evening. Cases are known where boys and girls have got into a flirtation on the boat and when they reached shore were married, half in jest. But the tie is binding.

While all the preachers and not a few justices reap the financial benefit of these lax laws, the principal beneficiaries are Rev. Wesley A. Hunsberger, D. D., pastor of the Grand Avenue Methodist Church, and Justices of the Peace McWharter and Hayden. The location close to the boat docks is what brings them the trade. The latter have runners at the dock to advertise that they will perform the ceremony cheaply and speedily, but, while they do a good business, Dr. Hunsberger catches the cream, because there is a lingering sentiment that marriage should be a religious ceremony. Dr. Hunsberger undoubtedly holds the marriage record of the country, having united 2,079 couples during the past three years. His fees have probably averaged $4 each—a total income for the three years of $8,316 from this branch of his ministerial work. One Sunday he married eight couples and a memorandum in his own writing shows that his receipts for this service were $76.50. The preacher is not ashamed of his work. He says:

"Men who rail against me for marrying people—merely because they come in large numbers—are like the foxes who concluded the grapes were sour when they found they were beyond their reach. They become very bitter and full of acid, solely because they do not get a part of the fees. It would be vanity for me to suppose that I marry about 600 couples each year because I am handsome or popular. I attribute the unique situation to the fact that my church is the first one on the way uptown from the excursion boats. People see the church. They conclude the parsonage is close by. It is the location, nothing else, that has caused the wonderful marriage record for the Grand Avenue Church. No change should be made in the law which will increase the expense of getting married. The marriage ceremony should be made as cheap as possible. It will be better for the country and society when we return to the habit of our forefathers and encourage marriage at the earliest possible age that is legal. I would favor more publicity. I have nothing to repent or regret in my wedding record. I have been conscientious in it all."

Justice McWharter, who has tied 1,600 knots, declares that he is in the business because it is profitable and Justice Hayden, who has a score of 481 for last year, says it pays his office rent and typewriter's salary.

A Little While.

A little while a little love,
The hour yet bears for thee and me,
Who have not drawn the veil to see
If still our heaven be lit above,
Thou merely, at the day's last sigh,
Hast felt thy soul prolong the tone;
And I have heard the night-wind cry
And deemed its speech mine own.

A little while a little love,
The scattering autumn hoards for us,
Whose bower is not yet ruinous
Nor quite unleav'd our songless grove,
Only across the shaken boughs
We hear the floodtides seek the sea,
And deep in both our hearts they rouse
One wail for thee and me.

A little while a little love,
May yet be ours who have not said
The word to make our eyes afraid
To know that each is thinking of,
Nor yet the end; be our lips dumb
In smiles a little season yet,
I'll tell thee, when the end is come,
How we may best forget.

THURSDAY.... October 7, 1897

A BOLD ATTEMPT

Made By the Prisoners to Break Jail and Escape.

There are now seventeen prisoners confined in the county jail, among whom are four women. Monday afternoon it was discovered that they had made a bold attempt to break jail. It appears that since last Wednesday, it has been known to the officers, that some of the prisoners were at work sawing the bars to get out, and why the tools were not taken away from them is a mistery that no one else can explain. It also appears, however, that officers watched the fellows about every night, though for what purpose we are not able to say. For it would appear to any ordinary mind, that if prisoners were allowed to keep files and saws, they ought to be allowed to use them. However, mean as it would seem to be, the prisoners were watched and finally some one suggested the thing should be stopped. So yesterday an investigation was made, and late in the afternoon it was discovered that the prisoners had worked their way out into the corridor and were now working at the outside bars. In one of the windows at the north-east corner it was found that one of the bars had been sawed half way through. The jail was searched from top to bottom, going over one bar at a time carefully. A search was then made for the tools with which the work was done, and the disclosures were startling. In the stove on the second floor a file and chisel were found in the ashes. Two saws, one made from a case-knife, and the other from a corset steel, were found in a water spout running through the cells, and another under a radiator. A revolver and two razors were found on the persons of two of the prisoners. From the appearance of the corset steel it appears that some one or more of the four women confined in the jail were in the scheme for a wholesale delivery. Three men arrested at Garrett a short time ago for stealing Getcell's goods out of a car, are among the leaders of the plot. Some of the prisoners are desperate characters, and had they not been discovered would have been at liberty in a couple of nights. Russ Guilford examined the bars and thinks that they could have succeeded in completing the work in about two nights. While the sawing of the bars was going on the other prisoners would sing to drown the noise.

Now, an anxious public would like to know why prisoners are locked up in jail without being searched. This revolvor must have been in some tramps pocket when he was put in there. If not in his pocket then, the next question is, how did he get it? How came all these files, chisels and saws in that jail? Why were these tools not taken away from the prisoners when it was first found they were sawing out? Why were they allowed to go on and on and work night after night? The columns of this paper are open for an explanation.

TRIED THEM ALL.

The List Exhausted, a Specific for the Nerves at Last is Found in

Dr. WHEELER'S NERVE VITALIZER

We are apt to condemn all articles because similar ones prove worthless. Persons often reason; I have nervous prostration, St. Vitus' dance, spasms, rheumatism, can't sleep and am in a debilitating condition; have tried best physicians and most widely advertised remedies, but there is no cure for my case. No matter what your past experience may have been Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer will positively cure every case of nervous trouble—no failures. Here is expert evidence of that fact, Mr. J. H. Hutchings, Bancroft, Mich., for 20 years a successful druggist, tried every preparation he could hear of without benefit. Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer cured him. The following are his words, read them:

"I had a spinal trouble for years causing serious nervousness, sleeplessness and headache. Our night watchman can tell you how, many and many a night I have walked the streets for hours, hoping to tire myself to a condition of sleep. During these years I have tried nearly every remedy coming to my notice, with only a stupefying effect like morphine. The use of Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer was an exception, its beneficial effects were prompt and lasting; I secured refreshing sleep, my nerves were strengthened and through them my health was restored. From observation and experience I believe Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer to be the best remedy for all nerve troubles, including general debility." Mr. Hutchings is certainly a competent judge and his testimony is significant.

COURT.

Monday's Daily.

Work began in Judge Roby's school of expression this morning bright and early and the judge made things hustle in good style. Charlie Crew is head usher in the school and Rob McDougall is in charge of the examinations, assisted by six good men; often called the grand jury. Multitude of probate cases have been called up and reports made to his honor, or "passed" if no report could be made. If work goes on like this, there will not be enough to last the seven weeks of the term. The grand jury are all here, and we suppose went to work this afternoon. We trust they will soon dispose of a lot of people in jail, who are boarding at public expense. Some are in for plain drunks, some for drunks with frills and some for various other fractures of the law. All are entitled to a respectful hearing and a proper punishment.

JUDGE ROBY TO THE JURY.

Especial Attention Called to the Publishing of Reports.

Gentlemen of the Grand Jury:

In accordance with the statute the court instructs you that it is your duty to proceed as follows:

1st. To examine into the case of any person confined in the county jail, and not indicted.

2nd. To examine into the case of any person under bail and not indicted, if any such there be, in order that such persons may speadily receive the impartial trial guaranteed to every citizen by the constitution.

3rd. To enquire into willfull and corrupt misconduct in office of public officers of every description in the county and into any charges of extortion in office made against any of them.

"The grand jury is the channel of communication between those who make and administer the laws and those for whom the laws are made and administered. All operations of the government and its ministers and officers are within the compass of their view and research.

They may suggest public improvements and modes of removing public inconveniences. They may expose to public inspection or public punishment, public bad measures and public bad men."

That which at common law the grand jury might do they are by our statute bound to do.

In a pure democracy every citizen would personally participate in all affairs of government. Such a system is not feasible in large and populou communities. Free government under such conditions must be, as ours is representative in character. The people create all wealth and are the holders of ultimate power. Officers are agents for them and nothing more.

It is historical that corruption in office begins in a small way. Small abuses unchecked expand and increase. When moral restraint is thus taken away small methods become too slow and flood gates are opened. Then it is that public funds instead of being held sacred to public are squandered in debauchery and dissipation.

This has been the experience of DeKalb county. Small abuses were allowed to pass unnoticed. It may have seemed to the public that there was no way to reach them. From bad to worse affair went on. At last there came a day when our distinguished fellow citizen, Judge William L. Penfield, set his resolute face against it all. It was well for the people of DeKalb county that he did, and that he could.

The humilation, which followed the startling disclosures of public coruption gives place to satisfaction and pride in the fact that public integrity is supreme and that fraud and crime need only to be pointed out to be rebuked. It will be our fault if the administration of affairs in this county is not from this time on the very best.

It is not my purpose to review the events of the past year. Yesterday is gone. Its evil nor its good return again. Its lesson can alone abide. That lesson is, that the people must be watchful and jealous. The wise president said "Eternal vigilence is the price of liberty."

Since Judge Penfield's accession to the bench, every allowence made in this court is spread upon the records, and published in the newspapers. That policy will be continued and no allowance will be made to any man that needs apology. The law requires that allowances made by the board of commissioners shall be puslished and recorded. The law requires that township trustees publish itemized reports of their expenditures. Other safe guards have been provided by the last legislature, and secrecy and concealment, the first requisites of fraud, have been made difficult.

These provisions must be regarded. But over and above them all it must be understood that the people, through grand jurors chosen from their ranks, have a watchful eye upon it all. That any citizen who has reason to suspect false charges, or other depredation, may without expense, guarded by the inviolability which surrounds the proceedings of the grand jury, set on foot inquiries powerful to disclose and punish. Services rendered for the county should be paid for fairly and fully but who takes more than that must take it at his peril.

It is not necessary that you wait until some man can be sent to states prison before acting. Prevention is better than punishment. Reports made by you will always receive attention from the court and from the people.

It is your duty to obey the mandate of the statute quoted to you. It may not at this time be necessary to make extended investigation, but I point out your duty that you may know it and that it may be generally known.

4. You will inquire into and report the condition of the poor house and jail.

5. Into violations of the law generally.

The responsibility of your acts must rest upon yourselves. You do not represent the court, you do not represent the prosecutor, but you do represent the government and the people. No person will attempt to control your proceedings or sway your action. If such a thing should be attempted you should resist it.

The prosecuting attorney has nothing to do with the return of indictments except to write and sign them at your direction. He must not be present when you vote upon any indictment nor must he know how you vote upon them. It is your sound judgment which should determine whether the public good requires the return of an indictment. If it does you will make presentment. If not you will ignore. Sometimes it is wiser to ignore small offences. Some matters which may properly be punished in a justice court are beneath the dignity of the circuit court, and you should waste no time with them.

Shape your actions from the beginning to do justice and to inspire respect for the law and its administration, thereby repressing crime and discouraging outbreaks of public passion such as recently disgraced our state.

Your proceedings will be secret throughout. Under the cover of that secrecy the weakest and most fearful may invoke the law with confidence and without fear. Should it be brought to the knowledge of the court that grand jury secrets are discussed upon the streets or otherwise prompt and vigorous steps will be taken to punish the contempt.

I hand you a list of the various sections of the statute which bear upon your duties. You can consult them at your convenience.

I suggest that you so arrange as to send subpœnas to the same part of the county so far as possible at the same time and by the same officer, otherwise much extra work and expense is made.

Endeavor to keep witnesses in attendance so that so long as you have work to do you can do it and when done adjourn. While witnesses are being examined avoid digressions and get at the facts directly. Method and order are of the same value to a grand jury that they are to a court.

I appoint Mr. McClellan Foreman. You will select one of your number as clerk to take notes of the testimony delivered before you.

You will retire with the baliff.

FRANK S. ROBY, Judge.

State of Indiana, DeKalb County, S. S.

To the board of Commissioners of DeKalb County.

While I do not acknowledge the validity of the provisions contained in section 7937 R. S. 1894, it gives me pleasure to state to your honorable board that the books kept by the county clerk are well and accurately kept. His cash account is ballanced every day while the order books are legibly written and well indexed.

HIS TURN TO LAUGH.

(Avilla News.)

Just south of Nappanee is a once despised tract of tamarack swamp lands. When W. T. Graham came there and announced his intentions to reclaim the land, he was the butt of many a joke. Graham is now doing the laughing, however, and while his neighbors' farms are drought parched and their crops damaged he has been calling his farm the Klondyke because he gets so much from the dirt. He has twenty-five acres of onions, thirty-five acres of potatoes, five acres of cabbage, one and a half acres of parsnips, an acre of rutabagas, twenty-eight acres of corn, with experimental tracts of broom corn celery, sugar beets, etc. He is receiving the highest prices for everything he raises. Another thing that Mr. Graham has successfully done is that of clovering muck land. He employs a good sized force and will make money on this year's crop.

PAUPER CRIMINALS.

Judge Roby is Going to Reduce Expenses to a Business Basis.

We heartily agree with Judge Roby that a saving in both time and money, can be made in trials of pauper criminals. It has been the custom often times to let the pauper criminal choose his attorney, and then the attorney sometimes wanted a price higher than the court felt justified in allowing. And it has also happened that men who could get money if they tried, would still claim they could not, and then ask the county to pay an attorney for them.

We have taken some pains to get Judge Roby's plan, which is embodied in the following statement:

With the co-operation of the commissioners of Steuben County, I have fixed the cost of attorneys to defendant pauper criminals in that county at $50.00 per year. The amount of work here is considerable more and I think $75.00 is as low for this county as $50.00 for that.

At the commencement of a term of court applications are likely to be made and before persons are arraigned I think, what ever arrangement is made in this county should be made.

I have concluded to assume the responsibility, and during the next year all pauper criminals will be assigned to Mr. Welsheimer, who will defend them for $75.00, to be paid in such installments as may proper and desired. An order book entry will be made to this effect showing also Mr. Welsheimer's acceptance of the employment.

This step is taken primarilaly in the interest of economy but incidentally it is in the interest of the bar. We can not afford to be put in a false light in regard to this matter. The members of the bar are not dependent upon such services. The new arrangement will not be found inimical to them.

At this time I deem it proper to call the attention of the attorney selected to do this work, and that of the bar generally to the measure of a lawyer's duty in the defense of criminals.

Courts are instituted to administer justice. Lawyers are officers of court. Lord Broughman declared that in the discharge of his duty the advocat knew but one person. "His client and none other." That no consideration except the protection of his client could by him be considered.

The doctrine thus expressed is not sound. James T. Brady one of the very first of American criminal lawyers said in reference to it,

"I have never entertained the idea that it proceeded, in the view of refined society, or in the view of any instructed conscience, further than this: That an advocate may fairly present, honorably, whatever any man who is accused, would have a right, in truth, to say for himself, and no more."

Every lawyer, must in the nature of things largely decide for himself where to stop in the defense of a guilty criminal.

The re-action from the sanguinary methods of early English law has caused us in this country to go to such lengths, that those not of the profession have charged us with seeking to protect crime instead of seeking to punish and restrain it.

It is fortunate for humanity that our excesses have been made upon the side of mercy. But the limit has been reached.

No man must be punished unjustly. No guilty man should be unduly punished. Reformation is the object of our criminal law, as stated in the constitution, but while these things are true it is also true that the public pays no money to defeat or to aid in defeating justice.

Persons who ask this court to appoint an attorney to defend them, must be prepared to receive such defense as the facts justify. He who fears the truth must find some other help to it.

CALL FOR COUNTY ORDERS.

All outstanding county orders issued prior to April 8, 1896 and number 1700, Series O, will be paid if presented to the county treasurer. Interest will stop Oct. 7, 1997.

DIVORCE CASES.

Judge Roby has decided to have divorce cases called up and disposed of on Friday, so as to assist in making court work move on smoothly. We believe this plan a good one. We have often seen a divorce case called up right while a different case was being tried. A witness would have to stop or the attorney would have to wait till the divorce matter thus sandwiched in could be hastily disposed of, and then the raveled threads of the originial case would be picked up again and work once more proceed. The cases now set for this Friday, are as follows:

DIVORCE DAY, OCT. 8th.

4818	Earl vs Earl
5105	Sutley vs Sutley
5170	Sanders vs Sanders
5178	Harger vs Harger
5190	Wood vs Wood
5183	Barnes vs Barnes

WILL INVESTIGATE.

The North Manchester Leader came to this office this week, with big headlines and its cannon loaded for bear. It is leading out for an investigation of the records of Wabash county, by an expert. Since the trouble in DeKalb county set people to looking into these matters, several other counties have asked for an investigation. Steuben county had Mr. Ernst go through the books at Angola, and while he did not find things as they were here, yet there had been bad work of various kinds, including several thousand dollars of orders that were not authorized, and some other crookedness. Now, Wabash county is a much wealthier county than Steuben, and much more populous. It will be natural to suppose a good deal of crookedness could be concealed in such a county. An investigation by an expert will be an investment that will pay the taxpayers over there.

HOW TO FIND OUT.

Fill a bottle or common glass with urine and let it stand twenty-four hours a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys. When urine stains linen it is evidence of kidney trouble. To frequent desire to urinate or pain in the back, is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

WHAT TO DO.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy fulfills every wish in relieving pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passages. It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to get up many times during the night to urinate. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists, price fifty cents and one dollar. You may have a sample bottle and pamplet both sent free by mail Mention THE AUBURN COURIER, and send your address to Dr Kilmer & Co, Binghamton, N. Y. THE NEW WAY.

WOMEN used to think "female diseases" could only be treated after "local examinations" by physicians. Dread of such treatment kept thousands of modest women silent about their suffering. The introduction of Wine of Cardui has now demonstrated that nine-tenths of all the cases of menstrual disorders do not require a physician's attention at all. The simple, pure taken in the privacy of a woman's own home insures quick relief and speedy cure. Women need not hesitate now. Wine of Cardui requires no humiliating examinations for its adoption. It cures any disease that comes under the head of "female troubles"—disordered menses, falling of the womb, "whites," change of life. It makes women beautiful by making them well. It keeps them young by keeping them healthy. $1.00 at the drug store.

For advice in cases requiring special directions, address, giving symptoms, the "Ladies' Advisory Department," The Chattanooga Medicine Co., Chattanooga, Tenn.

W. I. ADDISON, M.D., Cary, Miss., says: "I use Wine of Cardui extensively in my practice and find it a most excellent preparation for female troubles."

—There is some complaint on the part of our business men because no special trains were run during the Carnival. Some think that the officers did not try to secure these trains. We wish to state right here that the management did all in their power to secure these trains but as the Railroad Companies were not familiar with the nature of our entertainment they would not grant the request. Next year there will be no trouble in securing these trains as all over the country people are talking of the success of the Carnival. One of our business men who was at Chicago Sunday was riding down one of the streets on the car, and the general conversation of a lot of traveling men was about the "Carnival at Auburn." One stated that he would not have missed it for $50. That's the way we want people to talk about Auburn —The Brown county fair must be a daisy. The Bluffton News graphically describes it as follows: "Brown county the only county in the state of Indiana without a railroad in its borders, holds an annual fair that is a peach. There are also more hills in Brown county than in any other of the ninety-two counties, and the half mile track winds round a hill so that the horses can be seen only part of the time. —Mr. and Mrs. Merica go to Chicago this week and will make their home in that city. But we hope not permanently. They go to remain there for a time, however, to make a home for their daughter, Estella and to be with her while she continues her study of the violin. This arrangement will be for them and her mutually pleasant. We are sorry to lose Mr. and Mrs. Merica even for an indefinite time. as no more desirable citizens have filled a place in Auburn's social, educational and church circles. They will be greatly missed in all these. The im press Mr. Merica has made on the educational interests of the county will remain as a permanent monument of fourteen years of hard labor and unceasing study. Our earnest good wishes go out to them in their new home. The residence will remain his and will be ready to welcome them back should they ever find it advisable to return.

—Mr Editor:—Sir I cannot agree with your correspondent, concerning Mr. Bush's yield of onions from a strip of ground 125x12 ft. He says the yield would be 735 bu. A strip 125x12 is 1500 sq. ft. 1 acre contains 43560 sq. ft. By proportion the terms are stated thus:—1500:43560::25:726 bu. H. A. W. (The above statement is correct. There was a wrong figure in the item referred to. It should have read 725. Ed.)

—The manager of this paper notes with pleasure what the Dispatch says of him. We had supposed its editor had forgotten most of his famous Coxey ideas, but we remember now that he is the "Wandering Iler." A man who has been a member of two different armies, and now poses as an editor, should not be forgotten. We should ever remember Iler for supplying a long-felt want. We never did know what our initial C. stood for, but now he has supplied the missing letters and calls us Cornwallis. He should have called us Coxey. We then would have promoted him to first lieutenant. But now he will remain the Wandering Iler.

—The package of COURIERS for Fairfield Center, was also lost, by getting under the cars last week, when the Cornnna package was destroyed. We do not know how the accident happened, but suppose the mail clerk on the train was careless and allowed the mail sack to drop off, instead of throwing it clear of the car. Fairfield package is also a pretty large one, and we greatly regret so many of our patrons up there missed their papers.

—Attorney Will Leas, of Waterloo, was in court today.

—The Bishop & Lackey clerks have been kept busy explaining a little error in their ad in the COURIER. A figure 5 had fallen out of the price list, making it appear that they were selling their 25-cent goods at 2 cents. It was awkward at first, but the people soon saw that the goods were remarkably cheap, even at 25 cents, and so, they readily accepted the explanation.

Stoner and a sister to Mrs. Jerry Bolender, and Mrs. Wes Bachtel of Grant township, and Mrs. Darius Segner at Somerdale, Ohio. Mr. James is an employe of the Great Western road at his place, and represents business as very fair with them. But the farmers are suffering from dry weather a good deal.

—A west bound heavily loaded Wabash freight got stuck pulling in on the siding this morning for the 7:27 passenger. Before the big train could be moved, it was necessary to have the passenger engine come up to the rear and push.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

PURELY VEGETABLE.

The cheapest, purest and best family medicine in the world! An effectual specific for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen. Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nauses, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

MINISTERS ARRIVING.

Auburn is to be honored this week by the presence of the ministers and their wives of the Fort Wayne District Lyceum. They meet here, in the M. E. church in their Eighth Annual meeting. The first service is tonight at 7 o'clock, to which all are invited, when devotional services will be conducted by Rev. R. D. Spellman. At 7:30 will be the opening sermon by Rev. C. C. Cissell, after which the sacramental services will be conducted by Presiding Elder Simpson. There are over thirty ministers in the district, some of whom have arrived on nearly every train entering the city today. They will be entertained in the various methodist homes in our city, and we hope that they may be so impressed with our town and people, that they may go away with only words of praise for our beautiful city and a kindly feeling towards her people.

A sexagenarian of Baltimore, after dreaming three times of a particular private Klondike under a tree on the place where he was born, made a contract with the owner of the property to divide findings half and half, and then with his son and a friend began digging on the spot. At last accounts the son had become disgusted and quit, but the dreamer was still, with his friend, in quest of the gold mine.

A curious drawing by Thackeray, made some thirty-five years since, has been sold in London. It was executed for Lady Knighton. It appears that the great novelist owed her a shilling for some trifling bet, and he paid her with the drawing. The picture consists of portraits of Queen Victoria, Prince Albert and the rest of the royal family taking a walk at Windsor. All the heads are made of old red postage stamps, carefully cut out and stuck on the paper. The variety of portraiture is cleverly achieved by small dashes and dots most cleverly introduced on each stamp, and a description of the procession is added in the artist's minute and clear writing. The unique little picture realized over $150.

A NEW VOICE IN THE HOUSE.

Pleasantly at Variance with the Old Established Customs.

What household is there in which a domestic comedy like the following is not sometimes enacted?

Susan, the daughter of the house, brings her friend Eva home on a visit. She does it with slight misgivings, for Eva is very unlike herself; has been brought up in a different school of habits and manners, and she fears will not be wholly approved by her parents, her sisters, or even by "the boys."

To her amazement the stranger takes the house by storm. Her gay laugh and bright eyes conquer everybody. Sue's brothers follow her from room to room, pouring out stories of foot-ball and school; her sister becomes her intimate friend in the first half-hour; her father says, smiling, when she goes out, "It is so pleasant to see a bright, cheerful face about the house;" and even her mother drops her darning to listen to Eva's merry chatter. That hurts Sue most of all.

"It is silly chatter," she thinks bitterly. "When I talk even of important things, nobody seems to have the time to listen. I work day in and day out the year round to make home pleasant. What has Eva done for them? Yet they neglect me to crowd about her with delighted eyes!"

The little comedy has a note of tragedy in it. It is apt to become all tragedy when Sue happens to be, not a sister and daughter, but a wife and mother.

And yet the family, watching the stranger with delight, are not disloyal to Sue's solid merits and love. It is the novelty that has pleased them. Solid virtues will tire the best man or woman if they always wear the same face. If one has listened to organ notes all day, the tang of a jew's-harp will sometimes seem a welcome change.

He Moved On.

The Chicago Times-Herald quotes a Colonel Richardson as telling a war story which all readers will be glad to believe true.

There was an odd fellow, a Pennsylvanian, on our floor in Libby Prison. He was tall, angular, stoop-shouldered, and had somehow acquired the regular North Carolina dialect. Nearly everybody liked him, and all talked with him. He had been a prisoner some time; his suit of blue had become a bunch of rags. By some means he managed to get a new suit of butter-nut colored clothes, and after that we called him "Old North Carolina." One of the prisoners asked him when he was going to join his "tar-heel" regiment.

"You just wait and watch."

In those days it was a common thing for citizens to accompany Major Turner, who had charge of the prison, on visits to the prisoners. One afternoon half a dozen citizens of Richmond were with him, and when they marched out our old "tar-heel" soldier fell in and went with them. He was standing by the door in Major Turner's room when that officer, noticing him, asked: "Well, sir; what do you want here?"

"Oh, nothin' in particular; jest thought I'd look around the prison a little."

"Well, you can't look around the prison a little, and you had better move on."

But Cupps—that was his name—stood there looking as innocent as a boy on his first visit to town. Then Turner lost his patience, and said: "Come, move on! Get out of here!" and gave him a push into the street.

As Cupps passed out into the road where we could see him from our windows he took off his hat, made a low bow and started on a gentle shamble out of town. He made his escape. After that there was a great demand for butternut suits, but no more could be smuggled into the prison.

"I Acknowledge the Corn."

A number of explanations have been made of the well-known expression, "I acknowledge the corn," but most of them lack plausibility to such an extent that they are evidently manufactured to meet an emergency. One of the most likely is given by Walsh, who says the expression originated in the following incident: In 1828 Andrew Stewart, a member of Congress, said in a speech that Ohio, Kentucky and Indiana sent their haystacks, cornfields and fodder to New York and Philadelphia for sale. Wickliffe, of Kentucky, called him to order, declaring that those States did not send haystacks or cornfields to New York for sale. "Well, what do you send?" asked Stewart. "Why, horses, mules, cattle and hogs." "Well, what makes your horses, mules, cattle and hogs? You feed $100 worth of hay to a horse. You just animate and get upon the top of your haystacks and ride off to market. How is it with your cattle? You make one of them carry $50 worth of hay and grass to the Eastern market. How much corn does it take at 33 cents a bushel to fatten a hog?" "Why, thirty bushels." "Then you put that thirty bushels into the shape of a hog and make it walk off to the Eastern market." Then Mr. Wickliffe jumped up and said: "Mr. Speaker, I acknowledge the corn."

Politics of the Day

TRUE DEMOCRACY.

William J. Bryan, in a recent address, gave the watchword for the Democratic party when he said: "Keep the enemy in front."

In politics, as in war, it is the part of good generalship to avoid being flanked. An attack both in the front and in the rear means disaster. The Democratic party in 1896 pledged itself to the promotion and defense of bimetallism, and proved the sincerity of its convictions by casting 6,500,000 votes for William J. Bryan, the representative of the great principle to which the party had given its adherence.

An exceedingly small minority dissented from the views expressed in the National Democratic platform, and, bolting the party, set up a propaganda of its own and gave its unqualified adherence to the dogma of gold monometallism. Thus the issues were made as diametrically opposed to each other as are the poles, and the vote in the November election gave ample testimony as to which was the stronger and more orthodox in the true doctrines of Democracy.

Many of those who joined the smaller faction, ambitious of recovering lost ground and of accomplishing by indirection what could not be secured in an open trial of strength, are now endeavoring to obtain recognition as members of the true Democracy. If these men come back into the party confessing their error of judgment and asking a place in the ranks to prove their renewed loyalty, it would perhaps be the part of magnanimity to accept their pledges and their services. But such is not their attitude. They desire to assume leadership, to direct council, to mold policy, and to reap where they have not sown.

There is an unwise inclination manifested by the true Democracy to meet these overtures in a spirit of concession. This is weakness or worse. The result can be nothing but evil. To put men in positions of trust and of authority who have not earned such promotion by unswerving loyalty is to discourage the workers who have deserved recognition, and to inject an element dangerous to the preservation of a unanimous, compact and harmonious organization. Let the Democracy of the nation remember well, ponder deeply and practice continually the course of action contained in the significant words of William J. Bryan: "Keep the enemy in front."

High Prices and Prosperity.

The high price of wheat which has produced all of the prosperity which now exists in this country has been a great cause of rejoicing to the Republicans.

The subsidized press has exhausted all of its energies in endeavors to prove that Republican legislation had something to do with the matter, but all these efforts have been in vain. The people of the United States are not fools and they know that the famine in India and the short wheat crops abroad were not caused by the passage of the Dingley bill, and the enactment of that bill is all the legislation that has been accomplished by the Republican party.

In discussing this matter William J. Bryan recently said: "The first hopeful thing that came to aid Republican imagination since the election was the discovery of gold in Klondike, and the second was the rise in the price of wheat. The Republicans, however, had no right to rejoice over the discovery of the new gold mines, because this would tend to increase the volume of the money, and that was opposed by the Republican platform.

"As to the rise in wheat, it came from famine abroad and, in fact, did not benefit the man who had no wheat to sell. He did not find that his wages had been raised any, but it cost him more to buy his flour. Then, too, if the rise in wheat is a good thing for the farmers, it was just what the Democrats claimed last fall when they said it was higher priced commodities the people wanted and not higher priced money. They wanted prices advanced by taking from gold that purchasing power which had been added by fraud rather than advanced by famine and suffering."

There is no reply to be made to this statement of fact. All the sophistry of Republican editors cannot affect a matter of plain fact. The position taken by the bimetallists last year is strengthened by the providential occurrences which have resulted in the discovery of gold and the rise in the price of wheat.

Summing Up the Protection Idea.

To aid in the concentration of wealth is obviously the function of protection. By enabling a small part of the population to exact heavy tribute from the masses the protectionists are working to facilitate concentration and the noble work of capital. The mulcted are invited not to complain, nor to attempt to stop this grand movement which so highly benefits the world by making the rich richer and the poor poorer. Instead, let the poor save up their pennies and become great capitalists themselves. This is the whole matter in a nutshell.—Kansas City Times.

Logic of the Coffin Pardon.

President McKinley should play no favorites. Having pardoned Francis Coffin, he should now open the prison doors to old man Haughey, who has served several years of a heavy sentence, and who is much less culpable than Coffin, the recipient of Presidential favor. Of course Haughey deserves all he got, but if sentimentalism is to outweigh justice there is no particular reason why Haughey alone should be compelled to complete his sentence.—Lafayette, Ind., Journal.

Breaches of Domestic Comity.

It is well understood that it is a breach of comity for a government to send an obnoxious representative to a friendly nation. If the government would not send an unpopular minister or consul to a South American country how can it justify its action in appointing to office in a Southern State persons who, on account of their race and other objections, are distasteful and repugnant to the great body of the respectable taxpayers of that State? Mr. McKinley would not send an objectionable person to Spain or to any other foreign country, but he does not respect the wishes and prejudices of Georgia, Alabama and Louisiana. How does he justify this difference?—Birmingham (Ala.) Age-Herald.

Silver in Iowa and Ohio.

The enthusiasm which prevails among the Democrats in Iowa and the apathy which characterizes the Democrats of Ohio suggest an inquiry as to the reason behind these conditions.

A glance at the facts will make the matter clear. In Iowa the campaign is conducted on national issues, and the silver question is brought boldly and aggressively to the front. William J. Bryan is received everywhere in the State by enormous crowds of people, and his eloquent presentation of national issues creates the wildest enthusiasm.

In Ohio there is little Democratic zeal. The campaign is jogging along in a humdrum, drowsy fashion. Mark Hanna has opened his barrel and it looks as thought the king of the trusts would win a victory through the indolence of his opponents. The silver cause is not made paramount by the Democrats, and the people are not aroused by the discussion of local issues.

It is not good generalship to ignore the fact that the money question is the one subject which is recognized as vital by the people. It is the one thing in which they are interested above all other things. To ignore this question is to court defeat. There should be no compromising on this issue. There can be no compromise.

The Republicans demand a gold monometallic currency, and are straining every nerve to secure control of Congress in order that they may establish an irrevocable rule of gold. It is to be hoped taat the Democrats of Ohio will take a hint from the campaign in Iowa and make their fight on the money question. By so doing they can arouse an enthusiasm among the people that will be the precursor of victory.—Chicago Dispatch.

Too Many Idle Tax-Eaters.

From the justice's precinct up to the central government at Washington the whole field of public service is overrun with feeders at the public crib. The people of the United States are paying men to do nothing; supporting them while they concoct new custom indorsed designs against the public treasury. The vast army of tax absorbers is delightfully honest in getting the greatest pay for the least work. They do their cheerful pillaging under the sanction of the government, and their gains are made honorable, so far as they are concerned, by the evidence of legitimacy.—Dallas (Tex.) News.

Real or Sham Trial—Which.

We hear much of the necessity of preserving the supremacy of the law. Will a trial of Sheriff Martin and his deputies in Pennsylvania demonstrate the supremacy of the law? It is charged that the firing near Latimer upon the crowd of wholly unarmed and unresisting miners continued for ten or fifteen minutes. If this is the truth, and it is so stated by Schoolmaster Guscott, who saw the whole affair, the sheriff and his deputies in a most heinous way broke the law they were sworn to defend. Will the law be vindicated in Pennsylvania or will we see only a sham trial?—Des Moines Leader.

Protectionism and Anarchy.

If any State could be especially pointed to by the Republicans as showing the best results of protection it would logically be Pennsylvania. But such is not the case. Where the tariff has the greatest chance to perform its alleged customary service of keeping up wages we find the workingmen fighting most often and least successfully to avoid starvation wages. It is a fine commentary on Republicanism that its stronghold is the only place in the American union where the workingmen's lives are at the mercy of their plutocratic employers.—Kansas City Times.

Sample of Official Republicanism.

Iowa's Attorney General has been hauled up for traveling on railroad passes, which is against the law, and then charging up to the State 5 cents per mile mileage. All he says is that it is nobody's business whether he travels on passes or not, and that as the State allows him 5 cents per mile mileage he proposes to collect it. There is official republicanism for you in the rough.—Wheeling (W. Va.) Register.

Using the Wrong Preposition.

The American Economist says that under protection men do not wait long to compete with and break down a trust. Break into a trust, it means. Occasionally a combination of capitalists makes an attack on a trust when prices are exorbitant, but the usual result, if the combination is strong enough, is an admission to the ground floor.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Negroes Not Getting Their Share.

It strikes the negroes in Ohio and other States where their votes are often necessary to Republican success as very strange that they are almost invariably forgotten in the distribution of Republican spoils, while fat offices are given numerously to negroes in the South, where the negro vote is never worth anything.—Atlanta Journal.

Campaigner Hanna's Main Reliance.

The National Republican League has offered its services to Senator Hanna in his campaign for re-election. The League may be of some little assistance, but the astute Ohio manager relies upon the "almighty dollar" as the agency that will carry him through if anything can.—Manchester, N. H., Union.

The negro played as a pawn in politics, and sacrificing the lives of negroes for political effect is nothing new in the history of the Republican party. Those who attempted to assassinate this negro are equally as respectable as those who are responsible for placing him in such a position.—Louisville Dispatch.

After all, Senator Elkins is not going to be allowed to enjoy unchallenged the doubtful distinction of putting section 22 into the Dingley tariff law. Representative Codding of Pennsylvania sets up the claim that he performed that work, though he has not asserted that he is proud of it.—Kansas City Star.

One hundred and forty million dollars a year for pensions means about $400,000 a day, or $50,000 an hour for the eight-hour working day. This is quite a lot of money, but is only $10 a year for every family in the United States, and just think what an effect it has in keeping the Republican party solid.—Louisville Post.

The way is now clear for the President to lift up another of the infamous New Orleans trio and set him in a high place beside the degraded Demas, and let the people again see how courageous their President is in keeping a corrupt bargain even though outraged public decency stands in the way.—New York World.

American-made shoes are now selling in every European country at a lower price than shoes of equal grade made there. What need is there of "protecting" the shoe industry under such circumstances? It is difficult to comprehend how an entirely honest man can advocate a high protective tariff on such of our products of industry as now sell abroad in free competition with the products of foreign countries.—Columbus (Ohio) Press.

Wrecked on Fort Fisher.

Technical training in any profession is a good and necessary thing, but it must be supplemented by careful and constant practice in order to eliminate the chances of danger, especially on board ship.

In 1863 the United States frigate B was cruising off the Virginian coast under the command of Capt. H. Capt H. had under his charge a number of young and enthusiastic midshipmen, graduates of the naval college at Annapolis.

It was his custom to have them take the position of the ship at noon each day, when he took his own observations. Very often it happened that their calculations did not tally with his, but this only made him the more anxious to exercise them in so necessary a mathematical problem.

One day he was sitting in his cabin as usual at noon, after he had completed his calculations, and waiting for his "middies" to bring in theirs. The first came in almost immediately, visibly elated at having finished his task so soon and, as he believed, so correctly.

The Captain took one look at the figures, and then leaped from his seat so quickly that the astonished midshipman started back in alarm. Almost exploding with laughter, the old captain curved his hands before his mouth and hurried to the companionway.

"Clear away the boats!" he roared "Clear away the boats! We're wrecked—hard and fast aground on top of Fort Fisher!"

There was a howl of laughter from on deck, and the erratic young man grasped his papers and rushed past the captain and out of the cabin without waiting for ceremony.

A chameleon from the Cape of Good Hope was seen by Mr. Blakiston to turn white with fear, having been saved from the attacks of a cat. The most extraordinary thing about this lizard is the wonderful way in which the two eyes work quite independently of each other, and "enable it to survey comfortably objects in quite opposite directions."

It is a blessing to have opinions; it is a curse to be opinionated.

A Unique Pipe.

A novel pipe for transmitting hydraulic pressure is in use at the Victoria bridge, near the mouth of the River Dee, England. As described in the Engineering News, it consists of a solid drawn lead pipe, covered with close coils of copper wire, and is used for conveying water at 750 pounds per square inch pressure from one side of the river to the other to operate the machinery of a span of the swing bridge. At first a copper pipe one and a half inches in diameter, jointed with screwed unions, was used, but the scouring action of the tide washed out the bed of the river, left the pipe unsupported in two places and caused it to leak. The new pipe made of lead, wrapped with copper wire, is more flexible than the old one, and it is expected it will work more satisfactorily.

The Parthenon.

The Parthenon, at Athens, is virtually in ruins and likely to tumble down if another earthquake occurs before certain repairs are made. An immense scaffold of American timber now props up the entire entablature and prevents collapse of the building.

Austria's Imperial Pawnshop.

Austria has an Imperial pawnshop. It was established in Vienna in 1707, when there was great distress among the poor in the southern part of the empire. It was designed as a way to secure to the starving some means of immediate relief, and by putting the rate of interest as low as possible and the valuations as high as possible, and embodying in the system every advantage that could be given to those who sought to make loans, it was found to be so effective that it soon gained the Imperial sanction, and it was not long until its managers were made public officials under the direction of the Minister of the Interior. This is substantially the status of the institution at this time. The rates are so low that the business done on the cheap goods and chattels of the poor could not possibly make the establishment self-sustaining; but people who have been suddenly reduced in circumstances or who are temporarily embarrassed keep the margins on the right side and enable the institution to keep open without the aid of a subsidy. In the year 1893 a total of 866,015 articles were pledged, and of these 848,562 were redeemed, a remarkable redemption as compared with the proportions of the average pawnshop. The unredeemed pledges were sold at public auction, and whenever they brought more than the face of the pledge the balance was set to the account of the pledger, to be refunded any time within three years.—London Standard.

Couldn't Convert Him to Poetry.

An English paper says that there was once in one of the great universities a mathematical tutor who boasted that he neither knew nor cared to know anything about poetry. It was all, he said, "a lot of unpractical rot."

He had a friend, a brother tutor in literature, who was anxious to convert him to a liking for poetry. This friend thought he would begin with a poem which everybody must like, and gave the mathematician Tennyson's Charge of the Light Brigade to read.

The mathematician took it up and read thus:

"Half a league, half a league, half a league onward."

Then he banged the book down on the table.

"Bah!" he snorted. "If the fool meant a league and a half, why on earth didn't he say so?"

The man of letters gave up the attempt to convert his friend to a liking for poetry.

Cause of Holes in Umbrellas.

One of the fruitful causes of holes in the folds of an umbrella is improper care when it is wet. To roll up a wet umbrella is to invite the dyes to rot it, and one of the banes of the umbrella manufacturer is loaded dye on silk. Out of 100 samples of silk submitted to the writer, not over ten were pure dye, and 50 per cent. of the silk thread submitted was overloaded with dye and would not stand our chemical test. This is a fruitful cause of trouble in umbrellas, and our concern insists on all the silk and silk threads standing a chemical test in this respect. When over-dyed silks are wet and the umbrellas rolled and set away, we find the owners complaining that their umbrellas are cracked in the folds. Fine holes appear and they are apt to return the umbrella to the merchant and claim damage.—Hardware.

Regret.

"Dear me!" exclaimed one sugar trust magnate, as he laid down his newspaper.

"What's the matter?" asked his friend.

"Millions of dollars are being brought from the Klondike region."

"Does that make any special difference to you?"

"I should say it does. If we had known all that new money was coming into the country we should have put some more tax on sugar."—Washington Star.

Jim and John.

Jim and John were townsmen and chums, and went out to see base-ball. It was a red-hot afternoon, and the bleachers were like frying pans at breakfast time. Jim had a bald head and John had a crick in the back. They sat for an underdone roast and laughed at everything. Jim's bald spot was a shining mark, like a brass door-plate. A stray ball, fierce and sharp, from a false bat, struck the spot and ploughed a furrow. It dazed him. Jim's eyes and face looked like a sick owl's, and John laughed. He laughed an hour straight along. The game ran late into twilight. Meanwhile, John had shed his coat, and a cool, damp draft got in its work on his back. The time came to leave, but John couldn't. He couldn't bend or get up. Lumbago had set in in its worst form. He laughs best who laughs last, and Jim had revenge. But they got down town to Jim's room, when he said: "Here's something all those athletes use for hurts and ailments, and it's the best known cure for lame back." He rubbed it on John's back and some on his own head. They were both feeling cured and comfortable from the use of St. Jacobs Oil, which Jim always kept in a handy place. He was a sport himself and knew what was best. They went to bed. John laughed in his sleep. Both rose in the morning fresh as daisies. Then Jim laughed at John.

NEGLECT IS SUICIDE.

Plain Words From Mrs. Pinkham, Corroborated by Mrs. Charles Dunmore, That Ought to Bring Suffering Women to Their Senses.

If you were drowning and friendly hands shoved a plank to you, and you refused it, you would be committing suicide!

Yet that is precisely what women are doing if they go about their homes almost dead with misery, yet refuse to grasp the kindly hand held out to them!

It is suicidal to go day after day with that dull, constant pain in the region of the womb and that bloating heat and tenderness of the abdomen, which make the weight of your clothes an almost intolerable burden to you. It is not natural to suffer so in merely emptying the bladder. Does not that special form of suffering tell you that there is inflammation somewhere?

Shall I tell you what it is?

It is inflammation of the womb!

If it goes on, polypus, or tumor, or cancer will set in. Commence the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Thousands of women in this condition have been cured by it. Keep your bowels open with Mrs. Pinkham's Liver Pills, and if you want further advice, write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., stating freely all your symptoms—she stands ready and willing to give you the very best advice. She has given the helping hand to thousands suffering just like yourself, many of whom lived miles away from a physician. Her marvelous Vegetable Compound has cured many thousands of women. It can be found at any respectable drug store.

MRS. CHARLES DUNMORE, 102 Fremont St., Winter Hill, Somerville, Mass., says: "I was in pain day and night; my doctor did not seem to help me. I could not seem to find any relief until I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I had inflammation of the womb, a bearing-down pain, and the whites very badly. The pain was so intense that I could not sleep at night. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for eight months, and am now all right. Before that I took morphine pills for my pain; that was a great mistake, for the relief was only momentary and the effect vile. I am so thankful to be relieved of my sufferings, for the pains I had were something terrible. I am, indeed, very grateful for the good Mrs. Pinkham's remedies have done me."

NOTES ON EDUCATION.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO PUPIL AND TEACHER.

"Cribbing" Has Now Been Reduced to a Mechanical Science—Sport in Old-Time English Schools—A School Teacher's Diversified Vacation.

Patents a "Cribbing" Device.

"Cribbing" has been reduced to a mechanical science by an invention recently patented. The examinee presses a spring, the answers obligingly appear from their place of hiding under his coat sleeve, are read, and jump back again, all in a minute and a quarter. It is the proud boast of the inventor that nothing can stop the progress of a man equipped with one of his machines. They can be used by any one, from a college senior to a cook in the civil service examinations, and are equally reliable in all cases. Wherever the question can be discovered in advance the "Student's Delight," as it is called, will do the rest.

The machine consists simply of a movable tablet attached to the wrist and governed by a small spring. The answers, or notes, are written on the tablet, which is ordinarily concealed by the coat sleeve. When the answers are wanted the spring brings the tablet into view. The scheme is not new, having been used by half a million cribbers, ancient and modern, but this is a machine instead of a clumsy roll of paper worked by hand.

Professor Garner.

Professor James B. Garner, who has been called by the Bradley Institute at Peoria as instructor in chemistry, has been occupying a similar position in the University of Chicago. He was granted the degree of doctor of philosophy by the university last spring, and shortly afterward was offered the appointment to the Peoria institution. He has accepted, and will enter upon his new duties at the opening of the school in the fall. Professor Garner graduated from the Wabash College, Indiana, in 1893, and was awarded the degree of master of arts in 1895. Meanwhile he had been an instructor in chemistry at the University of Chicago from 1893 to 1895. During the latter year he was appointed a fellow, and assistant to Dr. Alexander Smith, and made a high reputation in research work under Head Professor Neff. At the end of the present school year he passed the doctor's examination with high honor.

PROFESSOR GARNER.

Sport in English Schools.

Probably the oldest English schools were the London schools described by Fitzstephen, who wrote in 1174. He gives interesting details of the lighter moments of schooltime. We hear of scholars who, on certain privileged occasions, attacked their schoolmasters "in epigrams or other compositions in numbers," using "all that low ribaldry we read of in the ancients," though one is glad to hear "without mentioning names." In addition to these elegant exercises they had the more robust sports of their time. On Shrove Tuesday each boy brought his fighting cock to school, and they had cock fights all the morning in the school-room, and after dinner played foot-ball in the fields of the suburbs. Every Sunday in Lent there was a sham fight, some of the boys being mounted, the rest on foot. At Easter they played at the water quintain, while on summer holidays they practiced at archery, leaping, wrestling and stone-throwing, and in winter slid, skated and went to bull baits and hog fights. No doubt the London schools had their severer side, and the life was not quite such a round of dissipation as it reads.—The Tablet.

A Thing to Boast Of.

Schoolfellows learn each others' failings if nothing else, and recall after years of separation the characteristic thing about an old seat-mate.

Two men who had been at school together when they were boys met and talked of old times.

"By the way," said one, "I saw Smith when I was out at Seattle."

"Did you? And what was he bragging about when you saw him?"

"He was bragging about his modesty just at that moment."

"Dear old Smith! Just like him!"

A Diversified Vacation.

A woman teacher planned her vacation so as to sample the climates of America. First she visited the tropics at the Isthmus of Panama, then traveled in Southern California in the dry season, tarried at Puget Sound, one of the rainiest places on the continent, and proceeded to Alaska where the spirit thermometers freeze in winter. It was not a very cool journey even in the far north, but was decidedly interesting and diversified.

Value of the Angora Goat.

The hair on the heads of most of the hundreds of thousands of dolls now being exhibited in shop windows is made from the hair of the Angora goat. This product is controlled by an English syndicate and is valued at $400,000 a year. After the hair is prepared it is sent to Munich and made into wigs by girls.

THE WHEEL

The Chainless Wheel.

The chainless bicycle will be a prominent feature in the trade next year. But it is a novelty in a way, and will not become popular as quickly as the pneumatic tire, the advantages of which the riders saw at once. The chainless wheel abroad has been in use some time and is showing unexpected merits. For use on race track or country road it is proving a wonder. Haret, the French rider, recently covered 564 miles and 1,510 yards in twenty-four hours. He established world's records from 100 miles up. It is an undisputed fact that on muddy or dusty roads it is superior, being proof against either dust or mud. As a hill climber the chainless wheel has proved without a peer. At Catford, England, H. J. Herbert rode up a long hill backwards, a feat which ten of the thirteen starters who made the ascent had the utmost difficulty in accomplishing going forward. It seems that there is some merit in the chainless wheel which others besides the manufacturers have discovered. It is said that at least a half-dozen firms will put out chainless wheels next year. In order to prevent a cutting of prices the principal manufacturers of these wheels are endeavoring to form a combination or trust so that a uniform price may be asked for the new wheel. Most of the chainless wheels are covered by a patent which is handled on a royalty, and as it is controlled by some of the principal makers it will probably be easy to form the trust. The history of bicycle manufacturing has taught makers that combination is the only way to prevent internecine warfare on prices. It is said also that this is the reason why there has been so much delay over the production of the chainless wheel. Its makers intend its manufacture shall be as much of a monopoly as possible.

Have Queer Ideas.

Some 'cyclists have queer ideas of the functions of the League of American Wheelmen. Letters reach the headquarters of the State divisions almost daily asking absurd questions and making requests that could not be granted were the officials disposed to do so. Not long since a member of the League ran into a truck and wrecked his wheel. The driver of the truck refused to turn off the asphalt strip on which the wheelman was riding. He was going in the same direction as the pedaler and there was no law compelling him to turn out for a 'cyclist under the circumstances. The wheelman thought there was, however, and wrote to the New York State division and requested that body to bring suit against the driver for the recovery of the cost of his wheel. Another 'cyclist residing in one of the up-the-State towns wanted to know that if he joined the League whether that organization would build a 'cycle path from his house to the railroad station, a distance of three miles. "It wouldn't cost much," he added, "probably not more than $300." Membership in the L. A. W. costs $2 the first year and less the second. Still another rider, this time a woman, and evidently a young one, wrote to find out if the League would pay her expenses to the national meet, and also the expenses of her friends if they became members. She added that she thought racing was the "nicest" sport and hoped that she wouldn't be disappointed.

Earn Big Incomes.

The noted riders of Europe are reported to be earning large incomes this year, possibly more than those racing in this country. The important races are divided up between six or eight professionals, who secure the lion's share of all the big purses. Match and long-distance racing is conceded to be the more remunerative pastime. Linton is said to have saved $25,000 in the past two years from the income derived from racing. The boom professional racing has received in France is responsible for the generous purses offered. A big item to the foreign riders consists of the moneys they receive from the bicycle and tire manufacturers, who are great supporters of racing. Estimating the earnings of the leading men in England this year, a well-known authority gives the following figures: J. W. Stocks, $10,000; T. Linton, $9,000; Platt-Betts, $5,000; F. W. Chinn, $3,500; C. F. Barden, $4,000.

Ankle Action.

Ankle action is not such a mysterious thing as many think it. It is the first point a trainer looks for in a racer. The object of it is to get the pedal past the dead center. Downward pushing at this point has no propelling power and here comes in the ankle motion. As the pedal nears at the top the dead center the heel is dropped near the ground, and thus the ankle motion applies the force not downward, but forward, minimizing almost to zero the loss of power at the dead center. The reverse should be followed when the pedal is at the lowest point. Raising the heel and pressing the toe forward cause the toe to carry the pedal past the dead center. The ankle action is thus the desideratum of all who hope to be expert wheelmen.

Man Only Has a Nose.

Man is the only animal that has a real nose or chin. Horses have faces that are all nose, swine have snouts and elephants trunks; lions have vast smelling organs, but none of them anything that can be separated from their faces and called a nose. It is even more true of the chin, which is practically human.

The name "dime," applied to our 10-cent piece, comes from the French word "Dixieme," the original form in English use, and sometimes appearing on early coins as "disme."

ON A BLEAK SCOTCH MOUNTAIN.

Ben Nevis Observatory, Britain's Highest Meteorological Station.

The observatory on Ben Nevis, Scotland, is the highest meteorological station in Britain, and the scientific results obtained there are in consequence of small importance. It is now thirteen years ago since this observatory was opened. The original building consisted of one room, but additions were soon made. A tower about eighty feet in height, which serves the double purpose of carrying a set of anemometers and of providing a convenient exit when the winter snows have closed the ordinary doorway, was also erected. The observatory is substantially built, and is all of one story, except the tower. The dry-stone walls vary in thickness from four feet in the less exposed parts to ten feet at the base of the tower; the windows are all double, and the roof is covered with lead overlaid with snow-boarding.

Although the velocity of the gales on Ben Nevis frequently exceeds 130 miles an hour, no damage has been done to the building beyond the breaking of an occasional pane of glass. The day of twenty-four hours is divided into watches—eight hours long at night and four during the day. Thus there is always at least one of the observers practically in the clouds, for most phenomena observed on Ben Nevis are of great interest and beauty. As the observers are practically in the clouds for most of the time, many opportunities are afforded for minutely examining the optical effects of mist or cloud on the rays of the sun or moon, when a thin, almost imperceptible, film of scud-cloud or mist covers are formed. These coronae, as is well known, consist of colored rings arranged concentrically round the moon or sun. Each ring has all the usual spectroscopic or rainbow colors to more or less perfection arranged with the red belt outside. In winter when the sun is low—even at noon—the shadow of a person standing near the cliff that runs all along the northern side of the mountain is cast clear of the hill and shown in the valley below.

Prior to the advance of winter, the observatory is stocked with coals, tinned food, and sundries for nine months. The provisions are conveyed on horseback by way of the bridle path. In winter the telegraph-wire is the observers' sole means of communicating with the lower world. Snow falls to the depth of fifteen feet and terrific gales prevail.

Animal life is somewhat rare on the summit, but an occasional fox or weasel may be observed in the rocks. Snow bunting build their nests regularly in the cliffs below the observatory, and in winter are quite tame. The observers have on more than one occasion caught mice in the building, and their existence there has given rise to a good deal of controversy. About a year ago a live frog was taken to the observatory, where it has remained ever since, and, although partaking of nothing in the way of food, it seems as lively as when it was taken up.

MARY ELIZABETH LEASE.

Mentioned as the Populist Candidate for Governor of Kansas.

Though she has never held an office, Mary E. Lease has frequently been a candidate and is spoken of as the Populist candidate for Governor of Kansas. She is a woman of more than ordinary ability, and has done splendid work as a speaker for the cause of the Populists in the nation as well as in her own State.

She was born in Ireland in 1853, and early in life came to this country with her family. Though an obscure farmer's wife she suddenly became well known as an orator and worker. Five years ago she was scarcely known outside of her own vicinity, but now her reputation is world-wide. She is a politician as well as an orator and talks and plans like a man. The trouble between Mrs. Lease and Gov. Llewellyn some years ago is still remembered, and her success at that time made a great impression. She has been admitted to the bar and practice of law at Wichita.

The Blues.

This is a synonym for that gloomy, depressed condition of the mind which has its origin in dyspepsia. All the ugly spirits that, under the name of the "blues," "blue devils," "megrims" and "mulligrubs" torment the dyspeptic almost ceaselessly, vanish when attacked with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, that, moreover, annihilates biliousness, constipation, chills and fever, kidney complaints and nervousness.

Progressing.

Old Job was taught to read by the minister's wife, and proved a very apt scholar. Returning home after a prolonged absence, the lady met her old pupil, and asked him how he was getting on. "I suppose you can read your Bible now comfortably, Job?"

"Lor' bless you, ma'am!" cried Job, "I've been out of the Bible and into the newspaper this long while."—Household Words.

"EAST, WEST, HOME IS BEST,"
IF KEPT CLEAN
SAPOLIO

A retired sea captain, sixty years of age, well known to the reputable citizens of New Haven, suffered from an overworked and worn-out digestive apparatus. He had no faith in patent medicines as a cure for dyspepsia, but was induced by a friend to try Ripans Tabules. This he did with but little hope of benefit. After trying them for some time he said to the friend who had directed his attention to them: "Those Ripans Tabules were so effective from the start that I was amazed at the result. They are wizards. All the dyspeptic misery endured by me since becoming a landlubber has disappeared. I take one every night now, and feel so much rejuvenated by their use that I sometimes think I could climb a ship's rigging as well as I did thirty years ago."

A new style packet containing TEN RIPANS TABULES in a paper carton (without glass) is now for sale at some drug stores for FIVE CENTS. This low-priced sort is intended for the poor and the economical. One dozen of the five-cent cartons (120 tabules) can be had by mail by sending forty-eight cents to the RIPANS CHEMICAL COMPANY, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York—or a single carton (TEN TABULES) will be sent for five cents.

OBITUARY

Burton Brown was born in Marion Co. Ohio, Aug 23 1832 and departed this life after a long siege of sickness and suffering, at his home 4½ miles from Auburn Thursday, Sept. 30, at 4 p. m. at the age of 65 years, 1 month 7 days. Mr. Brown's parents moved to DeKalb Co. when he was about five years of age; he was reared on the farm and received his education in the district school. He lived with his parents until he was united in marriage to Miss Harriet J. Squires, April 15, 1855. In May of the same year he and his companion began keeping house on the farm which he now owns. It was all covered with thick forest, except a small patch of ground where the house now stands; he began in the words, and like an honest, and earnest toiler, labored early and late for years, until the farm was cleared and under cultivation. The well improved farm stands out as a living trophy of his earnest toil. To Mr. and Mrs. Brown were born nine children six, sons and three daughters, seven of whom survive their father. The children living are, William H., Samuel R., Laban A., Sidney Susan, Phebe Dorcas, Stephen B., Russell W. Bro. Brown leaves to mourn his death a companion, seven children, one brother, three half brothers, eight grandchildren, besides many relatives and friends.

In the year 1881, he was obliged to have his left leg amputated as the effect of a fever sore, and has since that time been compelled to retire from active farm life, although he continued to live on the farm and superintended the work. Mr. Brown was an active, honest, industrious and economical farmer; success ever attended his labors even after he was deprived of the use of his limb. He did more work with one limb, than many men do who have the use of both limbs; as a pioneer and citizen of DeKalb Co. Mr. Brown was looked upon as a good, upright, and true man, and so he was.

In the year 1854, Bro. Brown became a christian, and united with the Lutheran church at Jackson Center, under the pastoral labor of Rev. W. Waltman, of which congregation he remained a number until it disbanded. He then placed his membership in the M. P. church at Concord, of which he remained a member for about 10 years. When the Lutheran church at Auburn was organized, he transferred his membership by letter to that congregation Jan. 7, 1877, of which church he was a faithful and devoted member at his death. He was always at church on Sabbath, if weather permitted. He loved his church, and above all his Saviour. He remembered the Sabbath day, and kept it as near right as possible. Last spring his health began to fail, but was able to be about, until Old Settler's day, when he was taken with a sinking chill, since which time he has been a great sufferer. He bore his suffering in the spirit of patience and christian fortitude, he was not alarmed when it was told him that the end was near, he talked about death about death and dying, as deliberately as though it was a matter of business. He was prepared to die and longed for the end long before it came. He departed this life, with a bright hope of immortality beyond the stream of death. The funeral services will take place, tomorrow at 10 a. m. sun time at the house and interment will be in the Concord cemetery. Rev. J. D. Brosy will officiate.

Mr. and Mrs. Houston Surprised

Mr. and Mrs. John Houston, of Jackson township, were the victims of a complete surprise Tuesday evening, the occasion being Mrs. Houston's birthday. The neighbors and friends came in from every direction, to the number of about fifty. They found Mr. Houston in bed, and Mrs. Houston busy arranging matters for breakfast next morning. The large crowd filled the house comfortably and till after midnight the Houston homestead was the scene of much merriment. And that part of the program which would seem most tempting to a newspaper man was the fine supper. Fried chicken, cakes etc. etc, were abundant. The writer has enjoyed the hospitalities of this home for more than a year and we can imagine what the tempting layout consisted of. The surprise was a great success and we hope Mr. and Mrs. Houston may live to enjoy many more such occasions.

There is Nothing as Good

There is nothing just as good as Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, so demand it and do not permit the dealer to sell you some substitute. He will not claim there is anything better, but in order to make more profit, he may claim something else to be just as good. You want Dr. King's New Discovery because you know it to be safe and reliable, and guaranteed to do good or money refunded. For Coughs, Colds, Consumption and for all affections of Throat, Chest and Lungs, there is nothing so good as is Dr. King's New Discovery. Trial bottle free at Robbins & McCord's drugstore. Regular size 50 cents and $1.00.

NO PAY—NO CURE

That is the way all druggists sell Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic for Chills and Malaria. It is simply Iron and Quinine in a tasteless form. Children love it. Adults prefer it to bitter, nauseating Tonics. Price 50c. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

Junction Foundry

Some people make mistakes of one kind and another. But the farmer who wants to increase his crops and reduce his expenses, will make no mistake if he buys his plows and points, land rollers and general repairs of O. W. Werntz & Co. Auburn Junction.

A HOWLING SUCCESS

Whenever properly introduced Dr. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin as a cure for constipation, has met with a phenomenal sale. Many druggists cannot say enough in praise of its merits, as well as its great popularity with the people. In 10c trial size and also in 50 and $1.00 sizes, of F. E. Davenport.

Our I's and.... ....Other Eyes.

Our I's are just as strong as they were fifty years ago, when we have cause to use them. But we have less and less cause to praise ourselves, since others do the praising, and we are more than willing for you to see us through other eyes. This is how we look to S. F. Boyce, wholesale and retail druggist, Duluth, Minn, who after a quarter of a century of observation writes:

"I have sold Ayer's Sarsaparilla for more than 25 years, both at wholesale and retail, and have never heard anything but words of praise from my customers; not a single complaint has ever reached me. I believe Ayer's Sarsaparilla to be the best blood purifier, that has been introduced to the general public." This, from a man who has sold thousands of dozens of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, is strong testimony. But it only echoes popular sentiment the world over, which has, "Nothing but words of praise for Ayer's Sarsaparilla."

Any doubt about it? Send for "Curebook" It kills doubts and cures doubters. Address J. C. AYER Co., Lowell, Mass.

TOO, TOO SILLY

The Waterloo Press has an unusually silly article in its issue this week Here it is:

"The effort of Auburn newspapers to beat the Press out of a legal notice, on Wednesday of last week, was hardly courteous to say the least. The decedent was a supporter of this paper during his life, and no doubt if he could have consulted would have ordered the legal notices here, but because the Aubnrn papers were printed, too early last week to secure the date of sale, they thought advisable to prevent the notice coming to us, which they failed to accomplish."

Now what are the facts? Nelson Chaney administrator of the estate of the late A. B. Raub came into the COURIER office last Wednesday forenoon with a notice for the sale of land. He was not asked to come to this office, but we would have taken it, of course, but had gone to press the night before, in order to get out of the way of the Carnival, and so we presume he went to the Dispatch and Gazette, and found both of them already printed though we do not know that he did. It now appears that Mr. Chaney went to Waterloo with the notice and was in time to get it inserted in the Press That is all there is of it. Surely not enough to furnish excuse for such a whine. No one tried to "beat the Press out of" anything. No one, as far as we know, tried "to prevent the notice from coming to the Press." We presume none of the papers here, did more than to offer to insert it a week later. That is what the COURIER did, and on being told there was a hurry to the matter, that ended it. The Press is either too suspicious or too silly or both.

CANADA THISTLES.

(Goshen Daily Times)

John Sternberg last evening filed an affidavit in Judge Young's court charging Daniel Berkey, a justice of the Peace, in Harrison township, with having allowed Canada thistles to grow and mature on his land. He appeared this afternoon and was fined $5, together with costs amounting to $15.50 which he made arrangements to pay.

A similar charge was filed against Andrew Berkey, the father of Daniel.

"The Foot of a Fly"

says an eminent English doctor, "will carry enough poison to infect a household." In summer-time, more especially, disease germs fill the air, multitudes are infected, fall ill, die; multitudes escape. These messengers of mischief do not exist for millions. Why not? Because they are healthy and strong—protected as a crocodile is against gunshot. It is the weak, the wasted, the thin-blooded who fall; those who have no resistive power so that a sudden cough or cold develops into graver disease. We hear of catching disease! Why not catch health? We can do it by always maintaining our healthy weight.

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod-liver Oil, is condensed nourishment; food for the building up of the system to resist the attacks of disease. It should be taken in reasonable doses all summer long by all those whose weight is below the standard of health. If you are losing ground, try a bottle now.

ACCIDENTALLY SHOT.

John Coby, of Garrett Killed While Hunting.

(Garrett Herald.)

John Coby, a resident in East Addition, started on a hunting tour yesterday morning, and while getting over a wire fence, the gun was accidentally discharged, the load taking effect along one side of his body and the side of his face, tearing his head in a frightful manner. He djed from the wounds about 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Mr Coby is about 20 years old and was an apprentice in the boiler shops. He was a good, steady, honest young man. The Herald extends sympathy to his friends in their bereavement.

GOT THE JOKE ON HIM.

A lady came into the office of Kessler Bros. yesterday and asked for Mr. Johnson Frank Johnson, one of the employes was called, and she at once asked him if he was a dentist, as she wanted some dental work done. Frank blushed clear up to his scalp lock, and told her he wasn't the man. She evidently wanted one of the dentists named Johnston of whom we have two, Dr. S. B. Johnston, on north Main-st, and Dr. J. H. Johnston, over the Davis hardware. And in this twenty-four hours, Theo Kessler has not been able to reduce the size of the smile he had by getting the joke on Frank.

Almost Got A Wheel.

Monday evening Carey Boyer on North VanBuren street, came home and leaned his wheel up against a tree that stands just outside the walk. Shortly after this, just as the darkness was fairly on, Mrs. Stringham, a neighbor happened to come along and to her surprise she saw the figure of a man going toward the wheel. He took it up as if it were his own and started away, when he happened to see Mrs. Stringham, when he dropped it, and disappeared in the growing darkness. If she had happened along a minute later, Carey would have lost his wheel past all chances of finding. And it would have been a serious loss to him as he not only uses it daily to deliver DAILY COURIERS, but for many other trips he has to make. His sister, Nellie also, uses it freely, about every day, and had it been taken it would be almost like a teamster losing a horse But it all reminds us of a general carelessness as to bicycles. Go where you will over town, at stores or residences, you find these costly rigs standing carelessly at all times of day and night, for many leave them all night. The next we hear of it, some one may be out $50 or $75 by carelessness. A bicycle costs nearly as much as a horse. People lock up their stables. It will be well to see that their bicycles are safe. Carey almost sleeps with his now.

WATER WORKS.

We are informed that a few people who are opposing water works, have been telling around, that if we get water works, everyone will have to take and use the water whether he wants it or not. Such is not the case. It will be just as it is with taking and using incandescent electric lights all who prefer electric lights and are able and willing to pay for them, have the lights put into their houses. All who do not want electric lights in their houses, go on using kerosene lamps. Everybody knows how this is It will be the same with water works Those who want to use the water for any purpose will go to the authorities and make a contract and pay a certain price per month. All who do not wish to use the water from the water works, will keep on using the same water they use now, from their own cisterns and wells, and have their streets sprinkled by the street sprinkler as they are having it done now. No one will be compelled to take or use the water unless he wishes to do so.

YOU BET.

Ligonier Banner

Auburn is making arrangements to hold a special election to vote on the question of putting in waterworks Auburn should have had waterworks before this and we are surprised that there should have been such a delay in the matter. It is the only town of its size in Northern Indiana without this modern convenience.

ROOFING & SPOUTING

A. H. Conrad Now Located On Main Street.

Mr. A. H. Conrad the new tinner is now located in the building on South Main street, formerly occupied by Lahnum Bros. He is amply prepared to do all kinds of roofing and spouting, repair, and job work of all kinds. His prices will be reasonable and the COURIER readers can make no mistake by getting his figures when in need of work in his line.

BOOSE AND CALABOOSE.

These two boozes go together sometimes, and should do so much oftener. Last evening an unusual hooting and jeering called many from their homes to uptown districts, to see what caused the fuss. There were two one horse buggies being driven about the streets in the central part of town. In one were two women, and in the other, was one. All three were evidently in a hilarious state of intoxication, and kept driving and turning the poor jaded horses about till the latter could hardly go. And every "rickety-rackety" turn they made, boys would hoot at them or yell to the horses. Seeing themselves getting into close quarters, they used what little sense they had left in a sudden endeavor to get out of town for it appears they hailed from Garrett. They had just got near the Swineford House, when Marshal Potter met them, and stopped their rigs. But they made such solemn promises to go home and keep away, that the marshal let them go. No sooner had they got off to a safe distance, than they turned their heads and hurled at him, the vilest epithets they could think of. This settled their case, Clint went for them. The one alone, got away, but the rig with the two in it, was captured and brought back. The women fought and tore like tigers, and did considerable damage to the marshal's clothing. But he held them and they were ushered into the presence of his honor, Squire Walter. There being no prosecutor, they were finally taken to jail, where they had a chance to sober off like men, till morning. This morning they were brought before the justice, and after he had given them a good lecture, and curbed their dispostion to be "sassy," they plead guilty and were fined each $1 and costs, making $4.30 for each. As they had no money, they were taken back to jail. If their friends do not furnish the money, they will have to stay in there five days. Had they not been talked out of it, they would have stood trial. A prosecutor would have been sent for to come here, as there is none here now, Mr. Welsheimer having resigned. The charge would have been easily proved aganist them, and they stood a chance to be arrested and fined on several other charges, and the result might have been a much longer time in jail and that much heavier expense to the people. And it is hoped this light sentence will show them their danger, and keep them from coming over here to have a drunk, as they have been doing heretofore. They are all well known in Garrett, all married, but we are told do not live with their husbands. They are tough citizens when they are drunk.

WE LEFT 'EM OUT.

In writing up the Carnival, we said we were likely to forget some one who should have credit for something done or assistance given. And we did forget a very important factor of the great show, the Auburn Electric Light Co., which did more than any other one firm to make the thing a success and furnish attractions. It was to them we are indebted for the search light, the electric fountain and much other matter in the way of illuminations and decoration. The search light and fountain were a heavy expense for men, material and power. We presume what they did and used was worth at least $100. They should have proper credit and thanks. We left them out, but didn't mean to do it. There were too many things to think of at one time.

George Stafford and Miss Artie Morr Married At 6 A. M.

Immediately after the ceremony they drove to Kendallville where they spent the day. Mr. and Mrs. Stafford are both worthy young people, and have the best wishes of the COURIER for future happiness.

A WHIZZER.

At noon today a bicyclist, who does not belong in Auburn, came whizzing up Main-st at about a 2:40 gait. Little Miss Flossy Meese on her way to school and was just crossing the street near W. H. McIntyre's residence when the fast rider came in contact with her. She rolled and tumbled out in the street a few feet, but fortunately was not hurt. The man dismounted and ran back to the little girl, but she was enraged and walked off leaving him standing there.

It is Thought by Many when the Creator said to woman "in sorrow shalt thou bring forth children," that a curse was pronounced, but the joy felt by every Mother when she first presses to her heart her babe, proves the contrary.

Danger and suffering lurk in the pathway of the Expectant Mother, and should be avoided, that she may reach the hour when the hope of her heart is to be realized, in full vigor and strength.

J. B. WHITE DEAD.

Monday's Daily.

Hon. James B. White died suddenly on Saturday afternoon at about two o'clock. He had not been seriously ill but a day or two. There was an obstruction of the bowels that could not be overcome, and a surgical operation was performed, and from this he did not rally. He was buried today.

Mr. White was elected to Congress over Robert Lowry in 1886, and was beaten by Judge McClellan at the election in 1888. He has always been a prominent and very useful citizen, and his death will be a blow to Ft. Wayne in many ways.

A True Remedy.

W. M. Repine, editor Tiskilwa, Ill., "Chief," says: "We wont keep house without Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. Experimented with many others, but never got the true remedy until we used Dr. King's New Discovery. No other remedy can take its place in our home, as in it we have a certain and sure cure for Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, etc." It is idle to experiment with other remedies, even if they are urged on you for just as good as Dr. King's new Discovery. They are not as good, because this remedy has a record for cures; besides is guaranteed. It never fails to satisfy Trial bottles free at Robbins & McCord's Drug Store.

A HORRIBLE DEATH.

A Little Baby Literally Torn to Pieces By Hogs.

A dispatch says:—A death almost too shocking for pen to portray occurred at the farm residence of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Hoak, about a mile and a half south of Ligonier, on Monday evening, when Bernice, their only child, strayed from the watchful eye of her mother and crept under the gate into the hog lot. The hogs, five in number, at once fastened their powerful jaws upon the baby's tender flesh and literally tore it to pieces. It was entirely stripped of its clothing, with the exception of its shoes. The lower portion of the face, together with the throat and a portion of the breast were entirely eaten up.

The dead child was discovered by its father. He frantically entered the pen and secured the remains, when a sow, more vicious than the rest, made to attack him, but he regained the fence and handed the dead baby to his father, who came up at this time. It is supposed that the one sow, which had eaten up her own young, made the attack upon the child and the other hogs enraged by the smell of blood joined in the attack.

First Grist Mill In Noble County.

S. E. Alvord in the Banner describes the first saw mill in this county thus: "With the Engle and Hostetter families in 1832 came a man eamed Haines intending to build a grinding mill on Indian creek, southeast of present site of Ligonier. Work was commenced but soon abandoned by Haines who sold his mill properties to Adam Engle in the fall of 1832, several years later Mr. Engle built a regular mill but in the meantime a rude grinding apparatus was devised with the burs intended for the mill—putting the lower one on a solid foundation and suspending the runner on a hanging beam passing up between two limbs on an oak tree, the turning was done by means of lever passing through the beam of suffibient length for a man at each end. Andrew Engle says 'It took elbow grease to do the turning.'

This was the first mill that ground grain in Noble county. It made a course corn meal that was nutritious and healthy. For a separater they used a dear hide punched full of holes and stretched on a frame,' says Andrew Engle."

COMPLETE SURPRISE

Last Friday evening October, 8, Mr. J. W. Metcalf, of Union township, was completely surprised by a number of nearly fifty friends and neighbors, the occasion being his twenty-eighth birthday. The large crowd filled the house completely and till after midnight you could hear issuing from the house merry conversation and peals of laughter as if all were having a good old time. The guests took with them cake, pie, celery, buns, and chicken, and at the hour of ten a grand supper was served. After the refreshments were over A. B. Walsworth made a neat little speech in presenting to Mr. Metcalf the sum of three dollars with which to purchase something to remember the occasion, connecting with this his sister Bertha, gave him a book and his wife also gave him a fine picture. Among the guests were:

Mr. and Mrs. Mel Springer, Mr. and Mrs. John Kruse, Mr. and Mrs. Will Armstrong, Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Metcalf, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Emme, Mr. and Mrs. Mort Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. John Bunge, Mr. and Mrs. Jo Springer Mr. and Mrs. Jim Sherwood, Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Metcalf, Mr and Mrs. Elsworth Eckright, Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Funk, Mr. and Mrs. A. THE QUAIL LAW.

Some Hunters Seem to Have a Misapprehension of It.

Hunters who are having their shooting irons burnished up ready to open war on the quails doubtless have a misapprehension of the law. Under the old law quail could be killed in Indiana between Octrber 15 and December 20, but the last legislature changed the dates. Under the law now in force quail can be legally killed between Noveber 10 to January 1. This statement of facts will probably be news to parties who are getting affairs in readiness to take to the country in search of the mild-mannered but toothsome Bob White.

PREHISTORIC STONE WALL.

(Goshea Daily Times)

Workmen engaged in laying a trunk sewer at Mishawaka have unearthed a fairly compact stone wall at a depth ranging from ten to fifteen feet, composed of large stones, quite regularly laid, some of them weighing several hundred pounds. Thus far about 100 feet in length of this wall has been uncovered from the overlaying sand, and it is totally unlike anything ever before seen in that locality. The oldest inhabitants cannot explain its presence and it is credited to the work of prehistoric times.

DIVORCE DAY.

To-day was the first "Divorce Day" recognized and utilized in this county. All who have concluded that marriage is a failure and single blessedness a heavenly institution, are to take notice of this day and bring their griefs to the throne of temporal justice and there lay their burdens down. And these people evidently know a good thing when they see it. Early in the day, three sisters, all bright, good-looking and evidently capable of making three homes happy, filled into the office of Attorney Price West, and laid the ropes for three separate divorce cases which they would this day submit to his honor, Judge Roby. Later: We came within one of having the number correct. Two of the sisters are applying, and one has already got her divorce, a year or two ago.

THE CHICAGO WAY.

While in Chicago yesterday, we witnessed what was left to see, of the most daring robbery that Chicago has known for some time. Right among the big stores on State-st in the part that on pleasant days is most crowded, is the jewelry store of Rowe Brothers. In early morning before the crowd had begun, some one had thrown a brick against the big plate glass of the window. It had gone through and was soon found lying in a confused pile of gold watches and jewelry. But the thief was not in sight. A lot of little tags and some velvet boxes in which fine watches are kept, marked the direction he had taken, but in a block or two they had ceased, and no further trace has been found. About $600 of valuable watches and pins had been scooped up in a hurry and probably put into a sachel. And the ragged hole in the big glass was still in her the afternoon. People went by in crowds, and only now and then one or two would happen to notice it. It is Chicago's way of doing things by the wholesale, and whether there is loss or gain, they soon get over it.

THE LOCAL NEWSPAPER.

(Plymouth Evening News)

A good local newspaper—one that goes into the homes of the people who buy at home—beats the world as an advertising medium. A hand bill attracts attention by accident. The newspaper carries your message to a waiting audience. The rail fence ad. is a corpse that can be looked upon only by a few neighbors who have to go near it. The newspaper ad. goes into the home and takes a seat in the family circle, and talks right to the hearts of thousands of people who pay their money for just that kind of entertainment. They love the family newspaper and read it with confidence Nothing equals a good, live, local paper when it comes to reaching the people.

GASOLINE ENGINE FOR LOG HAULING.

Val Brown, the Columbia City lumber man, is going to try the experiment of hauling logs with a gasoline engine. He has placed an order for the construction of a fifteen horsepower engine, and as soon as it is completed he will begin using it to haul logs into Columbia City. It is estimated that this engine will do as much work as six or seven teams, and the expense of running will be less than two dollars per day. If this experiment proves satisfactory, the time may come before long, when the use of horses for hauling purposes will be almost entirely dispensed with. It seems that the tendency of the times is to make machinery do almost everything.

HOW TO FIND OUT.

Fill a bottle or common glass with urine and let it stand twenty-four hours a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys. When urine stains linen it is evidence of kidney trouble. To frequent desire to urinate or pain in the back, is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

CAPT. JAS. B. WHITE,

EX-CONGRESSMAN OF INDIANA, DEAD.

His Death Mourned by Multitudes, who Loved Him for His Nobleness—Gen. Weyler to Be Relieved Immediately—Other Telegraph News.

A Noted Indianian Dead.

A special from Fort Wayne, Ind., says: Capt. James B. White, business man, ex-Congressman and humanitarian died from a shock, the result of an operation for obstruction of the bowels.

Possibly no event ever occurred in the history of Fort Wayne which caused such widespread regret and genuine sorrow as was evident everywhere, when the knowledge of the death of Capt. James B. white became public. On fleet wings the sad tidings flew, carrying sorrow and pain into the homes of the poor and rich alike, for no man ever held such a place in the hearts of his fellow citizens as did Capt. White, who passed to his reward at 2:15 Saturday afternoon. In fifteen minutes after his spirit had winged its flight the news was known on the down-town streets and within an hour the message of sorrow had penetrated to all parts of the city. And none was there who felt not the keen pang of regret, the poignant sensation of sorrow, and the feeling that a great and good man had gone from among us. It was a shock to the people of Fort Wayne, the sorrow of which was intensified by its suddenness.

CAPT. JAS. B. WHITE.

The death of Capt. White is a muncipal and a State calamity, and next after the mourning of the bereaved family, comes that of the sick, the needy and the suffering God's-poor, who regarded him as their chief friend and protector.

He came to America from Scotland half a century ago. He was one of the organizers of the National Caledonian clubs. He conducted the largest retail grocery in the West, employing 150 clerks, founded the White National Bank, and was noted for his benevolence. He secured one term in Congress, being elected as a Republican in this strong Democratic district. He leaves a large fortune. A widow, two daughters, and four sons, all prominent men, survive him.

$5,000,000 Discrepancy.

Comptroller Fitch's expert accountants, who have been at work investigating the records and accounts in Brooklyn, N. Y., preparatory to consolidation, have found discrepancies in the accounts amounting to $5,000,000. The officials of Brooklyn deny there is or has been any malfeasance, and allege that the discrepancies reported by Comptroller Fitch's experts are due in a large part to the defective system of bookkeeping followed in the towns recently annexed to Brooklyn.

GO FOR MILLIONS.

Ernest Harris Locates Treasure on Cocos Island.

Victoria (B. C.) special: The British warship Imperieuse, which recently sailed from Guatemala, carried as a guest of Rear Admiral Palliser, Ernest Harris, a real estate man of this city. It is asserted that he went south to secure part of the treasure which Charles Hartford says he has located on Cocos Island. Hartford came here from Cocos Island a couple of months ago on the schooner Aurora, on which a party of sealers had gone to the island to search for treasure. The sealers could not find it, but Hartford claimed to have located $30,000,000 gold, silver and jewels. Hartford is said to have interested Harris and the officers of the Imperieuse in his story, and it is even thought that he himself sailed as a bluejacket on the vessel.

An angry crowd gathered about the Court-house and Jail in Newport, Ky., upon the announcement of a most shocking assault by eleven men upon the young wife of a switchman, recently married. The Sheriff was obliged to clear the corridors and threats of vengeance were made. Thomas Gleason and his wife started out the Alexandria pike to visit a friend when two men with revolvers, and representing themselves to be officers, separated husband and wife and dragged the shrieking woman into a field, where eleven men assaulted her. The penalty for this crime in Kentucky is death. Mrs. Gleason has positively identified six of the men, who were arrested from her description. RELIEF GIVEN CUBA.

SAGASTA MINISTRY DECIDES TO GRANT AUTONOMY.

Campaign to Be Continued So Long as Rebellion Exists—Weyler Declares He Will Not Resign—Seven Girls Die in a Fire.

Spanish Butcher Defiant.

At a cabinet council in Madrid the Spanish Government decided to grant autonomy to Cuba under the suzerainty of Spain, and to continue the campaign as long as may be necessary. Senor Sagasta, the premier, has received a cable message from Captain General Weyler, who offers his services to the Government and says: "I shall not resign." Senor Gallon, minister of foreign affairs, explained to the cabinet the position of the diplomatic negotiations with the United States.

The first important step of the new Spanish Government was the decision to grant autonomy to Cuba. So far as learned in the meager telegrams received this plan of autonomy is to be subject to the suzerainty of Spain. Information is lacking as to its scope over legislation and taxation, the most significant factors in the self-government of any country. From the fact, however, that the statement is made that the Sagasta ministry intends to continue the campaign in Cuba so long as rebellion exists, the logical deduction is that the autonomy agreed on is limited—that it will not satisfy the insurgent leaders.

But whether limited or liberal, it is feared this concession to the rebels will create a storm in Spain. Taken in connection with a dispatch saying that Weyler has refused to resign as captain general, thus compelling the Sagasta government to recall him, the affair will furnish effective campaign material for the Spanish conservatives. The latter will undoubtedly point to Weyler's determined operations against the Cubans and tell the electors that his withdrawal means the island will be lost to Spain. With relation to American intervention, Sagasta's step is considered shrewd diplomacy in that it will tend to postpone a settlement. Diplomats say that America's hands are now virtually tied until the autonomy plan is given a trial in Cuba.

PASSING OF NEAL DOW.

Brief Sketch of the Veteran Prohibitionist Leader's Career.

It was on the 20th of last March that the whole temperance world celebrated the ninety-third birthday of Gen. Neal Dow, whose death is now recorded. For half a century previous he had held a unique place in the public eye and for seventy years of his long life he had been a leader in temperance work. His first movement in this direction was when he induced the town authorities of Portland, Me., where he was born, to abstain from ringing the old town bell at 11 and 4 o'clock for the citizens to take a drink. In 1851 the Maine Legislature, after years of Dow's bombardment, passed the famous prohibition law.

GEN. NEAL DOW.

At 60 years of age he raised the Thirteenth Maine and led it to the front, was shot four times and landed in Libby prison. At an age when most men are dead he lectured all over the earth on temperance. Sixty-seven years ago he was married and in 1880 he was the candidate for President on the prohibition ticket. Death was due to old age.

VENEZUELA'S PRESIDENT.

Gen. Ignacio Andrade, Whose Election Is Announced.

The election of Gen. Ignacio Andrade as president of Venezuela is regarded as a signal victory for the proposed arbitration between Venezuela and Great Britain. Gen. Andrade has always been an earnest advocate of that means for settling the long-standing disputes. His election was considered for a time in doubt, owing to the violent opposition of political schemers in the Venezuelan congress to the treaty recently ratified largely through his efforts. If he had been defeated it would have meant a serious setback to the work already accomplished by the State Department. Andrade has long been a conspicuous figure in the national life of his republic. He is 58 years old, and is the son of Gen. Jose Escolastico Andrade, one of Venezuela's famous figures. He lived in America for some time and is closely in touch with American ideas. His brother is the Venezuelan minister in this country and has proved himself a very astute diplomatist. Gen. Andrade himself is an old friend and ally of President Crespo, and will enjoy the active support of that statesman in all his official acts.

NEW PRESIDENT OF VENEZUELA.

WHEAT CROP ESTIMATE.

Figures on Threshing Returns Indicate a Yield of 589,000,000 Bushels.

The Orange Judd Farmer, in its final estimate of the year's wheat crop, says that figures based on actual threshing returns indicate a total yield of 589,000,000 bushels, of which 373,630,000 is winter and 215,470,000 bushels spring wheat. With the exception of Illinois and Missouri, the winter wheat yield represents the full capacity of the soil. The spring wheat yield in Minnesota and the Dakotas has proven a disappointment, the aggregate being only 129,000,000 bushels. The shortage there is in a measure counterbalanced by the good yield in Nebraska, Oregon and Washington. The report says the corn crop is exceedingly disappointing at an outside estimate of 1,750,000,000 bushels. Drought during the past two months reduced the average condition from 82.3 a month ago to 78.9 on Oct. 1. An average of oats yield of 28.7 bushels per acre suggests a crop of 814,000,000 bushels, 100,000,000 more than last year.

GIRLS DIE IN A FIRE.

Burning of a Dormitory at the South Dakota Industrial School.

At Plankinton, S. D., seven persons are dead as the result of a fire which destroyed the girls' dormitory at the State industrial school between 12 and 1 o'clock Wednesday morning. All others, numbering about twenty-five, succeeded in escaping, but they saved nothing, and had no time to dress, getting out in their night robes and with great difficulty. The origin of the fire is unknown, but it is supposed to have caught from the explosion of a lamp. The loss is about $25,000, and includes the printing office of the institution and the chapel.

All were asleep and the building was enveloped in flames before any one discovered the danger. The State school now accommodates about 100 inmates, from young children to offenders 18 years old. Besides the burned building is a boys' cottage, in which dwells Col. Ainsworth, the officer in charge, and there are several barns and sheds. The burned building will probably be replaced at once. It was a three-story frame structure, only recently completed. The night watchman, who went from building to building, discovered the fire.

There is no fire protection at the school, as it is a mile and a half from town, and within twenty minutes from the discovery of the fire the building had fallen. Superintendent Ainsworth was in Illinois at the time, but Mrs. Ainsworth had the help of the entire town. Those who perished in the flames got out of the building, but returned for clothing, and it is supposed they became bewildered. There was no insurance whatever on the building, but it is learned that it will be reconstructed at once.

FOUND HIS FORTUNE.

A Michigan Man Who Struck It Rich in Alaska.

Frank Phiscator, the Michigan man who returned to San Francisco with his pockets full of gold and millions staked out for the future, is just the sort of a boy that likes the life of the mountain and the wilderness. His father died twenty-five years ago, and his mother passed away ten years ago. Frank "lit out" for the boundless West when he was 10 years old. He longed for room to move about, and Michigan was overpopulated. He drifted to Yellowstone Park. He took to horseback riding naturally, and was soon engaged carrying the mail over a sixty-mile route. He liked the work and enjoyed himself as he put away his salary. This sort of life gave him muscles as hard as rock and as strong as steel. He won health and fortune out of his work. About eighteen months ago he returned to his home in Michigan and amazed his town folk with his Western ways and his display of wealth. It was said that he had then about $3,000. Phiscator heard about the mines in Alaska and he struck out for the Yukon. There he met with F. W. Cobb, a Harvard man who had been knocking about the West for two years, and who went to Alaska for gold. Cobb and Phiscator became partners. The Michigan man worked up the Klondyke while Cobb followed Bonanza Creek until he struck the field to which he later gave the name of Eldorado. He turned back, found his partner, and the two staked out claims that are now said to be worth millions. Phiscator is 35. He is now in 'Frisco.

FRANK PHISCATOR.

PANIC AT A BIG FIRE.

Residents of Chicago Stock Yards District Terrorized by Flames.

Ten acres of ground a waste of ashes, the homes of a dozen families destroyed, the entire Chicago stock yards district threatened by flames, five persons injured and one said to be burned to death, and a property loss of over $80,000. This is the result of a fire that for two hours Wednesday afternoon had the people living near the stock yards in a panic of terror that led them to believe that the great conflagration of 1871 was to be duplicated almost on its twenty-sixth anniversary.

The flames were first seen in one of the stock yards horse barns, just opposite the end of Forty-fourth street at Halsted, a little before 3 o'clock. They spread with startling rapidity. The attendants who rushed to the rescue of the 500 horses being kept there were chased from stable to stable by the flames, and their duty was only accomplished at the imminent risk of their lives. In fifteen minutes it was evident that the horse barns were doomed beyond any possibility of salvation. In thirty minutes their destruction was so nearly complete that their frameworks had disappeared and nothing but a mass of flames and fire marked their location.

The whole region was in a panic and men came hastily from every side to aid the firemen in their struggle to save the surrounding buildings. The wind that blew strongly from the south carried the flames and burning pieces of timber directly upon the great doomed pavilion, which is the center of the whole horse traffic in the yards. At 5:30 o'clock the flames finally were got under control.

The fire was the worst that has taken place in the stock yards district for many years. The drought of the past months and the heavy wind that was blowing combined to make its progress very easy. The firemen, who were called from all parts of the city to fight it, came exhausted from hard work in keeping down the prairie fires that had been threatening the suburbs in half a dozen places, and were in poor condition to work against a holocaust.

KING CHRISTIAN.

Aged Monarch Who Recently Received Severe Injuries.

King Christian, the aged monarch of Denmark, who received painful injuries while ascending the spiral staircase to the beacon light at the Mittelgrunde fortress a few days ago, is still suffering a great deal. He is now staying at Bernstorff in the island of Seeland, where his physicians are giving him very careful attention. King Christian was born April 8, 1818. He is the fourth son of the late Duke Wilhelm of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Glucksburg and of Princess Louise of Hesse-Cassel. He was appointed to the succession of the crown of Denmark by the treaty of London, May 8, 1852, and by the Danish law of succession, July 3, 1853. He succeeded to the throne on the death of King Frederick VII., Nov. 15, 1863. In 1842 he married Queen Louise, who was born Sept. 7, 1817, and who is a daughter of Landgrave Wilhelm of Hesse-Cassel.

FIERCE FLAMES IN DETROIT.

Opera House and Two Business Houses Are in Utter Ruins.

The center of Detroit was the scene at 1 o'clock Wednesday morning of a conflagration which totally destroyed three large buildings and contents, damaged several others and threatened the destruction of at least an entire block of the most valuable property in the city.

The blaze originated on the stage of the Detroit opera house. Simultaneously with the breaking out of the fire there were several loud explosions, presumably the bursting of the stage lighting apparatus. The flames quickly enveloped the rear of the theater and made a furnace of the interior. The opera house, with all its contents, was destroyed in short order. The rear of the ten-story building occupied by the H. Leonard Furniture Company caught fire and nothing of the structure or contents remains but the steel frame. The four-story building of the Michel Table Supply Company east of the theater was gutted and partially destroyed, and several other buildings were slightly damaged. The losses, it is believed, will reach the vicinity of $250,000. A block of tenement houses at the foot of Hastings street caught fire from sparks from the opera house fire and were destroyed.

Mint Breaks Its Record.

The United States mint in Philadelphia completed the greatest coinage in one month in its history. The total number of pieces turned out was 14,000,000, although only 12,128,841 pieces, valued at $3,370,449.50, were United States coins. The coiner's statement for September is as follows:

Gold	$2,292,375 00
Silver	846,092 50
Five cents	184,092 00
Cents	47,472 00

Attendance Over a Million.

For the month of September the attendance at the Nashville exposition amounted to 273,724 and the total attendance since the opening up to Oct. 1 is 1,196,685.

INDIANA INCIDENTS.

RECORD OF EVENTS OF THE PAST WEEK.

An Important Document Recovered—Burned the Editor's New House—Grew Corn from Old Seed—Suicide at Muncie.

Sustains the Glass-Cutters.

Ten years ago the original articles of amalgamation of the blowers, gatherers, cutters and flatteners into the Window Glass Workers' National Association were stolen and have been missing ever since. The present division, which has resulted in the cutters and flatteners withdrawing from the original organization and asking for a receiver, is on the question of the equalization of wages, the blowers demanding 15 per cent more increase than they will allow the cutters and flatteners. By strategy the cutters secured the articles of agreement and they are now held in Anderson. Section 1 sustains them, as it states all agree to profit or lose equally in advance and reduction. This paper will place the $200,000 in the treasury in their hands. All window glass plants are tied up by this complication.

Breaks His Silence.

A record-breaking fake was exploded at Anderson when John Shipley was convicted in the Circuit Court and sentenced to a year in the penitentiary for highway robbery. He pretended to be deaf and dumb and did not speak a word during his fight with the officers. When his case came to trial he appealed to the Epworth League to help a poor deaf and dumb man, who was falsely accused. The league did so. At the trial Shipley gave his testimony in writing. Up to the time the jury returned a verdict, twenty-nine days from the time of his arrest, Shipley had not betrayed himself. When sentence was pronounced and he had read it, he nodded his head, smiled and left the court room. When he reached the court house steps he opened his mouth, and in English, French, German, Spanish and a half-dozen other languages swore at everyone in sight.

Five Years for Attempted Murder.

At Rochester, Elijah Campbell was found guilty of attempting to murder William Blackburn and wife, and was sentenced for five years in the penitentiary. The Blackburns are over 70 years of age and hold a life estate in a farm owned by Campbell. The night of July 31 Campbell went to the old people's home and built a fire against the house, and when they were awakened he fired a load of buckshot into the bedroom.

Enlarging Their Capacity.

The American tin plate factory at Elwood has begun the construction of two new hot mills, which makes twenty mills all told. An additional bar mill and annealing room are also being erected. The McCloy lamp chimney factory, Elwood's last idle industry, has resumed operations with 500 employes.

Corn from Prehistoric Seed.

Mrs. Jennie Y. Bean of Charlestown has raised several ears of corn grown from some of the prehistoric grains of corn found in a mound in Arizona a couple of years ago. The ears of corn raised are of ordinary size and the grains a dirty brown color. The stalks average about two ears each.

Great anxiety is felt over the mysterious disappearance of Patrick M. Trammell, a leading and wealthy citizen of Huntington. Trammell had a roll of money with him.

The Indiana iron works at Muncie was scorched. Quick work by the firemen prevented heavy loss. The blaze originated in the blacksmith shop department and several hundred dollars' damage was done.

The Pennsylvania railroad broke its record between Louisville and Indianapolis. The train left Louisville at 2 p. m. and reached Indianapolis at 4:08 p. m., a distance of 106 miles in 101 minutes. Five full stops and two slow-downs were made.

Out of the little bed into the big bed,
Softly, softly he goes,
But where he would rather lay his head
Baby knows.

By night his bed is on my breast,
My baby all blond, all white,
His dainty body lies at rest,
Soft cradled there by night.

Whose is the little bed so white?
'Tis his, my lily, my rose!
And when too quickly flees the night
Into it he goes.

Out of the big bed into the little bed,
Softly, softly he goes,
But where she would rather have his head

HOW HE WON HER.

The poor tutor was alone with her; and though it was in the days when men fought hard battles even against their own kinsmen, if they so thought it was for the right, his heart throbbed just as the tutor's heart might throb today, with the difference that he had not learned to count its beats, as our enamored youth, 200 years wiser, have learned to do, in a self-controlled manner eminently conducive to the steadying of that obstreperous organ.

What mattered the great insurrection, the cruelties of Judge Jeffries and a fugitive patron with a price upon his head when love had sought shelter in his heart, and she to whom he had built a shrine was just as far away from him as the width of a table.

Of what consequence that she was the Lady Gertrude, the daughter of a noble conspirator and he but the tutor without land or wealth! So he continued his story, looking at his book as though he were reading therefrom.

"And the poor man loved the rich lady and he dared not tell her of his love lest she should scorn him."

"Then surely he was fearful at a nothing, which, methinks, means he was a coward, Master Humphrey."

"A coward, if 'twere cowardly to fear the anger of his lady——"

"Why should he expect such anger?"

"He had naught to offer her but his love."

"Love were wealth enough! But I am tired of your story. 'Tis not so good as you are wont to tell, Master Humphrey; and 'tis out last lesson," she added very gently.

"You will not miss the lessons?"

"No, not my lessons, only the stories—I have loved some of them."

And she moved restlessly in her seat as if she would say more, yet could not find the words.

"But surely my father should be here even now," she murmured at last.

The poor tutor turned pale. "You will go with him to Holland?" he said.

"It would be too great a risk to accompany him, but I follow to-morrow if all succeeds as we have planned. Ah, if they should take him. They have killed the Duke. Why are they not satisfied. Poor Monmouth!"

"They will not take him."

"Now at the last moment I am terrified lest things should not go well. Look at the time! He may be here at any moment. Indeed, he should be here now!"

Then Lady Gertrude rose hastily, and stood—tall even as the young tutor, by her side—with a look of eager impatience on her fair face.

"Not yet time, I think," said he. "To cross the marshes on foot needs indeed an hour."

So they stood irresolute, each with heart for one another and thoughts for the absent fugitive.

"There are learned men in Holland, I am told," stammered the young man, irrelevantly.

"It is so rumored; yet not more than that, there would still be room for another, I am sure, Master Humphrey!"

Which pretty speech nigh overpowered the equanimity of Master Humphrey and threw him into a discourteous silence like enough to pique his noble pupil, who, indeed, felt she had made too bold and had lacked in modesty, since he would vouchsafe no answer.

"Continue your story, sir," she said, with marked coldness. "I have no mind for lessons just now."

"There is no more to tell, my lady," he said.

"'Twas about a poor man."

"Nay, do not challenge him; for he hath an idea 'twere better to be poor-spirited than false-hearted."

"Why should he be either?"

"Were it not a mean thing to harass an unprotected lady and false to betray the trust of her noble parent, his patron, when he was absent risking his life for his country?"

"To harass her would be wrong, sir; to betray a trust a worse wrong; yet I cannot see that, if he loved the lady well, he would be doing either of these things."

"Madam, were I, your humble tutor, the poor man, would you still so reason?"

"Were you that man, Master Humphrey, I could not be sorry for the lady."

"'Tis a fair answer; I crave your pardon! Shall we continue the translation?"

"Were you the man, in truth, I should be sorry for the lady to have so inconstant a lover."

"Inconstant, madam?"

"Who will make you love, wherever he may find a ready listener, though in covert language that shames him from a declaration. Pray, Master Humphrey, if it be as you declare, that you are this man, convey my sympathies to the lady!"

Now the tutor rose in wrath, and would have gone his way, for without doubt his mistress was making sport of him, but the sound of faint footsteps from behind the paneled wall arrested his attention, and he stood still, considering whether 'twere best to go or stay.

"It is my father!" cried the girl, aware that he alone knew the secret passage.

Then Master Humphrey saw a look of joyful relief rise to her pretty face, and he remembered how brave she had been, how good and noble and fair she was, and how miserable a worm was he, and so lifted his head in the pride of humiliation, as humble-minded folk are wont to do, in such manner that the Lady Gertrude found him as beautiful and arrogant as a king, for all his shabby clothes and slight stature.

"I may not see you again; he will cross to-day—I to-morrow," she said, in sudden haste.

"God be with you!" answered the tutor, and he bowed low.

* * * * * * *

The fugitive noble stood in the shadow of the open paneling, and the Lady Gertrude, full of apprehension that he should stay too long, strained her ear to catch any ominous sounds from without and drank in eagerly the detailed plans he slowly explained of his own escape to Holland, and her journey hither on the morrow by another route.

When he ended there was a little silence between them, as with those whose hearts are too full to speak. It was speedily broken, however, by a loud ringing of the great bell, which reverberated from the deserted courtyard below through the house. The girl hastened to the casement window and looked quickly out.

"There are armed men," she said. "They have traced you here."

"Wary hounds," he murmured, with a look of grim humor—"to the hole, but not within. Twenty minutes and I shall be beyond the most cunning ferret's scent. God be with you, little daughter! Keep them dallying here a while. Remember to-morrow at Ballam bridge by nightfall!"

The panel fell back and the Lady Gertrude sat down to her books and made much pretense of mumbling to herself as the old doorkeeper, scare-stricken and panting, tumbled into the room with an officer of the king's service on his heels. "Soldiers," said he.

"And, good Oliver, what is their will?" said she, not deigning to raise her eyes from her book.

"No harm to so fair a hostess!" exclaimed the intruder.

Whereupon the Lady Gertrude slowly lifted her pretty head and scanned the uncomely countenance and fat proportions of the officer with much deliberation.

"Should fairness diminish harm, sir, 'twere a pity there were no more of the quality among his Majesty's servants."

"A truce, fair one, to a war of words. I am here to crave your hospitality whilst waiting for the presence of one who, I am informed, purposes to visit his daughter between the time of noon and midnight. You start! 'Tis now hardly noon. We demand to know in the king's name at what precise hour that interview is to take place."

"Sir!"

"'Twere well, madam, to save that pretty head; for those who wilfully harbor the treacherous Monmouth's followers can receive no clemency from his most gracious Majesty, King James. Their life is forfeit, man or woman."

"Sir," said Lady Gertrude, after some moments of seeming fearful deliberation, "I await my lord, my father, here within an hour from now; and may God curse you for a coward!"

The fat soldier grinned. The lady's bark was not loud enough, but her bite was, indeed, most easily averted with a threatening whip, as was the way with women; so he sat his broad person down and did all that which he thought would beguile so pretty a shrew from her fretful humor.

Full three-quarters of an hour thus passed, when news was brought by a breathless soldier that the Earl of W—— had boarded a frigate not fifteen minutes since, and—as was related in all seriousness—had doffed his hat in acknowledgment of the fiery salute from shore.

Whereupon the fat soldier got up in a fearful rage, and kicked and swore, as only a gentleman soldier knows well how to do, and snarled aloud that nothing should save the cunning jade from the lively fate of Mistress Gaunt, who, indeed, was burned to death for a lesser misdemeanor.

But the Lady Gertrude lifted up her proud head and said:

"Even so, I shall deem my father's life most cheaply bought, sir."

And she walked out between the file of armed men, who, indeed, were sorry for so brave and fair a creature, taken thus roughly a prisoner.

* * * * * * *

The poor tutor sat over his books in the upper room of a small dwelling house, and wrestled with his thoughts till he knew not which was conscience and which the devil, most plaguing him; for the Lady Gertrude had said that love was wealth, yet his rooms betrayed no signs thereof.

He had a little piece of land not very far away, from which he acquired a small income; yet withal these things could in nowise be counted riches.

Indeed, no, thought he, then hurried footsteps upon the stair became confused with his wandering fancies, and ere he had time to weigh the matter, Lady Gertrude stood before him.

And then something of a sweet shyness came over her, so that all in a great hurry she set to explaining how she had been taken prisoner by the irate colonel, and how, indeed, she had escaped through the help of a cousin among the officers, who, she avowed, had once cared greatly for her.

Then the boy and the girl, for they were not much else, looked into one another's eyes, as they had looked these past days during the lessons he had set out to teach her; and now there was no table between them, so that he knelt down and, taking both her little white hands in his, he covered them with humble kisses, which the lady seemed to have no desire to resent.

"So, after all, Master Humphrey, you must needs take care of your pupil still a little while longer. To-morrow at Ballam bridge at nightfall there will be those waiting to conduct me to Holland, where I think, sir, you told me you had a mind to follow in search of further learning. Yet till then I must remain a prisoner here, for fear of my very life," she laughed.

Now, hardly had she spoke than a clamor without sent the blood from his cheek, and fear at last into the dauntless eyes of the Lady Gertrude.

"Quick! Within!" said he, and thrust open the door of the narrow chamber and closed it upon her. Then the steady tramp of men's feet echoed upon the winding stair.

"In the king's name!" said a tall officer as he entered the room, followed by several men at arms. There was a strange look in his eyes as he met the tutor's gaze, and he faltered in his speech while repeating the common formula.

"There is no one here," answered the student deliberately.

"It is necessary the place should be searched," replied the officer, "and I must warn you that if the prisoner be found your life will be forfeited without trial, as a traitor harboring those in conspiracy against his Majesty's crown."

"There is no one here," repeated the tutor.

"Search," said the officer. He had grown pale as the poor youth, who bent with seeming indifference over his books and clung close to his chair as the men approached the little door, which opened suddenly from within, as a beautiful youth in a velvet suit, with fine lace ruffs and a mass of brown, curly hair, falling negligently about his shoulders, such as was then the fashion to affect, confronted the officer.

"What noisy matter is this?" said he haughtily. "Is there no peace even for students, who, loyal to his Majesty, claim but the quiet of their chambers to pursue the books which tell of mightier deeds than these of the internal wars of a discontented people?"

Now a look of humor crept into the officer's eyes as he bowed perhaps lower than was necessary to so young and haughty a youth.

"I am grieved to so disturb you, sir," said he. "We have been misinformed, for, apparently, the lady we seek is not here," and he turned upon his feet and departed with his men from the lowly roof of the poor tutor.

"Master Humphrey," said the beautiful youth—and his face was crimson even as the skies after the sun hath set—"you risked being hung on high, Master Humphrey, for me." And there were tears in his eyes.

Then, indeed, did nearly all Master Humphrey's fortitude depart. Lady, 'twere but a paltry thing to risk," said he, and bowed his head as one ashamed, and within himself he thought.

"Now, indeed, I cannot woo her, for 'twould be the way of a coward to thus force advantage of a maid's gratitude."

But the while he was pondering she stole up to him and he knew not how it happened, but he wooed her just the same.—Pall Mall Gazette.

WHY SUNDAY IS CHOSEN.

Most Royal Assassinations Have Occurred on the Sabbath.

Sunday seems to be a favorite day for political assassinations of Europe. The death of Canovas on this day recalls the long list of rulers who have either met death or but narrowly escaped it on the Sabbath at the hands of anarchists, communists or nihilists. The fact that in the old world Sunday is the great festival day, when the rulers go around and give their subjects an opportunity to look upon and get near them, is perhaps a sufficient explanation.

Alexander II., the Russian czar, was returning to his palace on the afternoon of Sunday, March 13, 1881, when a dynamite bomb was thrown at his carriage. The carriage was blown to pieces and Alexander died within a few hours.

President Carnot, of France, was at Lyons attending an industrial and art exhibition on Sunday, June 24, 1894. That night as he drove to a theater, Sesare Giovanni Sarilo, a young Italian anarchist, sprang upon the step of the President's carriage and plunged a knife into his abdomen. Carnot died within a few hours.

President Faure narrowly escaped death on Sunday, June 13, last. He was driving on the Bois de Boulogne to witness the Grand Prix at the Longchamps race course, when a bomb was exploded near his carriage. It was of faulty construction and hurt no one.

Two attempts have been made on the life of King Humbert of Italy on Sundays. On Sunday, March 17, 1878, Giovanni Pasanante climbed into the King's carriage in the streets of Naples and stabbed him in the thigh with a sword. The King fought back, cut his assailant on the arm and held him at bay until the police took charge of him. On Sunday, March 26, 1893, a religious fanatic named Beradi attacked King Humbert in the streets of Rome, but was captured before he did any harm.

William I. of Germany, grandfather of the present Emperor, was twice attacked by would-be assassins on Sunday. On July 14, 1861, Oscar Becker tried to shoot him, and on June 2, 1878, Dr. Nobling repeated the attempt. Nobling blew his own brains out when he saw that he had failed.—Washington Star.

Something He Forgot.

When Mr. Jenkins went to his bedroom at half past 1, it was with the determination of going to sleep, and with another determination that he would not be interviewed by Mrs. Jenkins. So, as soon as he had entered the door, and deposited his lamp upon the dressing table, he commenced his speech:

"I locked the front door. I put the chain on. I pulled the key out a little bit. The dog is inside. I put the kitten out. I emptied the drip pan of the refrigerator. The cook took the silver to bed with her. I put a cane under the knob of the back hall door. I put the fastenings over the bath-room windows. The parlor fire has coal on.

"I put the cake box back in the closet. I did not drink all the milk. It is not going to rain. Nobody gave me any message for you. I posted your letter as soon as I got to town. Your mother did not call at the office. Nobody died that we are interested in. Did not hear of a marriage or engagement. I was very busy at the office making out bills. I have hung my clothes over chair-backs. I want a new laid egg for breakfast. I think that is all, and I will now put out the light."

Mr. Jenkins felt that he had hedged against all inquiry, and a triumphant smile was upon his face as he took hold of the gas tap, and sighted a line for the bed, when he was earthquaked by the query from Mrs. Jenkins: "Why didn't you take off your hat?"

LAKE MICHIGAN'S WATERS TO OVERWHELM CHICAGO IN THREE THOUSAND YEARS.

PROF. G. K. GILBERT of the United States geological survey has found by a study of lake levels that the great lakes are slowly tilting to the southwest, and that in 3,000 years, by the present rate of rise, Lake Michigan will flood all the lowland country upon which Chicago is built and drain its overflow into the Illinois river. The learned professor has found that the country to the north of Lake Huron is steadily rising, while that in the vicinity of Chicago is as steadily sinking. He estimates that in no longer than 500 years Lake Michigan will overflow in its high stages; that in 1,000 years it will overflow at ordinary level; that in 2,000 years the western outlet will divide volume equally with the eastward flow by way of the St. Lawrence and that in 3,000 years the whole flow back from Lake Erie will be through the Chicago channel. He asserts that the lake, following a path of overflow that once before, in the last centuries of the glacial age, was its route, will course directly through Chicago, forcing what now is the Chicago river back into the valley of the drainage canal, which is but itself, according to the professor, an artificial aid for hastening what nature has already planned. Prof. Gilbert, in making his statement of facts, figures and theories, sees no hope for Chicago unless the tilt ceases as mysteriously as it has begun. He says that there is no known scientific reason for the rise responsible for the impending spill and that the upheaval, being entirely lawless, may as illogically decide within the course of 100 years or so to bend the other way. Otherwise he is sure that Chicago is doomed; that the waters of the lake will pound clear to the sand hills at Summit, undermining the sky scrapers that may intervene, converting the second city of the land into a watery mass of ruins.

LIVES A LIFE OF EXILE.

Bishop Who Has Charge of Religious Work in the Far North.

Bishop W. C. Bompas, who has charge of the work of the Anglican church in the diocese of Selkirk, in the extreme northwestern part of British America, has lived for over thirty years a life of exile that has few parallels in missionary annals. Since 1865 he has been laboring among the Indians far beyond the comforts of civilization. For twenty-three years of that time he has been a bishop, and though he has repeatedly had the opportunity to choose for his special field of work the more southern and hospitable part of the field, he has resolutely kept himself on the extreme limit. In 1865 Mr. Bompas, then a young English deacon 36 years old, presented himself for ordination to the priesthood in order that he might go out for missionary work. He was assigned to the Mackenzie River and Yukon districts. On Christmas day, 1865, he arrived at Fort Simpson, where he preached a Christmas sermon in the rude church that had already been constructed. In 1874 he was consecrated Bishop of Athabasca, and the journey to England at that time is the only break in his years of service in the Northwest which he has allowed himself. His territory was an enormous one, but he has covered it from one end to another over and over again. So continuously is he traveling and preaching that he cannot be said in any sense to have a home of his own. In 1884 his vast diocese was divided and he retained for himself the northern portion, becoming known as the Bishop of Mackenzie River. In 1890 a further division of territory was made and again Bishop Bompas chose the most outlying portion. For his tactful knowledge of the ways of the Indians and Eskimos, and for his life of continuous self-sacrifice Bishop Bompas is respected wherever known.

NEW ADJUTANT GENERAL.

General Samuel Breck, Who Succeeds General Ruggles.

Gen. Samuel Breck, who has been appointed adjutant general of the army, to succeed Gen. Ruggles, has had a distinguished career. He has had forty-two years of service, and his new honor comes to him only a few months before his retirement by operation of law. Gen. Breck was born in Middleborough, Mass., Feb. 25, 1834. He was appointed ed a cadet at the military academy July 1, 1851, and was graduated four years later and made second lieutenant of the First artillery. He joined his regiment at Fort Capron, Florida, and fought against the Seminoles. He served at Fort Moultrie, and in 1860 became principal assistant professor of geography, history and ethics at the military academy until the war broke out. He was assistant adjutant general of McDowell's division, Army of the Potomac, in the defenses of Washington. After active service in the field he was made assistant in the adjutant general's office in 1862. He was twice brevetted during the war, first as lieutenant colonel in 1864 and as colonel and brigadier general in 1865. From 1870 to 1876 he served as adjutant general of the division of the Pacific at San Francisco. He also served in the department of Dakota and the department of the Platte. He returned to Washington in 1889 to act as assistant to the adjutant general. He served as adjutant general of the department of the east from 1893 to 1895. When Gen. Miles was made commander of the army Gen. Breck was assigned to duty as adjutant general with headquarters of the army in the nation's capital.

A California Harvesting Incident.

Four young women clad in bloomers walked into the fields of Lassen County recently and asked permission to work the harvester. They were Orra Dowell, Gertie Sawyer, Lillie Dowell and Nellie Packwood. It was granted them and they proceeded to action. One of them climbed to the driver's seat and began to guide the twenty-six horses around the field, another attended to the binder, a third took charge of the sack sewing, and the fourth ran the separator. A whole morning was spent in this interesting occupation, and then, without mishaps or adventures, they tired, leaving the astonished men in possession. A harvest field is the prettiest sight in the world, with its reflections of soft yellow light from the golden grain, its mist of flying chaff and sheaves of winnowed wheat, oats or barley. Even rough, begrimed, perspiring men look picturesque in this alluring atmosphere, but when in their places pretty girls are introduced the scene becomes worthy of a Watteau.

It would be interesting to know what motives led those adventurous girls to brave the heat and discomfort of their morning's enterprise. Was it just for fun, for a lark? Or are these particular women thinking of setting out to earn their living in a novel way and wished to prove their fitness to objecting friends and relatives? Or was it just an outburst of the "zeitgeist," the spirit of the times? No one seems to know.—San Francisco Examiner.

"OLD IRONSIDES."

Gallant Battleship Constitution Now One Hundred Years Old.

"Old Ironsides" is 100 years old, and she survives the wear and tear of peace and war. Charlestown harbor, Boston, was where the launching took place. The American navy is, therefore, just a century old, for the Constitution was one of the first battleships built by the then youthful Government after it had achieved its independence.

"Old Ironsides" was one of the first trio of battleships built by the United States, and is by all odds the most famous vessel that ever floated the American flag. To survive the dangers of war and, what is sometimes more wasting, the decay of peace, through 100 years, is a record more remarkable for a ship than for a man. "Old Ironsides" deserves all the praise lavished on her in speech and song. There is no other vessel the associations of which are enwrapped with so many names familiar in our history, or can boast such a record of gallant achievements by American tars. Hull, Bainbridge, Decatur, Rodgers and Stewart were among her captains. Paul Revere furnished the brass bolts and spikes that went into her sturdy frame. Betsy Ross, "mother of the American flag," sewed the great banner of fifteen stars and fifteen stripes that floated above her when she first breasted the waves. Holmes wrote an ode to her that is familiar to every schoolboy. Lord Byron was once a guest on board and Capt. Dacres, afterward a British admiral, was entertained there as a prisoner. Her record during the war of 1812 included the capture of three first-class British frigates, 154 guns, 900 prisoners and property worth more than $1,000,000.

It was in 1794, in view of the troubles with Algiers, that President Washington and Gen. Henry Knox, Secretary of War (the navy was not then a separate department), recommended the building of a number of first-class frigates. The country was then without a single man-of-war. The few merchant vessels that had been hastily fitted out for service in the revolution had been dismantled or returned to their earlier uses. Congress was by no means a unit on the plan to establish a navy, and the bill for the building of six frigates of "not less than thirty-two guns" had a majority of only two votes in the House of Representatives.

Of the six vessels thus provided for only three were at once built. They were the Constitution, of 44 guns, 1,576 tons burden and costing $302,719, which was built at Charlestown; the United States of the same size, built at Philadelphia, and the Constellation, of 36 guns and 1,265 tons, built at Baltimore. The Constitution, with an armament that was increased to 55 guns, was more powerful than any frigate of "the Europeans."

The engagement of the Constitution and the Guerriere forms a story that we have all read and gloated over in our school histories. It was the first American victory in the war of 1812, and coming from an unexpected quarter it set the country wild with enthusiasm. When Hull and his victorious crew returned to Boston a great dinner was given to them by the citizens, and John Adams presided; Congress voted a medal to Hull and $50,000 to be divided among the officers and crew; the whole country set to singing praise of the Yankee tars.

The other exploits of the Constitution, including her escape from Admiral Brobe's squadron in a three-days' chase, her capture of the Java and later of the Cyane and Levant in a single engagement, are too familiar to require more than mention.

The past half-century has been an uneventful one for "Old Ironsides." She did duty many years as a training ship, and at the outbreak of the civil war she was anchored at Annapolis. It was feared that she would fall into the hands of the Confederates and she was towed to New York. She was afterward removed to Philedalphia, and some years ago was towed to Portsmouth, where she remained until taken back ot Charlestown for the celebration in honor of her century of existence. A plan that has been recently put forward in several quarters, and that may be adopted, is to station the old ship at Annapolis or Washington and to fit her up as a naval museum with relics of our earlier naval history. It is believed that by this means she will be assured of preservation for another hundred years, and that she will serve a useful purpose as a constant object lesson in patriotism to the younger generation of Americans.

The Bicycle for Military Use.

The bicycle corps of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry recently rode from Fort Missoula, Mont., to St. Louis, Mo., a distance of 1,900 miles. The commander of the corps has reported to the War Department that the trip required thirty-four days of actual travel, at an average rate of 6.3 miles per hour. A large part of the trip was made under trying conditions, over mountains, and on sandy or muddy roads, with an occasional fording of streams; the men living meanwhile on the regulation field and travel ration. The health of the command was excellent, and none of the soldiers were disabled; the commander thinks that the practicability of the bicycle as a means of military transportation is demonstrated.—Youth's Companion.

TAGGART ELECTED.

Thomas Taggart was yesterday elected the second time as Mayor of Indianapolis. His majority was about 4,000, in spite of the most infamous campaign made against his. But the facts are, he is an honest man and has given the city the best administration it has ever had. The rest of the democrat ticket got smaller majorities.

COUNTY PRINTING STEAL GOES ON!

Must the Tax-payers Pay $110 for the Paper on which the receipts are printed?

WHEN THE COURIER IS READY TO DO THE JOB FOR $43.35, AND THEREBY SAVE THE TAX-PAYERS $66.65.

The "Reform Editor" of the Dispatch is the party to the Steal and Mr. Hine comes in for the Blame of Double dealing.

From the housetops the Dispatch has constantly proclaimed that Burford is a thief and that the Dispatch is making lower bids to "save txapayers money." Now, how much lower is this bid than Burford's?

It is with regret that we feel called onto criticise any public officer. It does seem as if the troubles we have gone through and the exposures of various kinds of rascality that have been made, should have opened the eyes of any one. But it seems not to have had much effect. The COURIER, however, never shrinks when it has a duty to perform. It has unhesitatingly exposed alike, the shortcomings of both democratic and republican officials. In the case of the democratic officials, the results have been very satisfactory. But it appears that republican officials are still allowed to go on making mistakes that are costly to the taxpayers.

So much for an introduction to a true story we now have to relate, the story of a new steal, or rather the old Burford steal, with variations. And in this case, the "reform" editor of the Dispatch is the party who profits by the steal and the new treasurer, Mr. Hine, comes in for the blame of double dealing and incompetency. But to the story.

One day of the week before the Carnival, while the COURIER reporter was standing at the north side of the court house, watching the men at work on the stage that was going up there. Treasurer Hine, rapped on his window and asked the reporter to come in, which he did, and Mr. Hine then informed him that he was going to receive bids for making the tax receipts for the coming year. This would include the printing, numbering and binding into books of the nearly 12,000 tax receipts to be used in 1898. Take notice, this job was not sought by the COURIER. We did not even know that it was to be let. It is the first time we have known any officer to let it be known that he was going to get the tax receipts printed. The work was always given to foreign parties and the home printers were never consulted. So we were at once impressed with the good intentions of the treasurer especially when he carried the idea that he was going to take bids openly from from democrats and republicans. He said he wanted the COURIER to figure on the job with the rest, as he was going to give it to the lowest bidder. But he added, he was not going to let it till next week, so as to give all an ample chance to prepare bids. The next week, however, was Carnival week, and one day that week, the COURIER man saw him again and asked if he was ready to let that job. He said he was not, as there was too much going on, and he would not let it till the next week. So the next Tuesday, Sept. 28, the COURIER man went to him and asked again, when he again said he was not ready, but would be the next week, which would be this present week. And he assured the COURIER that he would notify us in time to get our bid in on equal terms with the rest. But it seems now, that all the delay on his part was to give the Dispatch and Waterloo Press a good chance to bid back and forth, and that at no time did he expect to give the COURIER a chance. For on Wednesday of this week, Oct. 6, he came to this office, to get a notice published, and we asked him when those bids ought to be put in. He informed us that the job had been let and was closed up. He said the Dispatch and Press had been figuring back and forth on it, and when he found they had got it down to what he thought fair, he let the Dispatch have it. Now for the comments.

The COURIER bid was all ready and had been carried around for a week or two, the delay being caused by a desire to get prices from other establishments as we were in correspondence with several printing houses, and wanted to get the lowest. But had not the treasurer plainly informed us that he would notify us in time to get our bid in, we would have put in the one we had ready a week or two before. Had we been given a chance on equal terms with the two republican papers, we would have saved the county a big sum of money. But now appears, there was no intention of giving us this chance.

To give our readers a better knowledge of this deal we give here, Burford's charge for last year, and the three bids of this year, that is, the bids of the Press, the Dispatch, and the one the COURIER would have made if given a chance, and which it had as already said prepared.

Burford's last bill	$114.39
Press' bid	$123.00
Dispatch's bid (accepted)	$110.00
COURIER'S bid	$43.35

Now let the public judge as to this shady affair. Let the commissioners take this bill and cut it down to a proper figure.

It all goes to show what we have repeatedly said of the apostle of reform that sets up aloft in the Dispatch sanctum and keeps calling out "I am holier than thou." We have said that above all men, such a "reformer" would bear watching. From the house tops it has constantly proclaimed that Burford is a thief and that the Dispatch is making tower bids to "save the taxpayers money." Now, how much lower is this bid than Burford's? Just $4.36! How much would the Press' bid have saved, over and above Burford's? Nothing. It was $10.91 higher! How much would have been saved had not the COURIER been cheated out of the chance to put in a bid? Our bid would have saved over Barford's of last year $71 04. It was $79.61 lower than the bid made by the Press. It was $66.65 lower than the bid of the Dispatch which was accepted. In other words the work could have been done at about but little over one-third of what the county will be called on to pay.

Burford's bills have been downright steals for many years. But will the Dispatch's steals be any more palatable from being made in the name of the false "reformer?"

The Dispatch has evidently abandoned the reform business, as its columns this week are silent. Perhaps it has concluded it is more sensible to follow Burford's plan, and get a big price, wax rich off the taxpayers, build a four stery business house, on the highest priced streets in Indianapolis, and let the taxpayers go to the dogs. In any case the fine fabric the Dispatch has been laboring to erect, has fallen, and great was the fall thereof for it was built on the sand. We have been informed that the boasted plans of the Dispatch, to get county work from the republican officials amounts to just this: He can find out from the officer, the size of Burford's steal, and then by bidding a trifle less, the Dispatch gets it. Then it goes into a rapture in a public article and tells how much the Dispatch and the republican officer has saved the people. Notice tax receipts as a proof. The Press bid was higher than Burford's and the officer would get no glory by letting him have the job. But after figuring back and forth and it was found that the Dispatch could take it for a trifle less, it was given to the Dispatch. And then the Dispatch could call attention to the little $4.39 it had, by the help of a republican officer, saved to the taxpayers. But of course it says nothing of the excessive charge of $66.65 it still makes on the job.

We suppose they will try to get out of this by saying the work cannot be done for $43.35. But our offer is still good. Let them try us and see.

DOUBLE MAIL SERVICE.

The Lake Shore, Jackson Branch, will soon put on double mail service. Heretofore the forenoon south bound train and noon north bound have had a postal car and clerk. As soon as they can get ready now, the south bound afternoon and north bound evening trains will have a postal car and clerk and be regular mail trains. This is an important and very valuable change. It will be a great advantage to this and all other towns along the line. Angola will be especially benefited.

COURT.

Work went off at a lively rate last last week. We note the following:

The case against the two girls arrested at Corunna for profanity and cruelty to animals is dropped, and they go free. We suppose the reason is because they have already been sufficiently punished by imprisonment while waiting till court set.

Decker, also, who was arrested for forgery, has been released, it not being proved against him.

The conspiracy case vs. Borst, Dills, McIntosh, Sawvel, the two Fairs and Hook, has been called up. Mr. McIntosh gave bond of $1,000 for appearance. The case will be brought up about November 1.

The case against Harry Martin, Geo. H. Reed and the three men who cannot be found, but are put down on the docket as John Smith, "Peter Smith and James Smith, whose real names are unknown," has been called. Martin and Reed pleaded not guilty, and Welsheimer is appointed to defend them when they come to trial. It is on a charge of burglarizing Leonard Hartman's house in Fairfield.

The men arrested at Garrett on the charge of burglary and larceny have been called up. They plead not guilty and Welsheimer will have to defend them. They give the names of Thos. Conway, Harry McCarty, Thos. Davis, Tim O'Brien, Peter H. Clark, Wm. Brennan and Thos. Murray.

CIVIL DOCKET.

Judge Penfield resigns as commissioner in the matter of Cora B. Hale vs Flossie Osburn and her guardian Phil Noel. His report was accepted and $50 allowed him for services. Howard Mountz is appointed in his place and gave bonds of $1000.

The case of Kary Pence vs Chas. T. Rogers and J. P. Grimmens, receiver. The receiver files a petition to sell certain property. This was granted and he was instruted to give 30 days notice in the Waterloo Press, the Auburn, Dispatch and the Garrett Clipper at a total expense of not over $6.

The divorce case between John and Ella Blaney was dismissed.

The case of Gertie Schomberg vs Will Denison has been dismissed.

Several cases involving the settlement of the Sheets estate have come up, but not finished.

Of divorce cases, we note, that Laura has been divorced from Alexander Sutley; Emma Earl from Wm Earl, and takes her maiden name of Emma Letsinger; David and Amanda Saunders have been granted a divorce, and Mary Barnes from George H. Barnes.

The trial jury came in Monday. One of them, Peter Reinhart is sick and could not come.

On Monday, the case of Conway vs Fidelity Co. was continued.

The Brewing Co. vs Tarney, withdrawn from jury for trial by court.

TUESDAY.

The trial of the six hoboes who were captured at Garrett, while stealing Gettel's goods from cars, started up today. There were six of them, the seventh, Conway, preferred to be tried separately. The yard men at Garrett testified to seeing the trouble, saw the hoboes scatter, throw away the goods, and saw Marshal Schreiner chase them into the swamp and capture a part of them. The marshal, when he took the stand, identified the men, and told the story of the capture. There were other witnesses to this and as to finding the car broken open and seeing the men carrying a box of tobacco. The trial is still going on. The next case after this is Zimmerman vs Howey et for tomorrow.

Judge Roby has made a new rule in regard to the pay of court stenographer. The county will pay him as heretofore, but the amount will be charged up to the parties in litsgation, with the other costs they have to pay, and when such costs are paid, all that for stenographer goes to the county, to reimburse it so far.

The six prisoners captured at Garrett and on trial; seemed like a happy family. Six strong healthy, but rather tough looking young men sitting in a row and watching the witnesses who may send them to prison. When they go back forth to the jail, Sheriff Stroh handcuffs and takes two, Deputy Platter, two more, and Henry West two more. They make quite a procession.

On Tuesday afternoon after the witness for the state had got through, the defense, began, Mr. Welsheimer, had five the men sworn, but the sixth. Murray, had turned states evidence and had given away a part of the facts of the gang. Prosecutor Davis, assisted by J. E. Rose had in charge the state's side of the case. It is difficult to prove a case like this where half a dozen men, looking at first much alike, are charged with a crime. It is hard for a witness to tell which for instance, was carrying off the tobacco, and which man was arrested at a given time or place.

The prisoners were put on the stand by the defense and each swore to a story unlike that shown by the state. They all gave the lie to Murray the man who had given them away, and sometimes they accused each other of false swearing. They are a pretty bad lot, the most of them. Thomas Davis is the toughest looking. He is the man who fought so when arrested by Marshal Schreiner.

Peter H. Clark was called first. Says his home is in Allen Co., and refused to tell where his folks lived there, as he did not want them to know of the trouble. He and Murray were arrested in a saloon but he did not steal the tobacco. Saw it standing near where he was caught. Had only got to Garrett that morning. Had been out in the woods "camp" with the other hoboes.

McCarty swore that he was searched when arrested and his revolver taken, but he had no tobacco. (All are accused of breaking into a car and getting some boxes of tobacco belonging to Gettel at Altona.) Has a sister, Mrs. Frank Smith, 7 miles east of Fort Wayne. He owned that when arrested he had a watch. It was in his coat on his arm, and was jerked out, but he did not throw it away. (This was the watch taken from Howard McCord's a night or two before when they broke in there and at several other places.) He said the watch had been given him by a man to go up town and pawn for beer. He was going there when caught.

Wm. Brenuan wasat the "camp" all night. Had a few plugs of the tobacco, Murray gave to me. I went to take it up town a Murray requested, as he said he wanted to send it to friends in Michigan. When marshal chased me I threw it away, as it was so heavy I could not run.

Thomas O'Brien, the most intelligent looking one, home is in England. Came here last spring. Worked in coal mines at Brazil, Ind., till they struck. Has money part of time yet, but pays no fare on trains. He has only to show his "union" card, and they let him take a box car free, knew nothing of the tobacco or cigars.

Thomas J. Davis, the head hobo, claims he sold spectacles, and was trying to sell a pair in the saloon when arrested. He had raised some money that way. Was one of those who had carried beer to the "camp" the night before. Got a small keg for $1. All gathered in groups, 20 or 30 men in all, and drank the beer, till a late hour.

It appears by all their stories, that as soon as they came in on a freight and saw the camp fire in the woods they jumped off and joined the crowd. All got drunk. But they had bought also, meat and potatoes and cooked them. Several who joined after they had begun to drink beer, offered to help pay, as they did not want to be dead beats.

After these fellows got through, court adjourned till after supper, when the lawyers were to plead. But after supper, Aldrich one of the jurors was sick, and so the court adjourned till this morning.

This morning, Wednesday, the pleadings closed about 11 and after the charge, the jury returned, and were out when the Weekly closed.

Monday's Daily.

Special services were held at the M. E. church Sunday, the occasion being "old people's day," The church was beautifully decorated with autumn leaves and sheaves of wheat and oats, representing the ripened grain, or old age. The services were conducted the old fashioned way. Rev. Welch, a former pastor of the church and a man who has given the best of his life to the cause, and whose hair is as white as the driven snow, was present and delivered the forenoon sermon. Then Rev. Meese, who for more that forty years has worshiped with the congregation, conducted an old fashioned class meeting. Some of the old time songs were sung and testimonies given by those of tender years. This service originated with the members of the Junior League, and they sent out carriages and brought those to church who could not get there otherwise, Mrs. Shull, who resides with her son-in-law Fremont Smith below the Junction, and J. R. Cosper, both of whom are over eighty years of age, gave testimony in honor of their Savior. Mrs. Shull speaks in a very low tone of voice and Mr. Cosper can scarcely speak above a whisper, yet they were anxious to participate in this meeting. They certainly will find comfort in these words of the poet:

"E'en down old age all my people shall prove My sovereign, eteral, unchangeable love
And when hoary hairs shall their temples adorn,
Like lambs they shall still in my bosom be borne.
"The soul that on Jesus hath leaned for repose,
I will not, I will not desert to his foes;
That soul, though all hell should endeavor to shake,
I'll never, no never, no never forsake!"

KINDLY REMEMBERED.

One week ago last Sunday, it was announced in the Lutheran church, that on the following Saturday, Oct. 9th, the members of the church would make their pastor, J. D. Brosy, a donation, as that had been their custom. Also that being his 30th birthday, when it was said that Oct. 9th was the birthday of Mr. Brosy, a lady in the congregation, not a member of the church but a good woman, thought at once of a surprise. The next morning at the breakfast table she spoke to her husband about it, and he sanctioned the movement at once. She went to work with all her might and met with more than expected success, $22.05 were given, the donors nearly all not being members of the Lutheran church. With the money thus donated, a fine antique oak book-case was purchased, and put into the parsonage while Mr. Brosy and family were taking dinner at Mr. Walborn's. Shortly after dinner Mr. Brosy returned to his home, to do some work, as Saturday is a busy day for preachers, when to his utter surprise he found this handsome piece of furniture in the parlor. He scarcely knew what to make of it at first as he was entirely ignorant of it. The case is not only handsome, but useful and convenient, and all the "Reciever" can say to the generous donors, is "Thanks," as it is impossible to express in words his appreciation of so valuable a gift. You will ever live green in his memory for your kind remembrance of him on his thirtieth birthday. In the afternoon the members of the church and other friends, came to the parsonage with baskets and armfuls until many dollars worth of useful things were brought in with smiles and good wishes beaming from their faces. After a short visit they thought that it would be in keeping with the occasion to put their pastor under the bed. They went at it in dead earnest and succeeded admirably. They seemed to enjoy it highly but not any more than did their pastor. After this transaction they presented to Mr. Brosy a liberal silver purse as tokens of their appreciation and then took their departure, all feeling that they had a good time. On Sabbath morning the young men's S. S. class presented to Mr. Brosy their teacher, another purse as tokens of their regards. To the church and young people and other friends, Mr. Brosy says "Many thanks" for your kindness and generously. The pastor of the Lutheran church feels proud that he is a citizens of Auburn. He feels that he and his family have a warm place in the hearts of many in Auburn. During his stay here of over six years, he has been the recipient of many valuable gifts from the people both in the church and out of it. Mr. Brosy and family can truly say like one of old, our lives have fallen in pleasent places. Again we say to one and all, "Many Thanks."

SAGINAW'S TURN.

Bert. Ellis, the Best Known Traveling Man in the Valley, Talks on a SUBJECT OF PUBLIC INTEREST.

SAGINAW MICH.—Mr. A. G. Ellis, of this city, is probably the best known traveling man in Michigan. Nearly every one in Saginaw Valley knows "Bert" Ellis. For twenty years he has carried his samples and good nature to his many merchant friends, who are always glad to see him. But Mr. Ellis had trouble the same as other people. Twenty years of traveling, hardly two meals in the same place, or twice in the same bed, called at all hours of the night to make the next town, smoking probably to excess, are conditions which injured Mr. Ellis's health. He became nervous, his sleep broken, and restless; his stomach troublesome; his heart's action irregular, and his entire system debilitated. In speaking recently with your correspondent, Mr. Ellis said: "As the troubles I mentioned became more aggravating I decided to use Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer. The improvement in my condition was remarkable. I was able to secure restful sleep, my nervousness was overcome, stomach trouble corrected; heart's action became regular; in fact I became as well as ever, even in the face of the fact that I still smoke and continued to travel."

Mr. Ellis's experience is similar to thousands of traveling men and others who smoke to excess and are irregular and indiscreet in diet and sleep. There can only be one result—debilitated nerves. It is equally true that there is only one successful method of correcting such conditions.—Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer.

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

He has just completed an iron napatha launch, the model of which he designed himself. He says the old seamen there are astonished at its beauty and perfection. It is of iron and contains enough bulkheads (air chambers) to carry two thousand pounds besides its own weight and machinery after it has bee filled with water. This makes a safe boat in even the worst of storms. He expects to enter into the building of metallic boats for his future employment.

THE NEW WAY.

WOMEN used to think "female diseases" could only be treated after "local examinations" by physicians. Dread of such treatment kept thousands of modest women silent about their suffering. The introduction of Wine of Cardui has now demonstrated that nine-tenths of all the cases of menstrual disorders do not require a physician's attention at all. The simple, pure taken in the privacy of a woman's own home insures quick relief and speedy cure. Women need not hesitate now. Wine of Cardui requires no humiliating examinations for its adoption. It cures any disease that comes under the head of "female troubles"—disordered menses, falling of the womb, "whites," change of life. It makes women beautiful by making them well. It keeps them young by keeping them healthy. $1.00 at the drug store.

Anecdote and Incident

So long as there are writers there will be many who will never resort to the painstaking labor of Wordsworth, as indicated in the journal of Dorothy Wordsworth: "William has come back tired; he has spent all the day in thinking of an adjective for the cuckoo."

His majesty of Siam is liberal with his orders. He recently gave an Italian painter (for painting one of his wives from a photograph) "the Grand Cross of the Siamese Crown." It is rather a large order. "This cross," said his majesty, graciously, "will entitle you to marry twelve wives; it is a distinction I seldom confer, so I hope you will soon make good use of it."

An eminent preacher, who prided himself upon his ability to discourse without the aid of notes, once got into the pulpit; but, when he found himself face to face with his congregation, his ideas vanished, his mind was a blank. He tapped his forehead, but in vain, his ideas would not come. "My friends," he said, "I pity you; you have lost a fine sermon," and he descended the pulpit steps.

Two freight engines collided near the Kentucky town of Whitlock recently. Both were pretty badly damaged, and one engineer was discharged for carelessness and disobedience of orders. The funniest thing about the matter was the answer of the disobedient engineer to the other, who asked, "Didn't you have orders to meet me at Whitlock?" "Well, d——n it, hain't I met you?" said the engineer who caused the head-on collision.

A friend of mine, says James Payn, had a colonial acquaintance who was very like a certain eminent diplomatist, and plumed himself upon it. My friend met him one evening at a reception, with ever so large a star on his breast. "Oh, come, Jack, this won't do! I don't believe there are orders of that size in the other hemisphere. Where did you get it from?" The much-decorated one smiled sweetly on him, and replied in excellent English, "I received it from my sovereign, sir; I think you are in some error. I am the —— embassador."

Conan Doyle tells a story of a friend of his who had often been told that there is a skeleton in the cupboard of every household, no matter how respectable that household may be; and he determined to put this opinion to a practical test. Selecting for the subject of his experiment a venerable archdeacon of the church, against whom the most censorious critic had never breathed a word, he went to the nearest postoffice and dispatched this telegram to the reverend gentleman: "All is discovered! Fly at once!" The archdeacon disappeared and has never been heard of since.

The Bishop of Worcester, England, once had occasion to travel through Banbury by rail. Being desirous to test and at the same time to encourage the far-famed industry of that town, he beckoned a small boy and inquired the price of the celebrated buns. "Threepence each," said the boy. The bishop thereupon handed him sixpence and desired him to bring one to the car, adding: "And with the other threepence you may buy one for yourself." The boy shortly returned, complacently munching his Banbury, and, handing the threepence in coppers to the bishop, exclaimed: "There was only one left, guv'nor."

A careless mason dropped a brick from the second story of a building on which he was at work. Leaning over the wall and glancing downward, he discovered a respectable citizen with his silk hat jammed over his eyes and ears, rising from a recumbent posture. The mason, in tones of apprehension, inquired, "Did that brick hit any one down there?" The citizen, with great difficulty extricating himself from the extinguisher into which his hat had been converted, replied, with considerable wrath, "Yes, sir, it did. It hit me." "That's right," exclaimed the mason, in tones of undisguised admiration; "noble man, I would rather have wasted a thousand bricks than have you tell me a lie about it."

Some years ago Judge Stipp, of Princeton, was pleading a damage case before the Illinois Supreme bench. A short time before the court had decided an almost similar case, in which one of the parties had lost fingers, against the injured man, saying in their decision: "The party being an attorney, his injury does not keep him from climbing those heights where fame's proud temple shines afar.'" Mr. Stipp was deep in the point of law when his remarks were interrupted by the justice who wrote the former decision, who said: "Was not this point covered in a decision a short time ago by this court?" "Yes, your honor," replied the attorney, "it was, but my client has lost his toes, and has no claws to 'climb those heights,' etc." The other justices smiled audibly and the lawyer was allowed to finish in peace.

The late Senator George, of Mississippi, was an agnostic, while his wife was deeply religious. She placed a neighboring Baptist minister on his trail, and he got no peace. Once, riding slowly home from Carrollton and reading his mail, the preacher burst out of the woods on his right hand and began. They came to a creek and crossed it. It was, in the Senator's language, "saddle-pocket deep." On the further bank he dismounted. "Git down," he said, fiercely. The minister looked at him doubtfully. He feared a personal encounter. "Git down!" He got down. "Now," said George, "I'm tired o' bein' harried around th' kentry like I was a cotton-tail rabbit an' you was a pack o' nigger dogs. Baptize me right here." It was winter-time, but the venerable statesman would not be denied. The two men waded into the icy water up to their armpits, and the ceremony was performed. Senator George climbed into his saddle and looked down on the shivering evangelist. "Now," he said, "you go home and stay home. I'm through with this —— foolishness."

Real Estate in Paris.

An idea of the prevailing price of land in Paris may be gained from a list of awards to owners of property in the French capital that was taken possession of for the widening of streets. The prices given are for the land alone, this apparently being either assessed separately, or possibly seized separately, under the curious French law, which enables a town to take and pay for the land only to be used for improvements, leaving to the owner the use of the building upon it, so long as he can make it stand without repairs.

The most expensive piece of land mentioned in the assessment was one on the Rue Tiquetonne, a short and narrow street, which, however, extends directly from the postoffice to a wide street, the Rue de Turbigo. For this tract of 1,800 francs per square meter was awarded, about $33 a square foot, or $4,950 per front foot, allowing an average depth of 150 feet.

In the Rue d'Aboukir, not far off, which leads from the Grand boulevard directly to the Bank of France, only $15 a square foot was awarded, or $2,250 a front foot, averaging the depth of 150 feet. Next to that on the Rue Tiquetonne, the most valuable piece of land taken was on the Rue Herod, far off in the suburb of Auteuil, for which $27 a square foot was paid, or $4,050 a front foot, averaging the depth at 150 feet.

Among the cheaper tracts was one on the Rue du Bac, famous among the ladies as the one on which the famous Bon Marche is situated, which brought $9 a square foot, equivalent to $1,350 a front foot, with a depth of 150 feet. The cheapest lot of all in the thickly settled part of the city was one on the Chemin des Meuniers, near the park of Vincennes, and close to the vast warehouses of Bercy, for which only 36 cents a foot was paid, or $54 a front foot; while a lot on the Avenue Daumesnil, near by, the principal street of the Bercy region, brought only about $1.25 a square foot, or $187.50 a front foot.—St. Louis Republic.

SEES THROUGH HIS NOSE.

Frenchman Whose Nasal Organs Have Taken the Place of His Eyes.

A Paris paper published a few days ago an account of a man who can see through his nose. This extraordinary person, it seems, was born blind, and by systematic training has been enabled to make his nasal organ take in some measure the place of his eyes. The story was read far and wide, and it is safe to say that the majority of readers gave little credence to it. Extraordinary things are daily happening, but most of them are conceivable, and hence credible. But how is it possible for a man to see through his nose? Many asked this question and waited in vain for a satisfactory answer. If such persons, however, will look into an old book, which was printed in Nuremberg, in 1702, they will find a record of a case very similar to that recorded in the Paris journal. This book is entitled "Oculus Artificialis Teledioptricus Sine Telescopium Est," and it is the work of the distinguished German scholar, Johann Zahn. Copies of it are very rare, and the one which was consulted in the present instance was found in the University of Bologna.

The man who, according to Zahn, could see through his nose was a farmer. While he was still an infant he met with a serious accident, which resulted in the loss of his right eye. A few years later he fell from a cherry tree and lost his left eye. His nose and left cheek were terribly mangled at the same time, and it was a year before the wound was healed. When he was well enough to go out of doors the blind lad would sit in the garden and warm himself in the sun. Now one day he fancied that he saw through his nose a dim ray of light. He was naturally puzzled, but next day he noticed the same unaccountable phenomenon. Week after week and month after month he looked for this ray of light, and, strange to say, it not only never failed him, but, as time passed, it grew more constant and more potent, until at the end of five years he was able to see all objects within a reasonable distance. Here, however, is a curious fact. He was able to see all objects on the ground or in front of him, but he could not see any objects above him. Zahn vouched for the truth of these statements and said that the distinguished physician, Heinrich Spezius, was also ready to make an affidavit as to their truth. Skeptics may say that the man was shamming, but as both eyeballs were lost it is difficult to see how shamming was possible. Of course, the man may have imagined that he saw objects on the ground or in front of him, but, according to Zahn, he was subjected to tests which proved to the satisfaction of all eye witnesses that he was not imposing on them. There must be some explanation of this amazing phenomenon, and if there is really in France now a person who can see through his nose he certainly deserves to be made the subject of serious study.—New York Herald.

One on the Grocer.

They are telling a good story on my friend, the grocer, next door. The other day a woman came in and said: "I want two dozen hen's eggs. They must all be eggs laid by black hens."

The grocer said: "Madam, I am willing to accommodate you, but you have got the best of me this time. I don't know how to tell the eggs of a black hen from those of a speckled or white one."

Said she: "I can tell the difference mighty quick."

"If that is so, madam, will you kindly pick out the eggs for yourself?"

She did so, and when the two dozen were counted into her basket, the grocer looked at them, and said, suggestively: "Well, madam, it seems as though the black hens laid all the big eggs."

"Yes," said she, "that's the way you tell them."—Hardware.

CRIME THEIR TRADE.

FROM PETTY THIEVERY TO HORRIBLE MURDERS.

The Infamous Staffleback Family Ran the Gamut—Two of Them Are Under a Life Sentence, While the Mother Is Given Twenty Years.

Moral Monsters.

There may have been more wicked families in Sodom and Gomorrah of old than the Staffleback family of Galena, Kan., three of whose members have recently been found guilty of murder; but it may be doubted if a more loathsome set of people ever before existed on this continent, either in a state of civilization or savagery, than the moral monsters, the Stafflebacks, who have trafficked in every crime and vice from thievery to butchery, and two of whom, at least, will spend the remainder of their lives in prison. George and Ed Staffleback have been found guilty of murder in the first degree and sentenced to the penitentiary for life, while the mother, hoary in crime as in years—she is now 65—has been found guilty of murder in the second degree and will no doubt end her years in prison, having received a twenty-five-year sentence.

OLD NANCY STAFFLEBACK.

Nancy Staffleback has led a most remarkable career of crime and has trained her progeny to follow in her footsteps. Of her thirteen children not one has led an upright life, and not one has a trait of character to redeem, even in part, the general coarseness and criminality of their natures. She was born in Allegan County, New York. Her maiden name was Chase and her early years were spent in Wisconsin. Through her mother she inherited a strain of Wyandotte Indian blood, and perhaps this may have had something to do with the natural viciousness of her character. When a young girl she met a Swiss, Michael Staffleback, in Dubuque, Iowa. After some changes they moved to Lawrence County, Missouri, where they settled on a farm. Here they quarreled. The husband was charged by his wife and some of his children with unmentionable crimes, and the husband accused the wife of crimes equally revolting to both moral and natural laws. The result was that the husband left the neighborhood and has not since been heard from. The airing of their family differences in court had the effect of making Lawrence County too hot for Nancy and her brood, and they moved to a place known as Swindle Hill, in the town of Joplin, Jasper County. It was a fit abode for such characters.

Here congregated the degraded of both sexes, women who had forgotten the meaning of decency and men who were practiced in every crime. A man's life was not safe in the place after dark and policemen never ventured into it singly. Here the Stafflebacks lived several years, the sons practicing thievery and other crimes, for which some of them received sentences in jail, and the girls consorting with the degraded of both sexes.

ETHEL M'COMB. ANNIE M'COMB. CORA STAFFLEBACK.
HOME OF MOTHER STAFFLEBACK AND HER DEGENERATE BROOD.

They committed one murder, at least, here, but the story of this will come later. Ultimately the vile den of the Stafflebacks was raided and two of the sons were sent to the penitentiary.

Three years ago the family moved to "Picker's Point," an unsavory place on the outskirts of Galena. They took up their abode in a long-deserted shanty, within a few rods of which were a number of deserted shafts, where some time or other men had prospected for lead or zinc. The place is a hotbed of crime. Scattered around are miserable hovels, the homes of depraved women and men. Here vice reaches a depth that decency dare not attempt to describe. Rough miners, many of them foreigners, frequent the hovels and gamble and drink and swear. Ribald revelry is often interrupted by a fight that ends in murder. Then the shafts, the silent, yawning pits of the ground, are charged with another victim, which they receive into their dark depths never to yield again. If these shafts were to-day made to give up their ghastly tenants fully fifty undiscovered murders would be revealed.

Amid such congenial surroundings the Staffleback family resumed their career of crime. At this time the family consisted of Mother Nance, Ed, George, Mike, Cora, Louisa and Emma. All these were children of the old woman except Cora, who was married to George.

The latter and Ed had a short time before been released from the penitentiary and had joined the family at "Picker's Point."

And now another man, Charles Wilson, who passed as a husband of Nancy, drifted into the gang. Two girls, Rosa Bayne and Anna McComb, also took up their abode with the Staffleback family. In their different ways these people led their criminal lives, with Mother Nance acting as the evil genius of the gang. Time and again the den in which they lived was raided and one or more was arrested for some petty offense. But the gang took this as a matter of course.

Last June, however, occurred an event that brought the Stafflebacks to grief. This was the murder of a miner, Frank Galbraith. He had gone to the Staffleback house on invitation from Emma, but the old woman had refused him admittance. He returned and then a row began. This is the story of it as given by Anna McComb, who witnessed the affair:

"I heard the row begin and stepped outside and around the corner of the log hut. The old woman grabbed her corn knife and ran Galbraith out of the house. Then Wilson and Ed got their guns and began shooting at Galbraith, who started to run down the road. Wilson fired first, but missed. Then Ed fired, and I could tell that he hit him, for Frank put his hand to his hip and fell. But he got right up again and ran on. He couldn't run very fast, and Ed ran alongside of him, put his gun to his head and fired. Frank threw his hand up to his head and fell by the side of the road. Ed took the knife from the old woman and started to finish Frank by cutting his throat. All this time me and Cora had been running along after them. I grabbed Ed by the arm and begged him not to do it. 'Let me alone, or I'll slit your throat,' he said. Then he turned and cut Galbraith's throat. The blood spurted out. The old woman took the knife and wiped it on her apron.

"I felt sick and me and Cora lay down in the weeds so that we could see them and they couldn't see us. They thought we had gone to the house. I was afraid to look until Cora whispered 'They're pulling his clothes off.' Then I looked. I saw Ed take him by the shoulders, and George took one leg and Wilson the other. They carried him to the old shaft and threw him in."

A month later the body of Galbraith was seen floating at the bottom of the shaft, and an investigation into the crime was started. Ed, George and Nancy Staffleback were arrested, tried and convicted of the murder, and an effort was made to apprehend Wilson, who was also implicated in the killing. Wilson, however, had fled and the authorities are now searching for him.

The arrest of the Stafflebacks led to other horrible disclosures. Released from the fear in which they had lived of the Stafflebacks, Cora Staffleback (George's wife) and Rosa Bayne tell stories of further murders committed by this family. Two years ago two girls took up their abode in the Staffleback house. One night in a fit of passion Mike Staffleback beat one of them into insensibility and finally death, and lest the other girl should tell of the affair she was beaten to death by Ed Staffleback. The brothers then wrapped the bodies in sheets and threw them down an abandoned shaft.

ED AND MIKE STAFFLEBACK.

A short time afterward the brothers, Mike, Ed and George, attacked and killed a peddler who was stopping over night at the house and divided his money.

Another murder of which members of the Staffleback family are guilty was that of an old soldier named Rodabaugh. Ed, Mike and a man named Billy Martin, a brother of Mike's wife, made away with him while the Stafflebacks were living in Joplin. He was killed for $35 in pension money which he was known to have on his person.

Still another murder the Stafflebacks are believed to have committed while in Joplin is that of a man named Moorhouse. Moorhouse mysteriously disappeared while there, and from conversations held between the Stafflebacks Cora Staffleback is of the opinion that the man was murdered.

Mike Staffleback is now serving a term in the penitentiary. When he is free he will be arrested for some of the murders in which he took part.

WOMEN IN BULL RINGS.

Three Females Who Butcher Bulls to Amuse the Spaniards.

American women would find it difficult to imagine one of their sex in the arena where bulls are butchered to make a Spanish holiday, but such there are. Three pets of the bull-ring in Spain are women—one a Spaniard, the other two Germans. Donna Piedros, the Spaniard, is a matador, the others are toreadors. It is the duty of Donna Piedros to finish the fierce brute after it has been tormented and wounded by the others. She is a handsome woman of 23, and has been in the bull-ring since she was 17. When first she made known her intention of entering the arena there was a howl of protest, but she persisted, and when she made her first appearance she was showered with flowers. Since then she has been in the ring once every month, and on several occasions has been more or less injured. Great danger is incurred by matadors when giving the quietus to a bull, because the savage brute generally makes a last desperate rally. In this way Donna Piedros has been face to face with death more than once.

Her two competitors are the Pretel sisters, Lola and Angelica. Pretty blondes, scarcely out of their teens, they are brilliant and daring riders. Their exploits in the bull-rings have been the themes of Spanish poets, they are the pets of the populace, and for their achievements in the arena they receive great financial reward. They were originally circus riders. Their manager, being struck with their equestrian ability, determined to make bull-fighters of them. He took them to Seville, where there is a school devoted to the fine art of killing a bull.

SPANISH WOMAN BULL FIGHTER.

There the two girls killed a stuffed bull three or four times a day until finally they were allowed to practice on a live bull. From that day they were graduated to the ring proper, and quickly won renown by their daring.

Donna Piedros wears a divided skirt when in the ring, while the Pretel sisters wear the regulation man's bull-fighting costume. The former does all her work on foot, while the latter two ride horses.

MINE VENTILATING FAN.

Efficient and Easily Operated Device for Miners' Comfort.

Electricity has been used for a great deal of mining machinery, and its applicability in ventilating coal mines has been proved to the satisfaction of the workers. The men heretofore have had to suffer great inconvenience from the bad air, and in many instances could not remain long under ground. Fans may be placed in any part of the mine, connection being readily made by means of one of the cable reels and removed as readily when no longer required. For the ventilation of the mines electric fans similar to the one shown are employed, which is of the Guibal type. The form of the vanes, construction of the arms and disposition of the braces are all designed to give the highest possible efficiency for the amount of power used in the driving.

New Brains.

The human brain is composed of at least 300,000,000 of nerve cells, each an independent organism. The lifetime of a nerve cell is estimated to be about sixty days, so that 5,000,000 die every day, about 200,000 every hour, and nearly 3,500 every minute, to be succeeded by an equal number of their progeny. Thus once in every sixty days a man has a new brain.

A Queen's Visit.

To be old and poor and bedridden is generally to be debarred from the greater privileges of life, but there was one old man in Scotland who found his disadvantages had procured him a privilege that the strong and more active members of his family were seeking in vain.

It was on an occasion when Queen Victoria was at Balmoral, and, as she often did, she went one day, unaccompanied, to visit the cottages. In one of these she found an old man, bedridden and quite alone, and she sat down to talk to him.

"And how is it you are alone?" she asked. "Have you no one to keep you company?"

"No," replied the old man, innocently, "my folks be all away seeing the Queen; they thought they might get a glimpse of her."

His visitor made no reply, but she sat with the old man, pleasantly filling the gap made by the absence of "his folks," and then found time to read to him from the Bible she herself treasured. On leaving she gave a further proof of her sympathy in the shape of a five-pound note, acompanying it with the words: "When your people come back, tell them that while they have been to see the Queen, the Queen has been to see you."

THE TURN OF LIFE

Is the most important period in a woman's existence. Owing to modern methods of living, not one woman in a thousand approaches this perfectly natural change without experiencing a train of very annoying and sometimes painful symptoms.

Those dreadful hot flashes, sending the blood surging to the heart until it seems ready to burst, and the faint feeling that follows, sometimes with chills, as if the heart were going to stop for good, are symptoms of a dangerous nervous trouble. Those hot flashes are just so many calls from nature for help. The nerves are crying out for assistance. The cry should be heeded in time. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was prepared to meet the needs of woman's system at this trying period of her life.

The Vegetable Compound is an invigorating strengthener of the female organism. It builds up the weakened nervous system and enables a woman to pass that grand change triumphantly.

It does not seem necessary for us to prove the honesty of our statements, but it is a pleasure to publish such grateful words as the following:

"I have been using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for some time during the change of life and it has been a saviour of life unto me. A LITTLE KLONDIKE.

Massachusetts Farmer Has a Gold Mine of His Own.

Massachusetts has a little Klondike. It is in Wrentham, about twenty-five miles from Boston. Farmer George J. Hittinger started it. That was some years ago, but it is only within a few days that any considerable excitement has resulted. Farmer Hittinger has discovered a deposit of rich ore, and he is working it for all it is worth, as the illustration—showing him and his mine—proves. There is capital behind him—steady, slow-going Boston capital—and the shaft will be sunk, though probably not fast enough to disturb the equipoise of the globe.

It is said that ore from the Hittinger mine assays as high as $500 a ton in silver and $50 in gold in the laboratories of Harvard College. Wrentham is much excited. Several people have already poured in; and it is said that the farmers are likely to dig up their potato patches in the search for gold.

There is no joke about this, as any one can testify who has seen one of the innumerable gold and silver mining excitements in rural New England. A man who goes hunting for gold, if he will stick to that job, can starve to death on his own farm as well as in the wilds of Alaska.

The feeling in Cape Colony over the Jameson raid still runs high. A meeting of Dutch and English farmers in a certain town not long ago was called to order in English, whereupon the Dutchmen left the room in a body.

In a raid on the tramps in the Paris parks recently the new electric lanterns provided for the police were used for the first time. The result was quite up to expectations as far as the lighting powers of the lanterns were concerned.

Pneumatic tubes have many uses, but one of the latest is attracting a great deal of attention from its novelty. This is the tube for stacking straw. It is built in sections, and is controlled by metal straps, pivots and arms. The straw is drawn into the tube, carried through it with great velocity, and by a turntable and swinging arrangement like a crane is evenly distributed on the stack.

Two members of the Colorado Legislature have been renting their annual passes on the railroads to traveling men at $15 a month apiece. In the case of one member, who has a German name, the fraud was discovered through one of his personal passes being presented by a man of palpably Hibernian nationality. The conductor could not reconcile the name and the brogue and held the man and the pass for investigation, when the fraud was discovered.

Will Tuttle of Charlestown, N. H., has a curious egg laid by one of his famous rough-and-ready Canadian hens, whose peculiarity lies in the fact that their feathers grow toward the head instead of in the opposite direction. The egg in question measures 7x8 inches, and inside the perfect yolk was another perfect egg, as large as that of a partridge, with shell as hard as that which inclosed it.

A porter at Lyons, France, was going to have his photograph taken while posing near the lion cage of a menagerie. The lion being asleep just then, the man patted the head to waken it. On withdrawing the hand he touched the bolt securing the door, and the door flew open. The lion jumped out and bit off the imprudent man's head, then he dragged the corpse back into the cage, and when "help" arrived there wasn't much left for burial.

Complaint is made that the new silver certificates, though beautiful specimens of the engraver's art, do not wear well at all and that already many of them compare ill in appearance with older and less artistic bills. It is an indubitable fact that a curiously large number of these certificates have been more or less torn in the few weeks that have elapsed since they were issued and that they show a decided tendency to break instead of becoming soft and supple with use.

NEAR TO NATURE'S HEART.

I have dwelt in the earth's lone places,
On her prairies, wild and wide,
Where the waving grass, like billows,
Ripples from side to side.

I have dwelt where the foreign monarchs
Were closely gathered near;
They have sung me the grandest anthems
E'er heard by a mortal ear.

I have dwelt where the wild waves gather
At the storm-king's trumpet cry,
And have seen them break in anger,
Tossing their white crests high.

And near and dearer ever
The earth has grown to my heart;
Alas! for she will not miss me,
When I to my place depart.

TAMPERING WITH A SIGNAL.

We were on the platform at Kings Cross. The evening train for Aberdeen was drawn up, ready for its journey.

"A fine train, sir," I said to a guard of another later train, whom I knew slightly.

"Aye, aye, sir, it is a fine train, this one. But—though I say it as shouldn't—it's not the train it was a year ago, when we used to run up against the London and Northwestern every night."

"Oh," said I, interested at once, "so you were one of the guards in that great race, were you? It must have been tremendously exciting."

"Exciting, sir! Why, I could tell you a regular story about it, that night as we ran from Kings Cross here to Newcastle without a stop. That was something like a run, wasn't it?"

"It was, indeed, and if it is not troubling you too much, I'd like to hear your story just while we are waiting to see the train off."

"I was the guard of this train on this particular night, sir. Our usual course was to run to York, without a stop, then on to Berwick, Edinburgh, Dundee and Aberdeen. Three nights before, though we had gone a large part of the distance at eighty miles an hour, the other company had beaten us by just about five minutes.

"But this night all our officials not only hoped, but had made all preparations both for beating the London and Northwestern, and also breaking the record.

"I was sitting at home the day before the eventful run was to take place, smoking my pipe and thinking deeply, when I was aroused by a sharp knock at the door. On opening it I found a tall, fair-haired geneleman of about 30, who asked smilingly if Mr. James—that's my name—was at home, and if he could see him.

"I informed him of my identity and invited him in.

"'Well, I have learned—by what means I need not say—what probably most of you on the line think is quite a secret, that there is to be a very determined attempt by your train to-morrow night to beat the record, as well as the other company's train. I thought it as well to call and ask your private opinion of the chances of success, if you would not be adverse to giving me it, on the Q. T. You have doubtless heard of B— & Co.?'

"I nodded, and he smiled again.

"'Exactly. Well, we have the offer of a bet of £2,500 to £1,500 that your train does not beat the London and Northwestern to-morrow night. I am of course inclined to accept the bet, but thought it wise just to drop in and ask your opinion first (on the strict Q. T.) as to the chances of your success. I reckon a "pony" would be very welcome, wouldn't it, for yourself, and a "tenner" for each of the others?'

"'You can depend on us to-morrow night, sir,' said I. 'We have all in readiness, and shall certainly do the trick. Why, bless you—though it's strictly private—we're going to run to Newcastle without a stop.'

"He had a drink of whisky with me, and then he rose to go. 'O, by the by,' said he, before leaving, 'there's no risk of your having to stop on the way, I suppose? I mean for foolish passengers who might get nervous at the speed and pull the communication cord, or anything of that sort? And there is no part of the rail likely to be blocked, as there was a few nights ago at Darlington, I suppose?'

"'No, I think both contingencies are very unlikely, the latter especially. The only awkward piece of this line is that between Arbroath and Montrose, where we have only a single line to work on. That necessarily is ticklish, but it'll be all right to-morrow night.'

"Amid a storm of cheers from the many spectators on the platform we set out from Kings Cross here for Aberdeen. Our train consisted of the engine and tender—our very best, I need scarcely say—with five coaches and the guard's van.

"For the first time there was no stoppage at York, through Darlington and Durham. As you know, we always felt uncertain about this piece of road between York and Newcastle, the traffic is so heavy; but on this occasion there was not the slightest need for any diminution of speed, and as we drew up at Newcastle platform for a ten-minutes' stay we were actually five minutes before any record time for this journey.

"All went well to Edinburgh, over the Forth bridge, over the Tay bridge, and through Dundee, until we began to get within measurable distance of Aberdeen. I found, on referring to my watch, that now, just before entering on the piece of single line, we were about fifteen minutes before our expected time.

"We had gone about a couple of miles when I fancied I felt a slight slackening of our speed. Before another mile was covered this was more plainly evident, and when I heard those portentous whistles of the engine I knew that the signals were against us.

"The train gradually slackened speed until it came to a dead stop at that wretched signal. As no notice was taken to our repeated whistling, I was about to go forward myself to the signal box to see what was the matter, when I saw the signalman waving a white light. He protested, in reply to my angry query, that he had signaled the line as being clear for the last half hour, but I assured him that the signal was against us.

"But though we dashed into Aberdeen with much puffing of the engine at least four minutes before our appointed time, we were too late. That miserable stoppage on the single line had killed us, and we found that the London and Northwestern train had beaten us by three minutes.

"There was, of course, an immediate inquiry into the cause of the delay, and it was found on examination that the signalman was not to blame, as the signal wires had been tampered with. Hence the signal would not work when the lever was pulled.

"The signalman recollected having seen a gentlemanly looking fellow walking near the line the day before and taking a stroll that way later in the evening, but he was not at all sure he could recognize him again.

"It was about a fortnight or so later that I received a letter from New York. I opened it, and read as follows:

"'Dear Mr. James—Thanks for your information as to which was the most ticklish portion of your line to Aberdeen, we were enabled to carry out our plan successfully. You see, we had bet that the London and Northwestern would win, not the Great Northern; and so took steps to win our wager. I am sorry you lost your promised reward—ah, ah, but there are three £25 notes inclosed, as a solatium, one for each of you, with my best thanks. You will pardon my last piece of advice, Mr James—don't, another time, give too much information to strangers.'

"Ah, there is the whistle and off she goes on her long journey to the north. The next train is mine. Good-night, sir."—London Tit-Bits.

BABY SAVED BY LIGHTNING.

Lion Killed Just as It Was Ready to Spring Upon the Child.

Lightning and blackberries come together in the coast region of Texas. The people there, as a rule, are more partial to the latter than the former. One exception to the rule exists there to-day, however, in Mrs. Pennington of Plum Creek, who says that one timely stroke of the lightning has done her more good than all the blackberries in creation could possibly accomplish. Just behind the Pennington home is a small clearing, in which the blackberries grow large and sweet and in abundance. One day Mrs. Pennington went there to pick some berries for supper, and took her little baby girl with her. The baby grew tired in a little while, and the mother arranged a bed of dry leaves for it under a sheltering sumach bush. In a few minutes the child was asleep, and the mother resumed her berry picking. It was an oppressively hot day, when the air was full of electricity and not a breath of wind stirring anywhere. A squall was coming up rapidly from the east, the lightning was showing dimly on its upper edge, but Mrs. Pennington was apparently oblivious of the approach of the storm, glad only that the baby slept so well and gave her so little trouble. But it was not the storm alone that threatened danger. At the very edge of the thicket, and only a few feet from the sleeping baby, its eyes gleaming, its head laid flat on the ground and its tail lashing its tawny sides, a huge Mexican lion was crouching ready to spring. For a moment it dug its hind paws nervously into the ground, and then it leaped into the air. It fell dead only a few inches from the sleeping baby, just as a loud peal of thunder caused Mrs. Pennington to look around for the safety of the child. The baby awoke, looked up and smiled.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Private vs. Public Opinion.

An Englishman who was traveling at the time Senor Canovas was killed, writes to the London Standard his observations of the manner in which men really spoke of the assassination: "Every paper devoted columns to denouncing the deed, commenting on the political results, and to unanimously singing the praises of the dead premier. According to the Liberal and Conservative papers alike, his efforts for Spain has been colossal, and had he lived he would speedily have ended or mended the difficulties in Cuba, the Philippines, and at home. He was an ideal man, politically and socially, and was to be the saviour of his country. During the last few days, in Seville and Madrid, I have heard the opinion of many classes of the community, and ninety per cent. of the people here state openly, in the cafe, in the streets, at the table d'hote, and in the clubs, that, far from being surprised, they wonder that Canovas was not murdered ten years ago. They speak of him as a cold-hearted despot, opposed to all measures for the improvement of the people, the prime cause of the wasted millions in Cuba, and the murderer of the thousands who have died there from famine, disease, and at the hands of the insurgents. They lay at his door the innumerable tax abuses, which lately have increased considerably."

Gems Suffer.

Gems have diseases, just as men and women have, with this difference, that the infirmities of precious stones can rarely be cured. Some gems deteriorate—grow old, in other words—and gradually become lifeless. Pearls are most subject to this fate, and no means have been found to restore them to life. Among the infirmities to which precious stones are liable is one common to all colored stones—that of fading or losing color when long exposed to light. The emerald, the sapphire, and the ruby suffer the least, their colors being as nearly permanent as colors can be, yet experiments made a few years ago in Paris and Berlin to determine the deterioration of colored gems through exposure showed that even these suffered, a ruby which had lain for two years in a shop window being perceptibly lighter in tint that its original mate, which had been kept in the darkness.

The West End.

There is one good explanation of the fact that great cities almost invariably grow towards the west. As regards Europe, the prevailing winds are from the west and southwest, so that these portions of the towns are brighter, cleaner, and healthier than the eastern.

Foundation of the Ottoman Empire.

The great Ottoman Empire, which at one time threatened the civilized world, sprang from a band of 400 wandering Turkoman families.

Dainty Work for Dainty Hands.

SAPOLIO

Some time ago a dressmaker of my acquaintance spoke with me about a mass of disfiguring pimples, very inflamed and angry looking, which had broken out on her face and around the corners of her mouth. She had been poisoned, she said, by biting off the ends of colored sewing silks used in connection with her work. The pimples had increased in size and unsightliness and had become a source of much distress and annoyance. I recommended Ripans Tabules for a trial, and for several weeks she took them three times a day according to directions. At first the Tabules proved to her, by throwing to the surface more pimples than she had originally, that her blood was badly out of order. Persevering in the use of Ripans Tabules the eruption gradually disappeared, and now not a vestige of the disorder remains. A more ardent indorser of Ripans Tabules than she it would now be hard to find. They are worth their weight in gold to any one similarly affected.

A new style packet containing TEN RIPANS TABULES in a paper carton (without glass) is now for sale at some drug stores—FOR FIVE CENTS. This low-priced sort is intended for the poor and the economical. One dozen of the five-cent cartons (120 tabules) can be had by mail by sending forty-eight cents to the RIPANS CHEMICAL COMPANY, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York—or a single carton (TEN TABULES) will be sent for five cents.

The DeKalb County Mastodon.

(Kendallville Sun.)

State Geologist Blatchley would like to secure the skeleton of the mastodon recently unearthed in DeKalb county for the state museum, but he has learned by correspondence that the farmer who found the bones will not sell them for less tham $500. All accounts agree that the skeleton is that of one of the largest mastodons that ever roamed this territory. When mounted it will be about eighteen feet long and twelve feet high. The only bones missing are those of one leg and a part of the skull. Search is still being made for them in the swamp and they may be unearthed. Only three or four of these mastodon skeletons have been found in the United States. One is in the possession of Earlham college, at Richmond.

The Cape Cod Cranberry.

(Harper's Weekly.)

One hundred barrels to an acre is a good yield, though, like all others, the cranberry crop is very uncertain, and while many fall below this figure, bogs have been known to produce one barrel to a rod, or 160 to an acre. One bog of thirty acres produced, in 1896, 3700 barrels.

The harvest begins about the 1st of September, and is the most busy time of all the year to the people living in the vicinity of the bogs. To live out of doors at this beautiful season is very pleasant, and when it means health, pleasure and profit, it calls all ages and conditions, from the baby in arms to the octogenarian with cane and spectacles; rich and poor, black and white, all are there; even the belated summer visitor is not left behind. At an early hour in the morning the pickers are astir; everybody is in a hurry; and although preparations were begun days before, there are many last things to be done before the start is made. The bogs have been "lined off" in rows, and are all ready when the pickers arrive, so the work begins at once. The berries are gathered in four and six quart measures, for each of which the picker receives a ticket when it is filled; or, some of the larger bogs employ a tally keeper. Who will get the first ticket? Each picker keeps one eye one his neighbor, and picks with all his might. It is an exciting race, with something in it for every one. The overseer (for this important personage is found on every bog) keeps a sharp watch that no berries are left in the hurry and that the measures are filled. He tells them when to begin and when to leave off, and is authority on all subjects connected with the work. No order is obeyed more promptly than "Leave off for dinner."

There are groves adjoining nearly all the bogs, and here in the shade of the trees the dinner is eaten: and how good it tastes! The hour seems a short one when the call to work is heard, but the tickets have been counted, and it is an honor to be "high," which all covet, so they are soon at work again. It is a jolly company. They talk, they laugh, they sing, they entertain visitors, but they pick all the time. But the day is drawing to its end, the sun sinks behind the trees, the dew begins to fall, and "homeward they plod their weary way," ann the village, which during the day has seemed almost deserted, is again all lite and bustle.

After the berries are all picked they are screened and the dirt and imperfect fruit removed. The small growers do this all by hand, but on the large bogs blowers and separators are used, which greatly facilitates the work. They are then packed in boxes and barrels, stamped and shipped to market.

Do You Use It?

It's the best thing for the hair under all circumstances. Just as no man by taking thought can add an inch to his stature, so no preparation can make hair. The utmost that can be done is to promote conditions favorable to growth. This is done by Ayer's Hair Vigor. It removes dandruff, cleanses the scalp, nourishes the soil in which the hair grows, and, just as a desert will blossom under rain, so bald heads grow hair, when the roots are nourished. But the roots must be there. If you wish your hair to retain its normal color, or if you wish to restore the lost tint of gray or faded hair use

Ayer's Hair Vigor.

"SIME" FELL IN.

While the fishing party were at Lake Gage this week they tried a half day's fishing on Lyme Lake a small body of water near Gage. Here it was that "Sime" got wet. Mr. Snyder was standing in the boat when a sharp turn threw him over and out in the cold, wet water.

As he rose to the surface the water dripping from his massive form, a most laughable sight was presented to the other boys. He went back to the cottage and put on Walter Hartman's undeewear and pants, (the latter turned up 18 inches) and was ready for the next hard luck act. It came. He walked miles through dense woods looking for game. The hours passed. Finally he heard a rustling. Crawling on his hands and knees over logs and brush he came to the tree in which a fox squirrel was eating hickory nuts. Like a faithful pointer he watched the spot until his companion came up and the latter motioning him to lie low, shot the squirrel.

Altogether the boys had a good time as they usually do.

FUNNYGRAPHS.

Happy Thought.—"Mother thinks she won't go to the theatre with us tonight Albert." "Is that so, I have got three tickets. What shall I do with the third one?" "Give it to the man you always go out to see between acts. He can sit with us and you won't have to go out to see him."

Carried More Sail.—"Our yacht was beaten by a despicable trick." "Why how?" "Woman in a balloon sleeves stood on the deck of the the other boat."

Little Ella: "Papa, I know what I am going to give you for your birthday."

Father: "What is it my child?"

Ella: "A beautiful beer glass."

Father: "Why, my dear, I have already got one."

Ella: "Yes, but I broke it just now."

Grandpa: "Don't get scared, Willie, the tiger is about to be fed—that's what makes him jump and roar so."

Willie (easily): "Oh! I ain't afraid of him, grandpa. Papa's the same when his meals ain't ready."

Willie: "I knew you were coming tonight." - Castleton: "Why, Willie?" Willie: "Sister has been asleep all the afternoon."

Weak Lungs

Hot weather won't cure weak lungs. You may feel better because out of doors more, but the trouble is still there. Don't stop taking your because the weather happens to be warm. If you have a weak throat, a slight hacking cough, or some trouble with the bronchial tubes, summer is the best time to get rid of it. If you are losing flesh there is all the more need of attention. Weakness about the chest and thinness should never go together. One greatly increases the danger of the other. Heal the throat, cure the cough, and strengthen the whole system now. Keep taking Scott's Emulsion all summer.

Scott's Emulsion

PATRIOTIC DAY.

To Celebrate the 86th Anniversary of the Battle of Tippecanoe.

Co. Supt. Coe has received programs for appropriate exercises to commemorate the above important event. It is proposed to have a day set apart in each school in the county, or at least in such schools as choose to do so. At these anniversary meetings, there will be appropriate exercises, some sort of music, recitations, addresses or papers read, etc, etc. To give a better idea of what is expected, we publish here, the notes sent out by the state association, at the head of which is State Supt. D. M. Geeting.

This program is intended to be suggestive as well as helpful. The following will be found to be helpful:

"The Song Patriot," published by C. W. Bardeen, Syracuse, N. Y. "Special Day Exercises," published by Robert Smith, Lansing, Mich. "The School House Flag," published by A Flanagan, Ill. The Coda, Nos 123 to 214, each 2cts, published by Ginn & Co. Chicago, Ill. Speech of Logan, Chief of the Mingoes, found in McGuffey's Fifth Reader. Love of Country, Indiana Fourth Reader. How sleep the Brave? Indiana Fourth Reader. The Soldier's Rest, found in McGuffey's Sixth Reader. "American History Stories," by Mara L. Pratt, published by Educational Pub. Co., Chicago.

A collection should be taken to aid in erecting a monument on the Tippecanoe Battle Ground. Teachers should urge all pupils to contribute a penny apiece, at least and ask others who feel interested in this project to contribute freely. Teachers should set the example by heading the list with a good subscription.

Send all contribution to J. Glassock, payable to Worth Reed, Treasurer, LaFayette, Ind."

It should be noted, that the day selected this year is Nov. 5, that being on Friday, the last school day, before the real anniversary of the battle, which was fought Nov. 7, and which this year comes on Sunday. Any needed information can be had of Supt. Coe, or of the secretary, Mr. Glasscock, of Lafayette, Ind.

THE HOOSIER HEN.

We have read of Maud on a summer day, who raked barefooted the new mown hay; we have read of the maid in the early morn, who milked the cow with the crumpled horn, and we've read the lay that the poets sing, of the rustling corn and flowers of the spring; but of all the lays of the tongue or pen, there's nothing like the lays of the Hoosier hen. Long, long before Maud rakes her hay, the Hoosier hen begins to lay, and ere the milkmaid stirs a peg, the hen is up and has dropped her egg; the corn must rustle and the flowers must spring if they keep up with the barnyard ring. If Maud is needing a hat or gown, she doesn't take her hay to town, she goes to the store and obtains her suit with basket full of fresh hen fruit; if the milkmaid's beau makes a Sunnay call, she doesn't feed him on milk at all, but works up eggs in a custard pie and stuffs him full of a chicken jrg; and when the old man wants a horn does he take to the druggist a load of corn? Not much, he simply robs a nest, to town he goes—you know the rest. He lingers and talks perchance of true reform and correct finance, while his good wife stays at home and scowls, but is saved from want by those self same fowls, for while the husband lingers there, she watches the cackling hen with care and gathers the eggs and the eggs she will hide, till she gathers enough to stem the tide. Then hail, all hail, the Hoosier hen, the greatest blessing of all to men. Throw up your hat and make Rome howl for the persevering barnyard fowl. Corn may be king, but it's plainly seen that the Hoosier hen is indiana queen.

TOOK A LIFE TIME.

But Was Amply Rewarded—The Knowledge Acquired Graciously

DEDICATED TO HUMANITY.

Many years ago Dr. Wheeler, then a young man with keen perception of physical needs, noted the lack of knowledge in the treatment of nerves, and through them the entire system. He determined to devote his life and direct his efforts to the study and treatment of that mysterious and subtle structure. He followed his determination well and successfully, and, as a result the world is endowed with a remedy, Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer, which is a specific for all nervous troubles. It remained for Dr. Wheeler to present and develop the fact that disease is a result of a debilitated nerve system; that strong nerves make health. Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer is, beyond all doubt, the true remedy for sick nerves. W. A. Emmons, Pettysville, Ohio, endorses this statement. He says:

"Last summer I was stricken with sleeplessness and nervous prostration. I could get no relief, and was growing worse when Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer was recommended. The first bottle helped me and the third one restored me to perfect health. During my sickness I lost 20 pounds, which I soon regained after the use of this valuable medicine."

Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer is not an experimental compound, neither is its virtue confined to the treatment of special sets of nerves, but through the entire nervous system, restoring strength to all the vital organs.

WATERWORKS WON.

Auburn Goes "Wet" on a Light Vote With a Big Majority.

Thursday's Daily.

The election held yesterday, Oct. 13, to decide whether a majority of the people wanted waterworks, called out quite a vote, but not a full one. The vote at the city election on May 3d last amounted to 677. At this election the total vote was 504.

The following shows the vote in detail:

NORTH PRECINCT	VOTE	MAJ.
For Waterworks	135	119
Against Waterworks	16
Votes thrown out	5
Total vote	156
MIDDLE PRECINCT	VOTE	MAJ
For Waterworks	162	149
Against Waterworks	13
Total vote	175
SOUTH PRECINCT	VOTE	MAJ.
For Waterworks	153	133
Against Waterworks	20
Total vote	173
Total vote for the three precincts		504
Total for Waterworks		450
Total against Waterworks		49
Majority for Waterworks		401

The five votes spoiled in the north precinct had the words "for" or "against" written on them.

This vote shows the emphatic demand the people make for this much needed improvement. The council will now know just what to do and who is behind them. And whatever they do, should be done in a prudent, careful manner, and the work when begun should be under a competent engineer, on a definite and carefully considered plan to be followed faithfully to the end. We believe that prudence and wisdom will be their guide, and if so, the people will heartily sustain them. Let us have the waterworks. We do not know as the work could well be started this fall, but the plans could be matured by next spring, when the season will make it safe to begin.

CARNIVAL FINANCES.

Thursday's Daily.

This morning the Board of Directors held a meeting to settle the financial affairs of the Carnival.

The secretary's report shows $1,386.48 received from subscriptions, rental of costumes and street privileges. The total expenses were $1,227.68, which leaves a balance on hand of $158.80, which the treasurer holds in trust for the stockholders of the association.

The secretary presented an itemized statement of all receipts and expenditures, with an account of orders drawn, receipts, bills, etc. He asked the board to appoint an auditing committee to examine his books. The directors appointed Wm. Schaab and A. C. Robbins as two members of this committee, they to select a third.

A complete itemized statement of all receipts and expenses will be mailed to every stockholder of the association—a stockholder being anyone who has subscribed for the Carnival fund.

The total amount of subscriptions was $894.50. Street privileges $305.25. Due from delinquent subscribers $41.

PENSION APPOINTMENT.

There has been some delay in making a new appointment here for examining surgeon to take the place of Dr. Fred Wood of Garrett who had resigned. But this week the appointment was made, it being given to Dr. John C. Baxter of Auburn. He and Dr. Swarts we believe were the only ones talked of. Dr. Broughton of Waterloo was last year given the place, when Dr. Nusbaum resigned to become state Senator, and he still holds it. Dr. Sheffer of St. Joe is, we believe, the other. We are told there is a civil service clause about the business that prevents many changes. We believe the selection of Dr. Baxter will be generally satisfactory, as he is a successful practicing physician and though new in the field here, has already a large acquaintance. We are informed that the old soldiers are suited with him and that is the main thing. We believe their interests will be properly cared for by him, and the present board.

COURT.

The jury hit all the Garrett Hoboes in the center, about two p. m. Davis and O'Brien go to Michigan City, the length of time not yet determined. The other four, McCarty, Murray Clark and Brennan go to Jeffersonville on a 2 to 14 year sentence.

After finishing off the six men from the Garrett hobo camp yesterday, a jury was arranged to try the case of Zimmerman vs Howey. Zimmerman had sold Howey a buggy and taken a note in which it was shown that Howey had certain unincumbered property in his own name, a sort of note that is often required in cases like this. Suit was brought on this note by the Zimmerman Co., and J. E. Pomeroy, managed their case. Mr. Howey attempted to defend himself by denying the making of the note, and that he did not know the property clause was in, or did not understand it. But after some work back and forth on the case, the Zimmerman Co. got a judgment against him for $62.50.

As mentioned elsewhere, the four prisoners sentenced yesterday were taken to Jeffersonville this morning. The other two, were entitled to similar sentences of 2 to 14 years, but have to go to Michigan City. The man O'Brien asks for further hearing, claiming he could get evidence that would be in his favor, and Judge Roby, thought it best to give him that chance. It will however, be settled this term of court. The Judge also thinks that Murray, who turned states evidence may get some easier terms from the governor.

The seventh man, is believed not to have been connected with the breaking into cars, but had a hand in trying to saw his way out of jail. His case has not been reached yet.

Very respectfully,
H. CLAY EVANS,

A SMASHING RUNAWAY.

Took Place at the Greenler Hoop Factory Last Night

There was an exciting and disastrous runaway at the Greenler Hoop factory at about 8 o'clock last night. The governor belt on the engine which runs the saw mill broke and the engine ran away. The engine is located just under the sawmill and at the time the belt broke no one happened to be near. It soon was running at lightning speed, and the men working upstairs all took their flight. They left, going out through windows, doors and every possible way. One man attempted to enter the engine room below and shut off the engine. He had only give the throttle wheel three turns when a large belt broke and went cracking up against the building. This gave him an additional scare and he left the rooms and the engine were still whizzing away and had almost jumped off its foundation. Finally the steam was shut off by a pipe which runs from the boiler room. It was discovered that all the spokes but one in the big fly wheel on the engine was broken, and the foundations are badly wrecked. The accident will cost Messrs. Robbins and McClellan a considerable sum of money. And will also be a big loss to them by way of delay in getting the big wheel replaced. They telephoned to three different firms this morning and were unable to get any satisfactory reply. They are hauling logs over to V. L. Dewitt's mill and having them sawed. This way they will be able to keep running a part of a force at least.

NOBLE COUNTY MURDER.

Saturday's Daily.

An old man named Adam Hoffman living a mile or two northwest of Brimfield was murdered night before last. Two or three men got into the house, tied him hand and foot, and also a 13-year old boy who was staying with him and then went through the house. They could find no money, and could not make the old man own that he had any, although he was quite wealthy. It is believed he kept no money in the house. As he would not give up his money they choked him to death as the boy found him dead in the morning. The boy managed to work the ropes off his own hands and feet and then got where the old man was. Bloodhounds were brought and they persisted in going towards Rome City. At that place three tough young men were arrested, but the boy could not identify them, and they were set free.

HOW TO FIND OUT.

Fill a bottle or common glass with urine and let it stand twenty-four hours a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys. When urine stains linen it is evidence of kidney trouble. To frequent desire to urinate or pain in the back, is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

WHAT TO DO.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy fulfills every wish in relieving pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passages. It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to get up many times during the night to urinate. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists, price fifty cents and one dollar. RETALIATION.

German Authorities Discriminating Outrageously Against American Goods.

United States Consul Deuster, at Crefeld, Germany, reports to the State Department two instances where the German authorities have taken action which tends to discourage the importation of American goods. In one case nearly three time the ordinary duty was assessed against an invoice of stoves because they had what would be called common castings in this county, but which the German appraisers said were ornamental castings and subject to the higher duty. Another case was where nearly a third of a large shipment of Chicago sausages was condemned by the official inspectors. This action indicated that the American inspection was defective. Mr. Deutser says that the American carriage and wagon is being introduced in Germany.

WRECKED.

Steamer Triton Goes Down Off the Cuban Coast.

Havana special: The coasting steamer Triton, from Havana to Bahia Honda, Province of Pinar del Rio, has been wrecked between Dominica and Mariel on the north coast of that Province. The steamer went ashore during heavy weather and grounded about eight miles from the coast. The purser and one of the passengers have arrived at Mariel. They say they have no knowledge of the fate of the Captain, fifty passengers, soldiers and civilians, and thirty members of the crew on the Triton. The missing passengers include several well-known merchants. The Spanish gunboat, Maria Cristine, and the tugboat, Louise, have left this port for the scene of the wreck.

Consuls Appointed.

The President has announced the following appointments:

Eugene Seeger of Illinois, to be Consul General of the United States at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.

Frank M. Brundage of Pennsylvania, at Aix la Chapelle, Germany.

Julian M. Phelps of Iowa, at Crefeldt, Germany.

Charles P. Snyder of West Virginia, at Cuidad Porfirio Diaz, Mexico.

Henry S. Culver of Ohio, at London, Ontario.

Took Two Poisons.

Capt. William Campbell, an old soldier, committed suicide at his home near Crawfordsville, Ind. He ate a piece of bread literally spread with rough on rats, and fearing that would not insure death he followed it up with a mixture of paris green. He died after several hours of untold agony. Trouble between Campbell and a relative is assigned as the cause. Campbell made a gallant record as a member of the Tenth Indiana Battery.

Alleged Murderers Arrested.

Two alleged suspicious characters are under arrest at Crossville, Mich., awaiting identification. The officers claim they answer the description of Charles A. Boinay and David Weeks, who are charged with being concerned in the murder of George Marcus Nicholls, near Bridgeport, Conn. A reward of $4,500 was offered for the murderers.

Six Perished.

Advices received from A. C. Wright of Seattle, tends strongly to the belief that Harry T. Newman and William J. Schwartz of San Francisco, together with four companions, whose names cannot be learned, have perished on the Taku River while on their way to Klondike. It is thought that they were killed by Indians.

Dodge Has Declined.

Great Strike in London.

In London, England, the secretary of the Federated Trades, comprising thirty important industries, announces that the executive committee has definitely decided to call out all its members in sympathy with the struggle of the engineers against their employers.

EQUAL REPRESENTATION.

The Matter Acted Upon by Two Conferences.

Victory for the laymen marked the opening hour of one business session of the Rock River conference at Chicago. Soon after the ministers had been called to order in the Western Avenue Methodist Church Rev. P. H. Swift, secretary of the committee of five, made his report. It recommended the adoption of the proposition for a constitutional change granting equal representation in numbers of preachers and laymen at the Methodist general conference held every four years. This proposition was favored by a unanimous vote. In addition the conference passed the resolutions favoring the laity, which was also presented Monday, after the laymen's association committee had been heard by the clergy. As the action was expected, it did not arouse very much enthusiasm, but the church members present, when the report was made and the action was taken, joined in hearty applause. At Dubuque, Iowa, by a vote of 141 to 8 the Upper Iowa Methodist Episcopal conference declared for the proposition to increase the lay representation at the quadrennial general conference.

CRUELTY TO A SOLDIER.

Prisoner at Fort Sheridan Hauled by the Heels to Trial.

A new code of punishment for insubordination or disobedience of orders has been introduced at Fort Sheridan, near Chicago. Capt. Lovering of Company C, Fourth United States Infantry, is said to be the author of the novel idea. The novel manner of military punishment is to tie a rope around the legs of a refractory man and have three or four other soldiers drag him over macadamized roads, down stone stairways and across stone sidewalks. This is what happened at Fort Sheridan and was witnessed by almost the entire force stationed there. The victim received some cuts on the head, his hands and back were lacerated and his clothing torn to shreds. Charles Hammond, the soldier who underwent this treatment, was not even a member of the regiment at the post. He belongs to the post at Plattsburg, N. Y., and left there without leave and went to Chicago about the middle of September.

PAYS WITH A PISTOL.

Kansas Farmer Resorts to Extreme Measures to Lift a Mortgage.

Frederick Brown, who owns a 160-acre farm ten miles west of Eldorado, Kan., raised a big wheat crop this year, more than enough to lift the $1,500 mortgage that he had been forced to put on his place. He stepped into the Farmers and Merchants' National Bank and told the cashier that he wanted to pay off a $1,500 mortgage on his farm. The cashier finding that it was drawing 9 per cent. interest and was not due until next February told the farmer that it would have to run to that date. The farmer laid the $1,500 in gold and bank notes on the counter, pulled out a bull-dog revolver, laid it beside the money and said: "I am going to pay that mortgage to-day." The cashier canceled the mortgage, delivered up the document to Mr. Brown and took the money.

A Valuable Publication.

Business men throughout the country will be greatly interested in a report soon to be issued from the State Department at Washington. It is known as "Commercial Relations of the United States," and it embodies annual reports from United States consuls in every country in the world upon the trade conditions in their respective districts. The forthcoming volume is of larger scope than its predecessors. Instead of being little more than the dry compilation of figures that it formerly was, the "commercial relations" for 1896-7 will present a mass of information of such variety as to be valuable and interesting not only to exporting merchants, but to public men, to manufacturers, and to technical workers. An indication of the character of the work is afforded by extracts from recent reports. From Hanover comes an account of the installation of an electric railway for handling heavy freight, suggestions for placing American tools in Germany, and talk of an opening for breakfast cereals. The consul at Barcelona reports upon the trade of Spain as affected by the Cuban war, upon the Spanish woman's aversion to the bicycle, and upon tariff financial questions. From near by Santo Domingo comes a report of railway development, of tariff changes, and a comparison of European and American credit systems. The depressing effect of American competition upon the Swiss watch trade is described by the consul at Geneva, who also tells of the preference for American bicycles and of the growing demand for American canned goods, California fruits and sole leather.

Jean Valjean Must Go.

Girls in the Philadelphia high schools must not read "Les Miserables" in hours. At least they may not read it in French. Chairman Thomas G. Morton of a committee of the board of education declared he had read the book, and considered it improper for the reading of young ladies. Principal William D. Rorer of the girls' high school presented a list of text and supplementary reading books, in which the masterpiece of Victor Hugo was included. The committee listened to what Chairman Morton had to say, and from that struck the adventures of Jean Valjean from the list. Mr. Morton pointed out places in the English translations which were scarcely what he regarded as family reading, and assured the committee the text in the original French was decidedly more objectionable. He pointed out that Victor Hugo had drawn with a rather free hand the relations of men and women in the book called "Fantine," one of the books which make up that masterpiece of the great French author which all the world knows as "Les Miserables." He ran rapidly through the romance which follows the fortunes of Valjean, and assured his confreres that it contained passages which could hardly be approved as an intellectual diversion for young women in school. "Les Miserables" has always been regarded as an essential in any well regulated library collection.

Minister to Bolivia.

President McKinley has appointed George H. Bridgeman of New York minister to Bolivia. Ambrose W. Naulin was appointed collector of internal revenue for the sixth district of Indiana. David W. Henry was appointed collector of internal revenue for the seventh district of Indiana.

Will Give $50,000,000.

The last cabinet meeting at Washington developed a confirmation of the report that the Union Pacific syndicate had agreed to increase its bid to the Government to $50,000,000, and that the Attorney General, in view of this fact, had decided not to appeal the case.

Two Women Killed by Thieves.

Mrs. Emma Vane, aged 65 years, widow of Capt. Eli Vane, and her daughter, Mrs. Sarah M. Shaw, aged 40, were shot and killed at Camden, N. J., by burglars. Mrs. Vane was killed instantly. Mrs. Shaw expired in less than half an hour, without recovering consciousness.

Weyler Receives His Orders.

Havana dispatches setting forth that Captain General Weyler has been ordered to relinquish his authority at once to Gen. Castellanos, who will command until the arrival of Gen. Blanco, tend to confirm the rumors to the effect that the Spanish Government regards him with suspicion—rumors which have been current among the Cuban sympathizers here for some time. Weyler has been considered a treacherous as well as an ambitious officer, who might turn the Spanish army over to the Cubans if he thought he might pacify and control the island in that way, but now that his authority has been shorn there is no longer a chance that he will betray Spain. Weyler is exceedingly disappointed over the treatment that has been accorded him by the ministry at Madrid, and the ministry, on the other hand, is suspicious of the retiring captain general. He will be given some mission at home which will employ his time and perhaps keep him from intriguing for the overthrow or the embarrassment of the Sagasta cabinet.

CAPTURE A BAND.

Deputy Sheriffs Arrest Sandy Creek Miners and Musicians.

The deputy sheriffs at the De Armit coal mines made a raid on the strikers at Sandy Creek and arrested fifteen men, including the members of the brass band. The strikers were marching on the public road and were halted by the deputies about a quarter of a mile from the tipple. The band refused to stop playing and the entire party was placed under arrest without resistance. The prisoners were taken to Pittsburg and to the sheriff's office. The members of the band took their arrest good-naturedly and played their instruments as they were escorted from the railroad station to the sheriff's office. Chief Deputy Evans said the men were riotous and he feared trouble. This is denied by the strikers. Superintendent De Armit claims that the three mines of the company are now running to their fullest capacity.

MISS CISNEROS AT NEW YORK.

Cuban Girl Comes—Opinion of W. J. Calhoun.

Evangelina Cossio Cisneros, who recently escaped from a Spanish prison in Cuba, was a passenger on the Ward line steamer Seneca, which has arrived at New York from Havana. At quarantine Miss Cisneros asked to be excused from saying anything about her imprisonment. W. J. Calhoun of Danville, Ill., ex-special commissioner to Cuba, knows enough of the political situation on that island to warrant his belief that Spanish authorities winked at the escape of Senorita Cisneros from a Havana prison.

BANK ROBBED BY DAYLIGHT.

While the Cashier Is at Luncheon Thieves Carry Away $2,000.

The Bank of Union County, at Morganfield, Ky., was robbed of nearly $2,000 during the noon hour. Cashier Wagener closed the bank and went home to dinner, leaving the morning's deposits in a drawer behind the railing. When he returned half an hour later he found that the drawer had been forced open. The vault, containing nearly $50,000 in gold and greenbacks, was not tampered with.

Blows to Cummings Fatal.

Cummings, one of the principals in the New Orleans prize fight, is dead. Griffin, his opponent has been placed under arrest. The fight was of the whirlwind order from start to finish. Fifteen rounds were fought, but before the end of that time both of the fighters were in an apparent state of exhaustion. In the fifteenth round Griffin hit Cummings a hard punch and the latter sank to the floor, not from the effects of the blow, but from lack of vitality. He asked that he be laid on his stomach and became unconscious. From that time he never spoke audibly.

Defense of "Flat Foot" Fails.

The jury in the case of Miss Carrie Shappiero, who sued Nathan Rosen at Baltimore for breach of promise, brought in a verdict for the plaintiff of $1,750. Mr. Rosen's reason for refusing to comply with his contract of marriage, which he did not deny, was the discovery that his fiancee had a "flat foot," which his doctor told him might be transmitted to offspring.

Cue Experts to Meet.

The world's most expert billiard players are to contest for the championship within two months, and the battle will be fought in New York City. Frank C. Ives, the champion; Jacob Schaefer, the wizard, and George Slosson, the student, are to meet again. It is not improbable that Maurice Daly will also shy his cue into the game.

Councilor Akiyama Stabs Himself.

The steamship China, from Hong Kong, brought word that Councilor Akiyama of the Japanese foreign office attempted to kill himself at Yokohama. At last accounts he was in a critical condition.

Water Did Much Damage.

The breaking of a great water main in New York City caused a flood in the neighborhood of Madison avenue and 48th street that did many thousand dollars' worth of damage.

New Turkish Minister.

The State Department at Washington has received word that Ali Ferouck Bey has been appointed Turkish Minister to the United States, to succeed Mustapha Bey.

TAGGART IS ELECTED.

Present Mayor of Indianapolis to Be Nominee for Governor.

Thomas Taggart was re-elected Mayor of Indianapolis by 3,500 plurality. The Democrats also elected Charles E. Cox judge of the police court; Charles H. Stuckmeyer, city clerk, six councilmen at large and a majority of the fifteen ward councilmen. It is the first time since the adoption of the new city charter that a Mayor has succeeded himself, and it is also the first time the city has elected officers since all the suburbs were annexed. The success of the Democratic ticket is said to mean that Taggart will be the Democratic nominee for Governor two years from next fall. His friends have been informed all along that his candidacy depended upon the result of his election. Two years ago Taggart was elected Mayor by 3,722 plurality, and it is probable that the official returns from all the precincts will show that he has received that large a plurality this time. Last November McKinley received, within the limits of the old city (the suburbs had not been annexed at that time) a plurality of 6,603.

JUSTICE FIELD TO REST.

Venerable Supreme Court Jurist Is to Leave the Bench.

Associate Justice Field of the Supreme Court, having now broken all records for length of service upon the bench, has made formal application to be retired Dec. 1 next. Attorney General McKenna is to be his successor, and Judge Day, now assistant Secretary of State, will probably be appointed Attorney General. These changes have all been decided upon and will be effected as soon as Congress meets, so that the Senate may confirm the appointment. At the same time there may be other changes in the cabinet. But the retirement of Justice Field, the appointment of Attorney General McKenna to the vacancy and the promotion of Judge Day to a seat in the cabinet are the only changes now decided upon.

JUSTICE FIELD.

Justice Field has been eligible for retirement ever since Nov. 4, 1886, when he reached the age of 70 years. Since that time there have been frequent rumors that he was about to leave the bench. There was no foundation for any of them, however, and it was not until a week ago that he decided to take the step. He then called upon the President and formally presented his letter asking for retirement. Efforts were made during the Cleveland administration to induce him to retire, but he would not consent to do so.

It was on Aug. 16 last that Justice Field broke the record for length of service on the supreme bench, as it was on that day that he exceeded the term of service of thirty-four years five months and six days to the credit of Chief Justice Marshall, whose service had up to that time been the longest in the history of the court. The total length of Justice Field's service up to the time when his retirement will take effect, Dec. 1, will be thirty-four years seven months and twenty days. Under the law Justice Field will receive the full salary of an associate justice of the United States Supreme Court—$10,000 per year—for the remainder of his life.

SPAIN WON'T PROTEST.

No Demand for Miss Cisneros' Return Likely to Be Made.

No alarm need be felt that serious complications between this Government and Spain will grow out of the liberation of Miss Cisneros from the Spanish dungeon at Havana by the reporter of a New York newspaper, says a Washington correspondent. There is nothing in the existing treaties under which she can be extradited. In an excess of friendliness for a foreign nation the President, in the discretion vested in him as chief executive of the republic, might turn her back into the hands of the Spanish authorities if an urgent demand were to be made upon him. For President McKinley to take such action would be to arouse the American people into a high state of excitement, and with a knowledge that such would be the case it is extremely doubtful whether the Spanish Government would insist upon such a course. The incident has caused great excitement in the State Department. The opinion there is, however, that nothing serious will come of the incident and that the Spanish Government will not attempt any grand stand play looking to the return of the escaped prisoner. The notoriety which will attach to the young woman and the great ado which her escape has caused will be more or less annoying to the Spanish Government, but it is hardly probable that the Madrid officials will be betrayed thereby into making demands which would almost certainly occasion trouble and which could under no circumstances result in the return of the girl. There is a sentimental side to the case which would prevent any such conclusion to the affair. She is safe on American soil, and there she is likely to remain until she can return in safety to her island home.

A KLONDIKE GRUB STAKE.

Reasonably Accurate Estimate for One Man One Year.

What is a "grub stake"? It is money enough to get to the mines of the Klondike or any other country and start work. But the "grub" to eat is another story. The following estimate for one man one year, in the Klondike, is believed to be as near the proper quantities as it is possible to guess in advance:

Articles.	Wt. lbs.	Articles.	Wt. lbs.
7 sacks flour	350	Sundried apples	20
1 sack cornmeal	50	Sundried peaches	20
Rolled oats	30	Sundried apricots	15
Beans	100	S'ndried ptd plums	10
Rice	20	Sundried prunes	10
Evap'd potatoes	25	Raisins	5
Evap'd onions	5	Figs	5
Bacon	150	Coffee	20
Sugar	50	Tea	10
6 pkgs yeast cakes	2	Butter, 14 bricks	28
7 lbs bkng powder	7	Pepper	1
3 lbs soda	3	Mustard	1
25 lbs salt	25	Ginger	1
1 box (120) candles	15	Soap	10
1 gross matches	5
Dried beef	15	Total	1,010

The first thing to do is to get the goods, to be sure, but it is equally important to get them from civilization to the mines.

CUBAN SILVER DOLLARS.

Three Million of Them Are Now Being Coined in New York.

A New York silver manufacturing company is coining 3,000,000 silver dollars for Free Cuba. They are coined under the direction of the Cuban Junta of that city, and are beautiful specimens of numismatic art.

The new dollars cost the junta about 65 cents each for silver and manufacture, so that there is a profit of 35 cents on each of them for the Cuban cause. If the whole issue is sold at face value the profit will be $1,050,000.

WORLD'S YIELD OF GRAIN.

Deficiency in the Wheat Crop Will Be 50,000,000 Bushels.

Following is an abstract of the monthly report of the Agricultural Department on the European crop situation, summarizing the reports of European correspondents to Statistician Hyde:

Recent information, while it may in some cases modify the crop estimates for particular countries, does not essentially change the situation as regards the deficiency in the principal cereal crops of Europe. The outlook for wheat in the Australasian colonies continues good, but the prospects in Argentina are somewhat less bright, owing to drouth and frosts. Accounts from India are quite favorable, both as to the Kharif crops harvested, or to be harvested this fall, and as to the seeding of the Rabi crop, to be harvested next spring, which latter includes the wheat crop.

The annual estimate of the world's wheat and rye crop issued by the Hungarian ministry of agriculture gives the following revised results for 1897, compared with 1896: Wheat production, importing countries, 800,771,000 bushels for 1897, 886,639,000 for 1896; exporting countries, 1897, 1,341,806,000; 1896, 1,452,902,000; total wheat production of both importing and exporting countries in 1897, 2,142,577,000; in 1896, 2,339,541,000; net deficit in 1897, 202,895,000; 1896, 130,534,000.

The world's rye crop is put down by the same authority as follows: 1897, 1,163,457,000 bushels; 1896, 1,203,185,000 bushels.

Against the net deficit of approximately 203,000,000 bushels of wheat estimated by the ministry, they estimate that there is a residue of from 145,000,000 to 170,000,000 bushels out of former crops, leaving in round numbers from 58,000,000 down to 33,000,000 bushels as the quantity by which it would be necessary to curtail consumption if these estimates should prove to be correct. It is of course quite likely that under the influence of high prices consumption will be curtailed by more than this amount and that existing stocks will not be reduced to near the point of complete exhaustion.

Extremely pessimistic reports as to the extent of the crop failure in Europe have been circulated, but the liberal quantities coming forward for shipment have led dealers to receive such reports with incredulity. It is probable, however, that much of the Russian grain going to western European markets is out of the more liberal harvests of former years, and there is evidence tending to show that the crop of 1897 is at any rate considerably below the average.

The markets of Europe will apparently be inadequately supplied with good clear barley suitable for malting purposes, complaints on this score being common among growers in large parts of Germany, Austria-Hungary and other countries, including the province of Ontario, in Canada, in which such barley is usually an important product.

The European potato crop is apparently a short one, and the fruit crop is also deficient.

Consul Eugene Germain of Zurich, Switzerland, after an investigation of the European fruit prospect, expresses the opinion that there will be a good market for American apples and dried fruits this season if growers will be careful to put up choice stock only.

He says: "Nothing smaller than eighties in French prunes will pay to ship to Europe, and all other dried fruit must be uniform in size and attractively packed."

LONDON'S NEW MAYOR.

Something About the Successor of Sir George Faudel Phillips.

Horatio David Davies, the new lord Mayor of London, was born in that city in 1842. He is a son of H. D. Davies of the ward of Bishopsgate, city of London, and was educated at Dulwich College. He has served as lieutenant colonel of the Third Middlesex artillery volunteers, was sheriff of London and Middlesex in 1887 and was an alderman, representing Bishopsgate in 1889. Mr. Davies is a justice of the peace for the county of Kent. He unsuccessfully contested Rochester in 1889, was returned for the same borough in 1892, but was unseated on petition. At the last general election Mr. Davies defeated R. H. Cox, liberal, by 583 votes. He began life as an engraver's apprentice.

LEEDY FAVORS HANGING.

Implies that He Will Sign Death Warrants of Murderers.

In an interview Gov. Leedy, of Kansas, advocates capital punishment for murder in the first degree. He says that when a man deliberately takes the life of another he should pay the penalty by giving up his own life. The present Kansas law provides that a person convicted of murder in the first degree shall remain in the penitentiary one year, at least, and then shall not be hanged until the Governor signs the death warrant.

There are about fifty persons in the penitentiary sentenced to be hanged, but are permitted to live because no Governor of Kansas has signed their death warrants. Gov. Leedy says he will not sign their warrants, as that was the duty of preceding Governors, but he intimates that he will sign the warrants for the execution of all murderers sentenced to hang during his term of office.

Delehanty fell off amazingly in his batting the latter part of the season.

St. Louis succeeded in finishing just about 25 games lower than any other club.

Indoor baseball will flourish again in Chicago this winter. Dahlen, Pfeffer, Long, Griffith, Parker and Ryan are a few of the stars at this work.

Milwaukee has had a very profitable season. It is said the profits were $25,000—a good tribute to the excellent management of "Comie" Mack.

McGraw and Collins are undoubtedly the finest third basemen in the business when it comes down to a question of fielding bunts, says the Baltimore Herald.

Young Callahan of Chicago has ripened into one of the finest all-round players in the country. In fact, it may well be doubted if he has an equal on the diamond in playing all nine positions.

Children on a Burning Stack.

Two sons of Daniel Bowman, living a few miles north of Hagerstown, while playing with matches set fire to a large straw stack. The children climbed to the top before the fire gained much headway. Suddenly the immense pile of straw was enveloped with fire, and the children were fast being suffocated. The older boy threw himself off the stack, and the younger was rescued by a neighbor.

Her Scalp Torn Off.

Kate Shane, while washing her hair in a laundry of the Indianapolis Surgical Institute, met with a serious accident. Throwing her hair above her head, it was caught in the shafting, and all the hair on the top of her head, with the skin, and all the skin on her forehead, the eyebrows and part of the nose and cheeks, was torn off. The woman will probably die.

Bloodhounds on the Trail.

Joseph Horton shot Albert Dinn at Amity. Horton called at Dinn's to buy some hogs. Dinn said it was too dark to look at them. Horton was intoxicated and a quarrel ensued, in which Dinn was shot. Bloodhounds have been placed on the trail, and Sheriff Weddle has ordered all suspicious characters arrested.

A Miner Fatally Stabbed.

Art Lents was fatally stabbed by Tom Walker in a quarrel at Montgomery. Both men are miners.

Charles E. Breckinridge and Miss Stella L. Wise, prominent young people of Knightstown, gave their friends "the slip" and were married in Rushville by Elder W. S. Campbell.

The Monon Railroad Company has purchased the Chicago and Southeastern Railway and the proposed extension of the road from Anderson to Muncie, which is partially graded, will be completed at once.

At Patriot, during the past three weeks four barns have been mysteriously burned. Port Oaks of East Enterprise, while trying to save his horses, was dangerously burned. Circumstantial evidence points to incendiary work.

At Martinsville, a verdict in the case of John Ferriter for the murder of Policeman Ware, April 27, was reached after the jury was out for seven hours. The verdict of murder in the second degree was rendered, fixing the penalty at imprisonment for life.

Charles Sitzell, aged 30, committed suicide at his home in Donaldsonville by cutting his throat seven times with a razor. Sitzell was infatuated with Mrs. Carrie Lloyd, a comely widow, and some trouble arose between them and Mrs. Lloyd sent Sitzell about his business.

Robert S. Scott is to be the next postmaster at Thornton.

A serious shooting affray occurred at Asherville in which Mrs. George Church and Lewis Gumm were badly wounded. Gumm and Church are neighboring farmers, and it is alleged that the trouble was the result of a long-standing feud.

A. C., H. & D. train had a close call at Arlington. The train is the limited mail and makes very fast time. An incendiary set fire to the bridge over Little Blue river at Arlington, and before the blaze was noticed the train was almost on the trestle. The engineer turned on all steam and the limited passed over the burning bridge in safety.

At Buck Falls, in the Creek nation, George Wilson, aged 65 years, married a 16-year-old girl, and in the absence of Henry Crouse from home the couple went to live in the latter's furnished house. When Crouse returned and tried to eject them Wilson shot and killed him and then took to the woods.

John Sent, a section boss on the Grand Trunk Railroad, living at Stillwell, was instantly killed by a fast freight. He was taking several laborers on his handcar to the Swift ice house, at Mill creek, and did not observe the train until it was so close as to compel the men to jump for their lives. They all escaped without injury except Sent.

Autumn Melody.

When the summer's torch is laid away
  In the Sun's palace-hall again,
And lamps of mellow light are held
  By him above the earth and main,
How blest to wander through the world
Bathed in a broad, calm sea of gold,
Or through the forest-aisles that stand
Like pictured cloisters on the land,
While quiet laps the soul-like rhymes
Of love breathed by the masters of the olden times.

The torrent takes a softer tone,
  The southwinds even milder breathe,
The clouds on morning's gate of gold
  In tenderer lines of beauty wreathe:
All seem as if, together, they
Had made consent to weave a lay
Of perfect peace that seraph ears Might lean to listen from the spheres
Where War his standard ne'er unfurled,
And rainbows evermore by bloodless hands are curled.

O time of mild magnificence
  O season of angelic birth!
Spread, softly spread your lustrous wings
  Like benedictions o'er the earth!
And we, the heirs of storm and wo,
Will in your large, delicious glow
Divine a prophecy that yet
All men, in brother counsels met,
Shall light no war-torch on the sod,
But walk alone beneath the mellow lamps of God.

—WILLIAM ROSS WALLACE, in New York Ledger.

A Gilded Hero.

BY E. L. SABIN.

The steamer had been buffeted by the stiff gale for twenty-six hours, and when the second day dawned the wind had increased to a hurricane. The sky was a leaden mass, gloomy, inert, and brooding, offering no hope of a change and no glimpse of the sun. Clouds which have a distinct outline look as if they might eventually be driven away; but a sullen sheet of gray is hopelessly dispiriting.

The waves had attained tremendous momentum, and were being piled higher and higher by the storm. Gray like the sky, they tumbled in savage glee aboard the vessel, rushing triumphantly from the forward quarter aft. It seemed as if legions of sea demons were hastening from all directions, riding upon the snow white crests of the angry billows, to assail the struggling ship.

But ocean steamers, such as the Kaiser Wilhelm, are not easily daunted, and the stout craft was steadily plunging ahead, the captain with difficulty maintaining his position on the bridge, the stokers in the depths shoveling coal into the greedy furnaces, and the cabin passengers trying to keep right side up in their state rooms or in the saloon. The steerage passengers were praying. Cabin passengers pray only in extremities.

Three days out of Bremen—three days of mal de mer and general unpleasantness; for who, even the most seasoned mariner, could survive the weather, and smile? One storm had followed in the path of another. This morning, the saloon was sparsely occupied. Ladies, save one, were either ill in their berths, or with closed eyes were languidly lolling in deeply cushioned chairs. Gentlemen, save one, were either in their state rooms or in the smoking apartment.

The two exceptions to the rule were Edith Pettit and Roger Melton Thomson. Talking in low tones they sat in chairs snugly established on the leeward side, so that the feet of the sitters could be braced in case of an unusually severe roll.

Edith Pettit was what men and women alike call "an awfully nice girl." There was nothing dainty or ethereal about her. She was a healthy, well-groomed American damsel, able to play golf or tennis half the day, and dance rather more than half the night. The rays from the electric globes fell on her abundant hair, light but not golden, and her smooth cheeks, and glistened on her even, white teeth when she spoke or laughed. Perhaps her chief charm lay in her gray eyes, full and clear, and as honest as could be—a standing challenge to mankind to win an approving glance from them.

Thomson was little different from a hundred other men you meet at the club; regular features, brown mustache and eyes, hair of the same color and brushed straight down from the part in the middle; a wholesome-looking boy, but not noticeably brilliant. He and Miss Pettit were engaged.

"I don't know," he was saying, twisting a tassel on her chair, "that I care to have more of this weather. The mater has not been out of her room since we started, and I fancy you cannot stand my society much longer at a stretch. Otherwise I should say, 'Blow, ye breezes, blow.'"

"Oh, any port in a storm can be construed to read any man in a storm, if I wanted to say something mean. Speaking in earnest, Roger, I do not see what I should have done without you, as poor mamma has been so miserable. You have been so good and obliging, actually denying yourself to the smoking room."

"Well, you have had an opportunity to find out how angelic I really am. When we are married you will be on the watch for wings to grow from my shoulders." His voice had a slightly bitter tinge as he concluded.

"After our ups and downs of the present, we can find anything smooth sailing, I think, don't you?" she responded, smiling into his eyes as he looked at her solemnly. "Shan't you be glad to see America again, and dear old New York?"

"Edith, do you know I rather dread it—getting back? Here I have you all to myself. There—well, I might as well tell you, I am desperately selfish. Angels are, sometimes. Expect Jack Dorr will be in town, won't he? He was to have returned last month."

"Yes, very probably, but——"

"I wonder if you will take offense if I tell you something," he went on, interrupting her, with a consciousness of what she was about to ask. "I have not been blind. I am sure that if you were not engaged to me you would marry Jack. He is better than I, I admit; only I am in luck, as always, and he has been pursuing hard lines. I would not blame you. All the girls like him. I am not complaining, Edith, only I want to let you see that I am taking you with my eyes open, and you need have no secrets from me. I trust you, dear."

"Roger, please don't. Jack and I have been friends for many years, quite too many to mention, for I am terribly old. Now I am your affianced wife, and no one else, except my mother, has any claim on me. I cannot say I love you, dear, as some women love men. We have talked this matter over before. But I do admire and respect you, very, very much. Let's discuss something new."

Thomson moved uneasily, and settled down as if with a fixed purpose. His hand stole along the arm of her chair and covered her fingers.

"No," he replied, "I want to say a little more, and please listen to me. I fear I am in a disagreeable mood, but this is about the last chance I shall have to set matters right, and it is not too late. If you think you will ever regret having married me, Edith, you ought to say so now. I—I will release you—that is, you know what I mean. You're not bound——"

"Roger, don't—"

"Yes, I must go on, dearest. I wish I was not rich or useless. I am a man, as well as Jack Dorr, but I have had my way paved for me, and never was urged to do anything to make people look up to me. Of course I am not a sot or a roue. But what am I? There's Jack, who is making his way alone and unaided, and getting no end of praise for the work he is turning out. He is bound to be a great sculptor, everybody says. He is a mighty fine fellow, and any girl should be proud of him. Until I met you I never had an incentive to make my mark. You see our family have always had everything they wanted, and I was brought up to it."

"Dear boy, you must not talk so. I know, and I wish everyone knew, what a generous, noble man you are—one of the very best in the world. I used to like Jack; all the girls do, as you say. I might have married him, if circumstances had permitted it, but at the time he was too poor to support us both. Now, I understand, his future is assured. He was my playmate and companion, oh, so long. But, dear, I owe you a debt of gratitude that I can only partly pay by making you, as I wish, the happiest man alive. If others knew what you have done for us—mamma and me—when we were in trouble, they would not be forever bringing up Jack's name. They would see why I admire you, and why I am glad to give myself to you, if you really want me. So let's drop the subject. I am going to be your wife just as soon as I can, and you cannot get out of it, and I expect to be happy, too."

"I don't know," laughed Thomson. "I could run away from my dreadful fate, and leave you to my worthy Jack. But I suppose I ought to be satisfied to have you for my own, even if you do not love me as I hoped you would. Oh, Edith," he continued wistfully, "if I could only win your entire heart! I feel now that I have bought, not earned you."

"What is the use of talking that way, Roger? You deserve me, if ever a man did woman. I cannot go through life with a lie on my lips, by telling you I love you. It would be unjust to you, and you would be miserable when you came to see it. I have laid bare to you my sanctum sanctorum, and now, dear, won't you take me as I am?"

"Who am I to refuse such a gift? But if I was out of the road, you would marry Jack, wouldn't you?—and I am keeping you from it."

The girl arose, her eyes filled with tears. "You are unkind," she replied. "I am trying to please you and be to you all that you want, and I fail to satisfy you. Now I am going to mamma."

"Forgive me, Edith," said the man, stepping to her side. "I had no business to do that. You are too good for me. Let me know if I can do anything for the mater. I am going to stick my head out on deck, and will get in better temper."

When Roger Thomson peered on deck he saw the same scene that had greeted his eyes for the past two days, whenever he had attempted to emerge from cover—water beneath and above, flying spray and huge waves showing between attacks. Dripping, he speedily withdrew from the battlefield, encountering the purser as he did so.

"What do we intend to do?" asked Thomson. "Stay afloat, or sink?"

"We're trying to get back to port just at present. This is about the only direction we can move. We haven't gone very far, and ought to find anchorage by to-morrow, the Lord be praised. This does beat any storm I ever saw."

"Same here, purser. Much obliged for the information," and Roger hastened to impart the news to Edith and her mother, by shouting it through the closed door of their state room.

Morning came again. The storm had abated considerably, and the seas were rapidly falling. But the ship had been so battered by the elements that the captain thought best to continue on the course toward the nearest port, where needed repairs could be made to the bent propeller. A rocky coast line was already dimly descried in the distance.

Eight bells had struck. Wan passengers had appeared on deck. Suddenly there was a crash that made the steamer shiver, and a sound of splintered wood and of iron plates torn asunder. Then the startled cries of men came faintly from the engine room. The steady whirling of the screws ceased. The vessel listed to port. The steerage was full of groans and shrieks and appeals for divine aid. Officers rushed below.

Roger Thomson was among the few cabin passengers on deck. In the confusion consequent upon an accident at sea, he ascertained that the steamer had a broken shaft, and that the hull had been badly damaged by the mighty piece of mechanism when it snapped. Then the voice of the first officer was heard.

"The captain requests that all gather together their valuables and prepare to leave the steamer. There is no immediate danger, but the boats will be launched and the passengers taken to the shore, which is only a few miles distant. Please carry only necessary clothes, and remember, there is no immediate danger."

This message was repeated in other parts of the vessel. Thomson turned to Edith and her mother.

"Don't be frightened," he said. "The captain is only taking a proper precaution. Better get your things, and I will wait for you, unless I can help you down there. No? All right. Make haste!"

Boats were quickly lowered into the water, and the rafts were flung over the sides. Passengers were scurrying in every direction, ending by tumbling into the crafts as best they could. Edith and her mother appeared.

"Here you are," cried Thomson. Mrs. Pettit, shut your eyes and trust to the Lord. There you go. Now, Edith."

But she had vanished. "Hurry up!" came the hoarse cry from the only waiting boat. Roger saw that he was alone on the deck. Even the captain had embarked. Disregarding the summons, he ran in mad haste to the Pettits' state room. Edith was there, searching frantically underneath the lower berth.

"Oh, Roger," she exclaimed, "that little satchel containing the deed! Did mamma have it?"

"Yes, I saw it. For God's sake, hurry on deck, Edith! We shall be left. Where's your life preserver?"

"I couldn't find another. Everybody seemed to grab them, and a man jerked the one I had out of my hands."

By this time they were at the rail again. The boat had drifted away slightly, but was not moving. It was jammed with human beings, and the crew were afraid to be so near the disabled vessel.

"Edith, take this," said Thomson, strapping about her waist the life-preserver he had been wearing. "Close your eyes and lips. You can't sink. They will pick you up."

"And you, Roger?" she asked, clinging to him.

"I'll be all right. I'll follow you. I can swim. Oh, my darling," he whispered, as he lifted her and held her tightly for a moment," it is for the best that you have not loved me. You and Jack think of me, sometimes." With a sudden motion he threw her over.

Gasping, strangled, it was a number of minutes after she was hauled into the boat before she was able to look around.

"Where's Roger?" were the first words she uttered.

"Pull away, pull away strong, my lads!" shouted the boat's officer sternly.

Edith, in spite of her mother's restraining arms, stood up. How low in the water the Kaiser Wilhelm was! And there, there on the deck, a lone silhouette against the sky, was Roger. She knew him at once.

"Oh, Roger, Roger," she called, as though her voice could reach him.

"No use, miss," said the officer. "He told me yesterday that he couldn't swim, and, any way, the suction will draw him under, poor fellow."

But afar, as if Edith's tones had sounded on his ear, the mute figure waved his hand. Then, in an instant, the steamer was blotted out, and only sea remained.—The Puritan.

THE COLDEST COUNTRY.

In Werchojansk, Siberia, the Mercury Drops to Ninety Degrees Below Zero.

Symon's Meteorological Magazine gives an interesting account of "Life in the Coldest Country in the World," which has been taken from the bulletin of the Royal Geographical Society of Irutsk. The name of the place is Werchojansk, in Siberia, longitude 133 degrees 51 minutes east, latitude 67 degres 34 minutes north, where the lowest temperature of minus 90 degrees Fahrenheit has been observed and the mean of January is minus 48 degrees Fahrenheit. It is inhabited by about 10,500 persons of the Jakut and Lamat races.

In a large part of this region, according to Professor Kovalik, the air is so dry and the winds are so rare that the intensity of the cold cannot be fully realized. In the most distant part of the East there are sometimes terrible storms, which are most fatal to life in their consequences. During the summer time the temperature ocasionally rises to 86 degrees Fahrenheit in the shade, while it freezes at night.

The latter part of the season is often marked by copious rains and extensive inundations, which invariably lay waste a vast acreage of land and prove to be a serious obstacle to the cultivation of the soil. Vegetation is very scarce. There are practically no trees—only wide, open meadows. The people hunt fur-bearing animals, fish and raise cattle and reindeer. Ie requires about eight cows to support a family, four being milked in the summer and two in the winter. The cattle are very small in size, and are fed hay in the winter. Occasionally they are allowed to go out when there is the slightest break in the weather, but their teats are always carefully covered up. Milk is the principal food. This is sometimes supplemented with hares, which are quite abundant, but not very relishable.

The houses are constructed of wood, covered with clay, and as a rule, consist of only one room, in which the people and animals live together. The upper and wealthier classes are better provided with lodgings and food. As a race they are excessively punctilious concerning points of honor, such as the place at the table and the proper place at festivals.

Submarine Cable Pest.

Cable termites are the latest things in entomology. They are playing havoc with the French cable in Tonkin. They bore through lead and other metals. This cable was composed of seven copper wires protected by an insulation envelope coated with cotton and jute. In addition to this it was placed in a lead pipe. A few months after it was laid it began to show signs of decay. It was taken up and replaced.

On examing the cavities in the old cable Profesor Bouvier of the Paris Academy of Science discovered that they had been made by a new termite. Milne Edwards, commenting on this, said that it was not the first time that injury had been done to metals by these insects. They were numerous in some portions of China. Mr. Edwards also said that some other species of insects had been known to attack metal.

The Indian, Walla Tonka, came back to be shot.

At last the day arrived when Walla should be shot. His wife was inconsolable.

ONE of the striking features of the base-ball world during the past season was the playing of a team composed exclusively of Indians from the Indian Territory. One of them attracted more than usual attention by his unusual skill in playing, and many came to the conclusion that he was the equal of some crack players. His name was Walla Tonka. He had a peculiar history. It was as true as it was romantic. An Indian's verbal promise is said to be as good as the white man's written contract. This has certainly been verified in the case of Walla Tonka. Three years ago Walla Tonka attended a green corn dance at Ultima Thule in the Choctaw Nation, near the Arkansas line. There he met a beautiful Indian maiden named Tookah Ingamore, who completely captured the affections of the young brave. He fell madly in love with her. He determined to claim her for his own. But he learned that he had a rival. He bore the euphonious name of Eagle Eye. It appears that he was more favorably received by the dusky maiden than Walla Tonka. But this did not deter him in his resolve. He offered Tookah's father thirty-five ponies for his daughter. To his consternation he found out that his rival had been there ahead of him and the deal had been closed. This was too much for poor Walla Tonka. He determined on revenge. In an unguarded moment he shot his rival through the heart. The excitement was intense. Walla Tonka was brought before a judge selected from among the tribe, tried and sentenced to be shot. While the trial was speedy the execution of the sentence was delayed. The condemned man was given three years in which to make his arrangements for death. He was not cast into prison, but was let go on his parole of honor that he would return to receive the sentence imposed by the court. No one who knew the young brave doubted that he would return to be executed. Not long after the killing of his rival, Walla Tonka went again to the father of the maiden and renewed his suit. The old warrior was willing and agreed that the wedding should take place. His daughter was beginning to forget her dead lover and to admire the bravery of Walla Tonka. Walla and Tookah lived together happily for three years. During this time Walla had become a proficient base-ball player and was earning a handsome salary. He was a faithful husband and provided liberally for his companion. They lived in a little cottage in the heart of the Indian country, and while they must have often thought of the coming doom for Walla, there was no visible sign of anything but happiness. At last the day arrived when Walla should be shot. His wife was inconsolable. Having arranged as well as he could for the future, he bade her an affectionate farewell and started for the place of execution. No guards accompanied him. He went alone. A great crowd had assembled. His approach was the signal for many manifestations of approval. After blindfolding him, his hands were tied behind him. His breast was bared and a small piece of white paper placed over the heart. The next instant there was the sharp crack of a rifle and the murder of Eagle Eye was avenged.—St. Louis Republic.

EDITOR WITHOUT ARMS.

Wonderful Power of a Man Who Is Sorely Afflicted.

One of the most remarkable newspaper men in the world and perhaps the most remarkable is Aaron Smith, editor of the Mount Pleasant Times-Review of Texas. He writes his articles with his toes or with the pen held in his mouth, nor does he consider this achievement as at all extraordinary.

Mr. Smith is a native of Miller County, Arkansas, and was born without arms. He acquired the gift of using his feet for hands early and as naturally as other children learn to use their hands. When quite small he learned to feed himself with his feet, and at the age of 7 had learned to write. About this time he entered school, standing at the head of his classes. He was no less at home on the playground, where he engaged in games of marbles, croquet and ball, becoming an expert in marbles and croquet.

At an early age he began to map out a course of life and to realize the importance of a thorough education. Want of funds, however, prevented more than a high school education, but he afterwards finished the courses of philosophy and logic and others at home. To this fund of knowledge he has added by extensive reading.

Mr. Smith's boyhood days were spent in Cass County, Texas. He moved to Mount Pleasant, Texas, in November, 1888, where he studied law and was admitted to the bar the following spring at the age of 20. Success attended his efforts from the first. He built up a good law practice, and his ability as a lawyer attracted immediate recognition. He was particularly strong in his arguments before a jury. In September, 1893, he formed the idea that the newspaper business offered a more inviting field to one of his physical disabilities and, finding the Mount Pleasant Times-Herald for sale, purchased it. He has managed it with great success, making it one of the best county papers in Texas. All this time he has taken an active interest in politics. In 1894 he was the Democratic nominee for county judge and was a member from Titus County of the State Democratic convention in 1896, which elected delegates to the Chicago convention. He is also a member of the Texas Press Association.

In writing Mr. Smith holds the pen in his teeth, sitting at an ordinary desk. He also writes with his toes, either with a pen or the typewriter. By holding a lead pencil in his teeth and striking the typewriter keys with it he is enabled to write at a fair rate of speed. He is a tireless worker and an accomplished scholar.

Fad of Climbing Mountains.

Then newest fad among Parisiennes at the moment is mountain climbing for women, and there is so much opposition made to the bold and even reckless manner in which they go about it that the authorities have taken steps to have the matter well considered and the safety of such undertakings pronounced upon. The fair ones are contesting the honor of becoming the Bride of Mont Blanc, as the daring climber is called. This is not the first time that the ascent has been attempted by women. Early in this century Mlle. d'Angeville, opposed by all who knew her, and even by the citizens of Geneva, ventured upon this, then wholly unheard of, enterprise. She accomplished it after great fatigue and intense suffering.

"In this age," said a summer traveler recently, "most people are content to go up Vesuvius and the Rigi on the comfortable funicular, since the view from the summit is the object, and that remains the same whatever the means of ascent. But since Mont Blanc has no funicular, and the ascent is an interesting feat to perform, naturally women are ready to endure anything to accomplish it."

Mrs. Rorer's Cafe Parfait.

In making cafe parfait the cream may be flavored with chocolate, vanilla or strawberry, the parfait taking the name of the flavoring. Use good, thick cream, very cold; add to it half a pound of powdered sugar, and a gill of black coffee; mix thoroughly; stand the basin in a pan of cracked ice, and with a wire egg-beater beat to a froth. This will take about five minutes. Put the mixture into a mold, put on the lid, cover the joint with a piece of waxed paper; pack it in coarse salt and ice, and stand aside for two hours. Or it may be packed in the freezer and served in tumblers.—Ladies' Home Journal.

MAID WHO DRIVES TROTTERS.

Miss Elliott, Champion of Her Sex as a Woman Jockey, in a Race.

While it has been of common occurrence for women to participate in races here and there over the country during the last few years, it usually has been their practice to drive either to wagon, a four-wheeled vehicle, or to cart. At the Taunton fair, in the fall of 1870, Miss Julia Woodard, a young lady of twenty, drove in competition, with several gentlemen for prizes to be given to the best family horse. Miss Woodard drove a top buggy, and was awarded a prize. In Kansas, some three years ago, a woman campaigned a stable of several trotters, but although she was the active manager, and often drove the horses in their work, she did not drive in the races. At South Farmington, for several years past, the management of the fair annually held there has given a purse for which only women drivers were eligible to compete, and the race has always been one of the most interesting of any on the program. The majority of those who have driven in these races have been married women, driving to light road wagons or to carts, no special style of dress being demanded for the occasion.

So far as the writer knows, Mrs. I. F. Crosby, who is the owner of Cape Cod farm, was the first woman to mount the sulky just like a man and drive in races, which she did some two or three years ago. She proved herself a handy driver, and possessed of a cool and level head under excitement, which is an essential requisite to one who aspires to drive in a race. Mrs. Crosby is not at all bold or aggressive, but, on the contrary, is a retiring, modest little woman, who loves horses. Last year Mrs. Harriet Winch of Middlebury, Vt., drove to cart at many of the large fairs throughout New England, the fast pacer Major Wonder, and it was an easy task for Mrs. Winch to drive the steady-going fellow miles around 2:12.

DRIVER AND RACE WINNER MISS LEOLA ELLIOTT.

It has remained for the season of 1897, however, and the state of Maine, to give the full-fledged horse race where all the drivers were women, the horses hitched to sulkies, and the fair sex barred from no right extended to men under the rules of racing. It was at Pittsfield, Me., that these women drove their initial race, and here, as at the state fair at Lewiston, Miss Leola Elliott, the twenty-two-years-old daughter of a farmer, who lives in Orient, Aroostock county, was the winner, although Mrs. Crosby, who won second money, drove the fastest mile of the race, which was in 2:25½. Of the four women drivers, all but Miss Elliott are married. Mrs. Mary Woodcock, winner of third money, lives at Ripley. Mrs. Henry Meader drove Pilot Morrill, who is owned by her husband. Miss Elliott has always lived upon a farm, and has devoted a great deal of her time to caring for domestic animals of all kinds, but the colts and horses have been her hobby. She is little of form, rather delicate on the whole, in appearance, yet what she lacks in physical powess, is more than made up in tact and an ingenious use of her limited muscular strength. She wood, and has given her a record of 2:29½.

DESTROYS A MILLION DAILY.

Uncle Sam Grinds Bank Notes and Greenbacks Into Pulp.

"Every working day in the year Uncle Sam destroys a million dollars; deliberately tears up and grinds to pulp one million dollars' worth of paper money—genuine banknotes and greenbacks," writes Clifford Howard in the Ladies' Home Journal. "A million dollars in one, two, five, ten, twenty, fifty, one-hundred and one-thousand dollar notes are daily punched full of holes, cut into halves and thrown into a machine that rapidly reduces them to a mass of mushy substance.

"Whenever a piece of paper money becomes soiled or torn it may be presented to the United States treasury and redeemed. Sooner or later every note that circulates among the people becomes unfit for further service, for it is bound to become dirty or mutilated by constant handling, and the United States government stands ready to give the holder of such a new note in exchange for it; or, in other words, the government will redeem it.

"The majority of the clerks employed in this important department of the government are women, many of whom are the most expert money-counters and counterfeit detecters in the world. In fact, only experts can proprely perform the work that is required; for not only must the soiled and mutilated money be accurately and rapidly counted, but all counterfeit notes must be detected and thrown out. When we consider that some counterfeiters can so cleverly imitate genuine money that their spurious notes will circulate through the country without detection, and are not discovered until they are finally turned into the treasury, some idea of the proficiency of these experts can be gained, especially when we bear in mind that these notes are often so worn that the imprint on them can scarcely be deciphered. It not infrequently happens that these bad notes are detected simply by the feel of them, which, in some cases, is the only way of discovering the fraud; for while a counterfeiter may occasionally succeed in so perfectly imitating the design of a note as to mislead even an expert, it is next to impossible for him to counterfeit the paper used by the government."

PULLMAN DEAD.

Word came over the wires today, that Geo. M. Pullman, the great palace carman, died at his home in Chicago at about five o'clock this morning.

COURT

On Monday, work began again on the matter of breaking into Jule Denison's restaurant in Waterloo and stealing the oysters. This time they had got Edge the one who had not been secured at the former trial. Leas and Phillips defended him, and the charge was changed from burglary to larceny. Denison and other witnesses were put on the stand and brought out the facts formerly stated in the COURIER. A lot of fellows had got to drinking in an upstairs room in that town, and finally wanted some oysters. So they went around to the rear of Denison's building, got in at the window, and got a lot of oysters, which they took back, and ate. When they found themselves in trouble Edge paid Denison for the oysters. But in the mean time, the other man Lunchford had been arrested and put in jail. At his trial he was let off easy on account of youth and previous good character, but Edge had gone away. Now, he comes back to stand trial. He got 30 days in jail and $10 fine.

Monday, also came up a gambling case from Garrett, against a man named Ritter, Gengler defended him. The result was a fine of $10 and costs.

Tuesday came up a case from Garrett Dr. M. W. Johnston and Dr. Stewart, sued Mr. Riccius for $1000 damages for injury done to a brick business room they own. It seems that Riccius built by the side of their building, and they claim he weakened it so much that the walls cracked and one side at least will have to be taken down. Riccius, on the other side, claims he has not hurt their building, but that it will be all the stronger, for having built his. Rose & Rose are attorneys for Riccius and Myers & Mountz and E. D. Hartman are for Drs. Johnston and Stewart.

BIG POTATO CROP.

John Weimer, whose ad we have in this issue is the leading potato grower of this section. He is the first man to make a business of it about here, and he has made it a success. Several seasons when the crop was nearly a failure he had a fair yield of good potatoes, and he sold them at good rates, of course. This year his crop of 28 acres has produced about 2,500 bushels of good potatoes. But he had to work for it. He invested $19.50 in Paris green and London purple and then when the sun was giving us 100-degree weather, he trudged for 22 days with a knapsack sprayer holding 5 gallons, on his back, and killed millions of bugs, using 78 pounds of the stuff. But has good potatoes as a result. Some men would have given this job to the hired man. Mr. Weimer was bound to know himself that the bugs died. He sold 455 bushels of early potatoes at an average of 85 cents. Now he is getting 60 cents. In digging them he pays 3 cents a bushel, to have them thrown out on the ground. Then he and a hand come with a team and sort up the best and put into the wagon and haul to the cellar. The second grade are buried in the field. He and one man, sorted up, loaded, hauled and put into the cellar, 210 bushels in one day. It takes care and thought and hard work, but Mr. Weimer is willing to give it and this makes his success.

POTATOES FOR SALE.

At my home 3½ miles southeast of Waterloo and 5½ miles northeast of Auburn. I have 1000 bushels of first-class, Rural New Yorkers in excellent condition which for the next two weeks I will sell at the cellar for 60 cents a bushel.

Also about 500 bushels of second grade Rural New Yorkers that will do for seed and fairly well for use, that I will sell for 35 cents a bushel. Here is a chance for farmers to get next year's seed. Call on me.

THIEF AND WHEEL.

Both Recovered by the Shrewd Work of Two Plucky Auburn Lads.

Monday's Daily.

It will be remembered that the DAILY recently warned people against the carless habit of leaving bicycles standing out, all over town.

Friday evening Geo. Boland was at the south end, calling on a young lady friend, and left his wheel standing outside. About nine o'clock he came out to go home and found no wheel. He went home without it, and gave it little thought, believing that some of his young friends had played a trick on him. But when the next morning came, and the wheel still gone, he began to believe it had been stolen. He got Ed. Little's wheel and went over to Garrett, but could hear nothing, and came home. Then he and Ed concluded to take George's tandem and go down to Fort Wayne, and put the matter in the hands of police, and they started off at about 11 a. m. At Ft. Wayne, the chief of police gave all advices he could and they had postal cards cards printed, with the chief's name, describing the wheel. As this was all they could do, they started for home. At first they thought they would go by way of Hicksville, but fortunately changed their minds and came right up the Auburn road for home. A few miles south of New Era, they met a man on a wheel going towards Ft. Wayne, and as they passed him. Ed. Little saw that the wheel the fellow rode, resembled George's and called the attention of the latter, to the fact. After a brief discussion the boys stopped, and concluded to turn about and follow the man. Just here, were some parties from about Garrett with a wagon, who were gathering nuts. They also started south, to see the fun. Geo. and Ed. soon began to near the man on the wheel, when he seemed to notice that he was pursued, and struck a livelier pace. But the boys also, got a hustle, and it was not long, till on reaching a rise of ground, the tandem came up with the fellow, and they called him to dismount and give up that stolen wheel. He stopped, and said they might have the wheel, but he wanted to keep his clothes, an overcoat, etc that he had in a bundle, tied on the wheel. This bundle he cut loose, and gave up the wheel, which was now easily recognized, as it had one green enameled rim and one in natural wood, Also, it had only one toe clip, that on the right side. The fellow claimed he had got the wheel of another man. He was now ready to let them take the wheel home and was going on afoot. But here Ed. Little pulled a revolver on the fellow and told him they wanted him, too. He concluded to come along. Just then the men with the wagon came up, and the man was put into the wagon, the tandem also, and Ed. and the men started back for New Era, with George ahead on his recovered wheel. At New Era they were joined by Tom Hall and his son, the men who were shot while arresting some thieves a year or two ago. Here they sent a dispatch to Sheriff Stroh and waited in the station for him to come. When the dispatch reached here, Deputy Neal Platter got it, and as Stroh was absent, was just going to start for New Era, when Stroh came back. Stroh got Mort Wilson to go with him, and they got to New Era about 8 o'clock. They brought back the prisoner, and rest of the men went home. George and Ed. left the bicycle and came home on their tandem, through the darkness and mud of the Saturday evening rain. The next morning they went down and got the wheel.

The man is in jail, but as far as we have heard, does not give his name or home. It is supposed he is from Steuben county. He now claims he had taken the wheel to go to Fort Wayne, and would have brought it back Sunday. He is to be brought up before a justice for examination.

Altogether the affair was a lucky one, and besides, reflects great credit on the boys who made the capture. They showed pluck and readiness that would do credit to old detectives. They are the heroes of the hour and deserve to be.

PROBABLY FATAL.

John Baker of Concord Fell From a Hay Bailer.

Monday's Daily.

John Baker, son of Daniel Baker, of Concord, met with an accident this forenoon which will probably prove fatal. He was driving through town with a hay bailer and as was going over the sidewalk at the north end of Jackson-st, the sudden jar threw him head first from the high rig. He hit on the hard ground on his head and while no bones were broken yet it is thought he is hurt internally. He was taken to the home of Dr. Sebring, and he with Dr. Nusbaum administed all necessary help. He was unconscious for several hours, but, as we go to press he has rallied some.

THE WATERLOO EXPOSITION.

This has proved more of an affair than most people expected. The attendance Thursday, must have been several thousand, and the races were good. It happened that two race were sent on together. It was a new feature to see the two in the fastest race, come in close together, and be followed a few seconds later by the two in the slower race. The usual number of heats settled both races. Another pretty feature was the race between the two pairs of horses. Geo. Souder, of Franklin drove one pair to a light buggy, and Miss Casebeer, a farmer's daughter in the same part of the county rode the other pair, standing up with one foot on each horse. They had this same race at the Butler street fair. There were the usual number of tents and stands for fakirs and others, and various devices to trap the man who thinks he can beat a bunco game. But this sort of thing is difficult to avoid. And we have but litte sympathy for men who get fleeced in this sort of game. They, for the time being, are trying to beat the other fellow at gambling. A few shell games were started over back of the tents but were discovered and stopped, and some cases of drunk and disorderly were arrested and run off the ground. The best "side show" was the big bones from Fairfield. It is the most perfect skeleton of a mastodon we ever saw, and one of the best ever found. It will prove of value to Mr. Spindler on whose farm it was discovered. The race track has been put in excellent condition again and horsemen speak well of it. The great feature of it and the great failure of this meeting is the "band contests," which did not come off. Each day, there was only one band, though several had entered. This made it expensive for the managers, as they had entered. This made it expensive for the managers, as they had to give first money to each, a price double what they could have hired the band for.

OBITUARY.

Rosa Myers Jarrett, eldest daughter of Henry and Elizabeth Myers was born in DeKalb Co., Ind., May 20, 1869, and departed this life October 16, 1897, aged 27 years, 4 months and 26 days.

On Sept 16, 1891, she was united in marriage to Frank Jarrett of Noble, Co., Ind., with whom she traveled life's rugged pathway until death entered to sever the bond and summons her to the bright realms above.

To this union were born two children, a daughter and one son, who together with her husband, father and mother, one sister, two brothers and a host of other relatives and friends remain to mourn her departure, but our loss is her eternal gain.

In life Rosa was considered a model young woman, ever kind and affectionate to all with whom she met. During the winter of '94, she was converted and united with the U. B. church to which faith she firmly clung until the last, testifying to those at her death bed, that she was only anxious and willing to depart and be at rest with Him who triumphed over death.

Our daughter dear has passed to the other side,
What rapturous sights she must see
With a crown of gold and joy untold
Oh, how happy she must be.

Our sister dear has passed to the other side
We'll meet her by and by over there
Around this throne we'll meet our own.
How happy we there shall be.

Our friend has passed to the other side.
And joyfully beckons for us to come.
In that bright land where all is joy,
We shall rejoice with loved ones at home.

A TOURNAMENT

WHACKED A BURGLAR

A South End Man Covers Himself With Glory---In His Mind.

One of the most daring attempts at burglary known in this part of the country for some time occurred last Friday evening at the Watson House on South Main-st. The victim Fred Hipp awoke about 11:30 to find a man in the act of going out the window with his grip, gold watch, violin and umbrella. He let out a yell that awoke the other occupant of the room and seizing a club standing in the window began beating the thief on the head. The made dropped the articles but managed to make his escape through the window. Saturday morning as Colonel Watson was feeding his horses he found a suspicious looking character in the barn who gave his name as Mike Shearer. The Col. went to the phone to call up the marshal but when he returned the man was gone. Detectives are now scouring the country would oe thief and assassin but no trace of him has yet been made.

P. S.—Seven minutes later. We are pleased to report the burglar has been discovered. It was a stuffed man fixed up by some wags to get a joke on a man who is very nervous on the subject of burglars. And he still thinks he whacked a live burglar.

BUTLER.

France Heater, of Stroyke, O., was in Butler Wednesday.

Born to Oviatt Campbell and wife October 14, a son.

A very sudden death took place in the north-east part of town last Friday evening. Mrs. Emory Baird was working in the canning factory, and did not get home until about dark. She first saw her husband's hat, lying on the walk, then saw him lying near by, she hastened to him, raised his head and discovered that he was dead. He had not been very well for a few days, but no fear had been awakened. His funeral took place from the Christian church last Sunday, Rev. Thomas, of ficinting. He leaves a wife and one or two grown children by a former wife. He was a blacksmith by a trade and a quiet, peaceable citizen.

The Lake Shore employes have been surveying their grounds the past week and getting all the bearings necessary to make permanent improvements.

John Crouse, living on East North street is suffering from a complication of difficulties. He has been confined to his bed the most of the time. His son from near Montpelier, Ohio, was hastily summoned by wire on Wednesday, but he rallied and is a little better at this writing.

Several cases of serious illness among children about town is still reported.

The ladies of the M. E. church realized about $15 00 from the Saturday afternoon dinner.

—Miss Edith Wilson, a typo in the Record office, is around again after two or three weeks of Illness.

THE 7th. STREET BRIDGE.

The work on the new bridge progresses finely, for they have been favored with dry weather. Last evening, the stone work af the east abutment was up above any high water mark, and that part of the job will soon be done. Then the iron work can go on at any time. Mr. Rugman, has finished the grading at the west end, and has several teams at work filling the big part at the east. They are pushing it rapidly and doing a fine job.

DANGER OF A GREAT CITY.

Our people will remember little Alice Olgie who sang and danced so sweetly when the Holden Company was here a short time ago. It was this company that was playing "Dangers of a Great City" in Cincinnati last week when the roof fell in and killed three people last Friday evening. It appears that the truss which supported the roof was of wood instead of steel as in the Opera House at Auburn. The building was put up twenty six years ago and the timbers had no don't shrunk gradually, and in this way gradually loosened their hold on the supporting wall. As the play progressed, a number of people heard a rasping, grating or squeaking of the timbers above, in the roof supports, and had noticed a fine dust, like powdered plastering, that kept sifting down and now and then small bits of plaster would fall. This frightened the people in the gallery and they gradually went out. Later on, some people in the body started out quietly, but there was no panic. The play was going on, and little Alice Olgie was on the stage singing and dancing in her cute character of the "Yellow Kid," when she noticed something wrong up above, and as she looked, the roof began to settle. She screamed, and ran, and the audience tried to escape, but there was not time, for, with a crash, the whole roof came down on them, with the timbers of the truss, the plaster etc. Besides the killed there were a large number hurt. The title of the play is very sugguestive as is also the play they were to put on the next evening, which was "Under the Dome." None of the actors were hurt. The opera house was the "Robinson" owned by John Robinson the showman.

—Mrs. Albert Spurgeon of Butler township was here yesterday and became a patron of the old Reliable COURIER again. We remember her as one of our teachers, Miss Irene Hall. Her son, Stewart Spurgeon is in the high school at Garrett, where he expects to graduate. Mrs. Spurgeon is a sister to Tom Hall who together with his son Haward was shot while fighting some tramp thieves a year or so ago.

—Miss Carrie Beuret acted as Court stenographer for a part of the time Tuesday, Geo. Henderson being temporarily ill. She got along with the new work very well. She has been stenographer at the Kiblinger factory for several months.

—The beautiful home of Rev. and Mrs. Guild was thrown open last night to the members of the Epworth League and their friends. Guests to the number of forty were delightfully entertained by the pastor and his wife. A feature of the evenings entertainment which was quite amusing was the part known as "nuts to crack." Each guest was furnished cards with the letters and when correctly arranged would spell some kind of a nut. For instance: Siglehnawltun, was English Walnut. It took careful thought to make them all out. There was also various other games which were enjoyed by the party. Popcorn and apples were abundant and it was only those who were a little bashful, who did not go away "filled." Rev. and Mrs. Guild are delightful entertainers and the spacious rooms at the parsonage fairly rang with merriment until a late hour.

—Frank Zimmerman will reach home tonight from Sherman Heights, Tenn. His father will remain there a few days longer.

to see the Empire Butter Maker, now being sold by Mr. Geo. A. Horn the patentee. It is the most practical device for making butter ever shown to the farmers of this country. It makes butter in less than half the time of any other churn on the market, is lighter to handle, easier to keep clean and much more satisfactory than any of the patent churns. It sells for $2.00 and every farmer can afford to have one. Will save you lots of time, and labor. Don't fail to see this churn at the Hotel Bradford Auburn.

THE NEW WAY.

WOMEN used to think "female diseases" could only be treated after "local examinations" by physicians. Dread of such treatment kept thousands of modest women silent about their suffering. The introduction of Wine of Cardui has now demonstrated that nine-tenths of all over the cases of menstrual disorders do not require a physician's attention at all. The simple, pure taken in the privacy of a woman's own home insures quick relief and speedy cure. Women need not hesitate now. Wine of Cardui requires no humiliating examinations for its adoption. It cures any disease that comes under the head of "female troubles"—disordered menses, falling of the womb, "whites," change of life. It makes women beautiful by making them well. It keeps them young by keeping them healthy. $1.00 at the drug store.

For advice in cases requiring special directions, address, giving symptoms, the "Ladies' Advisory Department," The Chattanooga Medicine Co., Chattanooga, Tenn.

W. I. ADDISON, M.D., Cary, Miss., says: "I use Wine of Cardui extensively in my practice and find it a most excellent preparation for famale troubles."

—The finest picture ever taken in Auburn or DeKalb county, or any other county, for that matter, is the Queen of the Carnival, Mrs. B. B. Harrison. The work was done by Auburn's leading artist. M. I. Hoffman, and the pictures show his skill as an artist. Mrs. Harrison was dressed in the Queen's costume and wore her hair fluffy and hanging down her back. This picture will be enlarged and can be seen at Mr. Hoffman's gallery. It will pay any of our people to call and see it. It proves without a doubt that Mr. Hoffman is one of the most skilled artists that Auburn has ever had.

—Ex-Gov. Francis, of Missouri, is one of the men in public life who appreciate a local newspaper. "Each year the local paper gives from $50 to $1,000 free lines to the community in which it is located. No other agency can or will do this. The editor, in proportion to his means, does more for his town than any other ten. He ought to be supported, not because you like him personally or admire his writing, but because a local paper is the best investment a local people can make. It may not be brilliantly edited or overcrowded with thought, but financially it is of more benefit to the community than the teacher or preacher. Understand me, I do not mean morally or intellectually, but financially.

—Ligonier Banner:—That wave of confidence must be receding. Some weeks ago sheep were eagerly sought after and a big price was the rule, but recently the price has been falling. At the big sheep sale of Baker & Bouse on Monday the bidding was exceedingly slow and the prices were away below what was expected. Choice sheep sold for less than $4 and some even below $3. We can heartily compliment Mr. Kiefer and Mr. Yarger, who preached at the Presbyterian church, for very able and eloqent discourses. We are told they were as popular at the other churces. The synod is evidently an able body of ministers and does the Lutheran church great credit.

—Churubusco Truth:—A good story is being told on Willis Madden the good natured, handsome tombstone man of Auburn. —The cure of Rheumatism has often taxed medical skill, but it's prevention has been very easy by an occasional use of Simmons Liver Regulator. —W. S. Gandy at Churubusco, offers for sale his law office and insurance business, as he is going into the ministry. Here is a good chance for a young attorney.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

PURELY VEGETABLE.

The cheapest, purest and best family medicine in the world! An effectual specific for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen. Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nauses, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

SHALL SILVER BE DESTROYED?

Advocates of gold have pinned their faith to wheat, and all their arguments against silver are now based on the famine price of that cereal.

Because many of the nations of the world have been visited by the calamity of bad crops, and because the United States has been blessed with abundance, these Republican logicians draw the conclusion that the silver cause is dead. But suppose that in 1898 Argentina and Russia and the wheat producing countries of the world including the United States, produce large crops of wheat. The price per bushel will go down. Where, then, will the advocates of gold stand on the wheat question?

The discussion concerning silver is not losing interest among the nations. It can never be cast out of the way until silver as money is utterly destroyed or triumphantly remonetized. The world possesses over $3,600,000,000 of legal tender silver. Can the people afford to ignore a matter of such tremendous importance?

Muhleman, in his "Monetary Systems of the World," gives the following statistics as to the supply of silver money now in circulation, excluding from his estimate all subsidiary coin:

	Coined value.
United States	$550,000,000
Mexico	45,000,000
South America	10,200,000
France	653,000,000
Spain	141,000,000
Germany	105,000,000
Austria	81,000,000
Other Europe	180,000,000
Asia	1,800,000,000

The greed, folly and crime of gold monometallists in proposing to destroy over three billion six hundred million of money need no stronger arraignment than the plain statement contained in these figures. If the plots of the gold clique shall at last prevail the world will be reduced to a position of abject slavery. Gold will be appreciated to the extent of untold millions, silver will cease to be money, the United States will lose $550,000,000 of value at one stroke and the climax of misery, poverty and distress will have been reached.

Disinterested Friendship.

It is remarkable how disinterestedly the Republican press is laboring these days to bring about harmony between the national and the gold Democrats.

Seldom in the history of political warfare has such a spectacle of unadulterted friendship been displayed on the part of an enemy. Hardly a day passes that does not bring forth some kindly suggestion developing a magnificent plan upon which amity and union may be secured between the Democrats who cast 6,500,000 votes for bimetallism last year and the Democrats who cast 135,000 ballots for gold monometallism.

Recently these generous efforts have been redoubled, and Chairman Jones has been reported, by his kind friends of the Republican newspapers, as not almost, but altogether persuaded to be a goldbug. It is a little bit curious that all these peace pacts proposed by the Republicans contemplate the absorption of the body of Democracy by its tail, which is not according to natural phenomena, for the tadpole never becomes all tail; on the contrary, the tail becomes all tadpole.

Is it the desire of these Republican strategists to so consolidate the Democratic party as to make it invincible? That does not seem good generalship, and yet there is no explanation offered for this generosity other than an apparently altrulstic desire to be real good. It is barely possible that the Republicans wish to destroy the bimetallic sentiment, which they know is the deadly menace to their own supremacy, but of this there is no hint in all their arguments.

Iowa Democrats United.

In spite of all the claims to the contrary that are being made by the opposition, the Democrats of Iowa are united in support of Fred White. There has been no vigor in the "third party" movement. The Democrats who voted for McKinley last year did not join the Republican party—national or State. They owe no allegiance to it and they will not forsake their own organization to follow such a tinsel idol as Shaw of Denison.

The Republicans are leaning upon a broken reed if they hope to poll any portion of the Democratic vote for their ticket. Whatever may have been the divisions among Democrats upon national issues—whatever they may be now—there is no difference of opinion among Iowa Democrats as to the danger of putting another Republican administration in power at Des Moines. Democratic votes aided McKinley in carrying Iowa last fall, but Democratic votes will not help Shaw to carry it this fall. There are no national issues involved. There is no possible ground for affiliation of Democrats and Republicans. The one dominant question is that of decency and honest government against a repetition of the malodorous Drake administration. White represents the former; Shaw stands for the latter, and on such an issue the Democracy of Iowa never divides. If Shaw's election depends upon his receiving any part of the Democratic vote, no matter how it may be labeled, his defeat is already assured.—Chicago Chronicle.

State Aid to Corporate Greed.

Trouble is brewing at the coal mines in Edwardsville, Ill. The mine owners there refuse to pay the wages which operators generally throughout the country have agreed to and the State is called to their aid. The plain proposition is this: The Edwardsville miners refuse to pay decent wages. They propose to depress the standard of living of American citizens to the level of the brute and ask the taxpayers to aid them.—Evansville (Ind.) Courier.

The Example of Disorder.

Out in Colorado yesterday two railroads got into a difference over a disputed right of way. They organized considerable forces of employes and each one tried to gain possession of the right of way of main strength. The consequence was a riot. Yet the rail road officials who order their employes to resort to these methods of disorder over the possession of property or privileges worth a few thousand dollars are aghast when the same men apply the lesson taught them by appealing to force in disputes over wages which may involve the earning of a fair living for their families!—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Campaign Lies.

The Cincinnati Enquirer has lost patience with the Republican campaign liars and reads them a lesson which they are not likely to forget very soon The first lie nailed by our esteemed contemporary is the assertion of the Republican press to the effect that "silver sentiment is dying out." The attention of these campaign liars is called to the manner in which silver sentiment "died" in the late Presidential election. In spite of intimidation, fraud, bribery and falsehood, of thirteen and a half million votes cast, the silver sentiment polled over six million and a half. A few of the lies now in circulation are quoted verbatim by the Enquirer as follows:

"The real fact is that the Democratic party in Ohio is on the point of abandoning free silver as an issue in the campaign altogether." "It is said that John R. McLean has come to the conclusion that, under the circumstances, free silver as campaign capital would be a losing investment." "The statement is made that the abandonment of the cause of free silver by the Democratic managers in Ohio will bring about a very big split in the party in the Buckeye State." "It is known that the bimetallic leaders are exceedingly indignant at the proposed intention of the Democratic managers in Ohio with respect to the free silver plank."

It goes without saying that every one of these statements is absolutely and unqualifiedly false. Most of them have been exposed and denounced, but the industry of the campaign liar is only equaled by his lack of honesty, and therefore his crop of falsehoods is always flourishing. The Enquirer does not waste many words in dealing with the matter, but settles the question in the vigorous words which follow: "It would be difficult to conceive of any baser work than the invention of these lies, except the work of employing the creature who does the lying and the publication of his lies."

Mexican Prosperity.

Mexico seems to be doing business at the old stand just the same as if there were no such things in the world as "40-cent dollars."

This fact has had the effect of causing the gold clique in the United States to cease filling the editorial and news columns of the subsidized press with hypocritical wails over the fate of "poor Mexico." The farmers of our sister republic have discovered that they can ship flour to the United States at a profit, and the manufacturers have been quick to learn that they have a good market for their products in this country.

Under these conditions it is not to be wondered at that President Diaz will decline to commend to the Mexican Congress any radical changes in financial policy. Why should he? Money from Europe and the United States is flowing into Mexico every day because it finds there profitable fields for investment.

In the face of facts such as these, how can the members of the gold clique have the effrontery to talk about the horrors which would follow the adoption of bimetallism by the United States? These gold advocates care nothing for national prosperity. They are working in their own individual interest, and are straining every nerve to keep up the appreciation of gold in order that they may fill their pockets at the expense of the people.

Dangerous Phase of "Prosperity."

The bankers of Wall street are making a great cry over the present gold imports from Europe. They want the people to believe that this is unmistakable evidence that the prosperity wave promised by the McKinleyites is coming at last. They claim that the foreign money lenders are satisfied with the way the Republicans have run things in Washington, and that they are consequently ready to do business again with this country—at so much per cent. of course.

If this explanation of the gold shipments from the other side is the true one, what does it prove? Merely that our Government is run in the interest of European financiers, and not for the benefit of the people—that the monopolies are being favored so as to induce foreign capitalists to send over more money and create more trusts to suck on the life blood of the masses.

If the explanation is the correct one, we may as well prepare ourselves for a rapid increase of the evils against which we are fighting—the monopolizing of the necessaries of life by the money sharks who aim to make every Government and every nation tributary to their greed.—New York News.

Another Job to Be "Slipped In."

According to Senator Lodge, Hawaii is to be annexed by trick and device. The Constitution provides that the treaty of annexation must be ratified by two-thirds of the Senate before it can become effective. But Senator Lodge suggests that if serious opposition arises the job can be accomplished by passing a joint resolution, already pending, which requires only a majority vote. That is to say, the jobbers and speculators who want to annex leprosy, ignorance and depravity purpose to set aside the Constitution itself in order to do it.—New York World.

Prosperity for the Trusts.

As another evidence of the prosperity inducing powers of the Dingley law it may be noted that since its passage twenty-five trusts have increased their capital stock by $147,319,525.—Lafayette (Ind.) Journal.

TRAIN FOR KLONDIKE

RAPID TRANSIT LINE OVER WHITE PASS.

A Snow Locomotive that Has Been in Successful Operation in Michigan Pineries for Two Years Will Be Used —800 Miles in Four Days.

The Proposed Route.

As Utopian as the project of rapid transit to the Klondike country in the winter may appear, it is one that bids fair to be carried out. Imagine a modern snow train of from eight to ten box and passenger cars mounted on runners, carrying 100 tons of freight and passengers, propelled by an eight-ton steam engine, whose wheels make five revolutions to each push of the piston, climbing up the steep White pass, gliding over 50 or more miles of level table lands and through as many miles of virgin forests, coursing its way over the hills and through the dales, climbing huge ice gorges, jumping over lakes like a steam yacht, wending its course along the tortuous river ways in that arctic country, at an average speed of from 15 to 25 miles an hour—or from Fort Wrangel to Fort Selkirk, and then Dawson City, a distance of 800 miles—in less than 10 days on the first few trips and after that in less than six, and then you will have a clear conception of this great scheme for opening communication with the Alaskan Eldorado.

George T. Glover of Chicago is the originator of the scheme. Two years ago he invented a new locomotive, duplicates of which have since been in operation in the Michigan pineries. Several of them are on Secretary Alger's land. Glover wrote to Secretary Alger and asked for government aid in establishing a line of snow trains to Klnodike. Alger endorsed the scheme, but other cabinet members deemed it less practicable than the plan of sending food to the Klondike miners by reindeer teams. The government's failure to adopt his plan has not discouraged Glover. He says he will interest capitalists, organize a company and have his snow sled road in operation before winter closes.

"There are two routes," says Mr. Glover, "by which a snow train can reach Dawson City, excepting the route from St. Michael's to Dawson City, up the Yukon river. The shorter is from Dyea through the Chilkat or White Pass, which is about five miles north and west of the Chilkoot Pass. The highest grade for about two miles through White Pass is about 15 per cent. A road through it is now being cut and corduroyed. Even now the pass is 1,000 feet lower than the Chilkoot Pass and can be gotten over with but little difficulty, I think. With such an improved road, however, as is now being made through White Pass a snow train can ascend almost as easily as a cable car through the Washington street tunnel, for a 15 per cent grade has the same ascent and descent as the said tunnel. After getting through White Pass there is a comparatively level stretch of table land for 350 miles, through which Dalton Trail runs to Fort Selkirk, a small place at the junction of Lewis and Pelly rivers. These streams form the Yukon river. From Fort Selkirk to Dawson City it is about 200 miles down the Yukon river. This is known as the 'Overland Route.' From Fort Selkirk to Dawson City will be traveled on the Yukon, which is frozen solid seven months in the year. I calculate that we can cover the distance with two locomotives in eight or ten days and ultimately in four days.

Road Will Be Permanent.

"The road once opened, it is readily seen that it will be permanent and grow better with travel. Turnouts and stations for supplying wood fuel will be distributed along the route where needed. When a steep grade exceeding 30 per cent. is encountered a steam windlass on the locomotive will be pressed into service to get over it. The means used will be a wire cable stretched from the top of the grade and attached to the locomotive. The locomotive will then wind the train up with perfect ease. In case an ice gorge should be encountered the same means will be applied to get over it. If the gorge be very abrupt, then a steam power 'ice dog' will answer the purpose. The locomotive will be equipped with every device needed for such work.

"The locomotives to be used in this system will not be as heavy as those now in operation in the Michigan pineries, which latter range from eighteen to twenty tons. Instead, however, they will be built on the same principle, not weighing more than eight tons and with a hauling capacity of from 75 to 100 tons of freight. The locomotive will be housed like the one shown in the pictures, pulling from six to eight cars, one or two of which will be for passengers, sleeping and baggage purposes, and the others for freight. The train will be like a modern mixed train, snugly built to protect life and supplies. Two locomotives will accompany the first train, to help it over high grades and out of deep cuts, over rough places and around curves. Three men are necessary for each locomotive—an engineer, fireman and pilot, who stands in front. There is an abundance of wood along the route for fuel. Stoves and other conveniences and comforts will be in the passenger cars."

The locomotive is very simple in principle and construction. There is a boiler, twin engines, driving wheel, and other necessary appurtenances, supported by a steel frame. This frame rests upon runners fore and aft, and to it is hinged by means of steel beams a huge traction wheel between the runners. There is a drum in the wheel. The traction wheel is rotated by engines with horse power ranging from twenty to sixty, geared from five to nine to one. Most of the heat from the boiler furnace and from the exhaust steam is utilized in the drum, into which it is conveyed through the trunions. By this means the wheel is kept sizzling hot. About the wheel V-shaped teeth, 3 by 12 inches, are set "dodging." The action of the heat from the toothed cylinder prevents the snow from clogging, and at the same time compresses, with the aid of the weight, the snow into a solid, compact mass of snow ice, thereby giving sufficient resistance to enable the teeth to pull a train with 100 tons burden or more. The pictures of the log train and traction wheel will give the reader a fair idea of the locomotive and its principles.

DON'T KISS THE DOG.

A Very Bad Habit Which Often Leads to Malignant Diseases.

Don't kiss your dog, no matter how dear he or she may be to you! Aside from the fact that it is a nasty habit, there is grave danger to the human being from all sorts of microbes and germs, which are fonder of the human being than of the dog. This has been amply proven by scientists, and even the Board of Health, says the New York World. As a matter of fact the latter body has several well authenticated cases of diphtheria contracted from dogs on its records. Diseases of all kinds lurk upon the lips and body of the dog. A dog will wander about, even though of high pedigree, and in the course of his journeys will make the acquaintance of dogs of lesser degree. From them he will gather microbes as well as fleas. Then he will return home to his fond mistress to distribute his collection indiscriminately. Then his mistress will pick him up in her arms and will hug and kiss him. Typhoid, diphtheria, cancer and diseases too horrible to mention may result from the caress.

Physicians have repeatedly warned against the habit of kissing dogs, but seemingly to little purpose. Every day the papers chronicle cases where some disease has mysteriously appeared and where the source of contagion is unknown. In nine out of every ten such cases, dog kissing is to blame. But leaving aside the possibility of danger from disease entirely, the habit should be stopped by all self-respecting women, for what man would care to kiss them, knowing that they had previously defiled their lips kissing a dog? No matter how clean a dog may be; no matter how great a favorite, it should never, no matter what the temptation, be kissed.

Klondike Trademarks.

The Klondike craze has had its effect on the Patent Office, as has been shown by the application for trademarks bearing the word. Two or three patents have been applied for for objects which might be better suited for the gold fields there than elsewhere, but the chief clerk refuses to tell of them.

The applications for trademarks bearing the word Klondike, Chief Newton of the trademarks division of the Patent Office says have been made for a certain brand of cigars, a bicycle lamp and furniture. One word can be used as a trademark as many times as may be wished, with the exception that each object must be different. Speaking to a reporter on the subject of trademarks, Chief Newton said: "Whenever there is anything new, or any new craze, the applications for trademarks in that line begin to come in immediately. When the Trilby craze was at its height we had application after application come in for trademarks on different objects, which were registered, until the craze apparently died out.

"I have been surprised at how much manufacturers attribute to trademarks of their articles. For instance, a certain flour manufacturing company, in instituting an interference case, made oath that the name of their particular brand of flour was worth half a million dollars, and I believe that was really paid for it. It is known that the sum of $40,000 was actually paid for the name of a certain potash."—Washington Star.

Anti-Rheumatic Potatoes.

Corporal Tanner, of the Algiers precinct, sat out in front of the station the other night in his shirt sleeves and took in the glorious breeze that came down Morgan street in all its glory. It has been a rare occurrence to see the Corporal in negligee attire. He has been suffering terribly from rheumatism, and throughout the summer has worn his heavy woolen coat, even when the humidity would woo it from him. When fate had him transferred to Algiers an Irish lady living over there told him of the virtues of the potato. She gave him two small "prathies" to carry in his trousers pockets, and he swears that he at once felt the rheumatism sneaking from his bones. In a few nights it was all gone. The potatoes have begun to get as hard as a rock, and Corporal "Bill" swears he will carry them through life.—Chicago News.

Cause of Much Misery.

Of all microbes the animalcule of la grippe is the ugliest to look upon. Magnified to the size of the picture here shown, this microbe has the appearance of a new kind of bug—all legs and body. Suffering mortals who have been sneezing, sniffling and mopping watery eyes will be interested to see the cause of their trouble. This microbe is industrious, if not pretty, and he will continue to be much in evidence unless all present indications fail.

Quien Sabe?

Quien Sabe—who knows—is a phrase in very common use among the Spaniards, and helps over many, many difficulties. It is expressive. What the weather may be the coming winter who knows? It may be snowy, wet stormy, cold, freezing, and full of sickness and pain, who knows? Some of us to-day, hale and hearty, may lie on beds of torture or hobble about on crutches, who knows? Before the autumn merges into winter many may have symptoms of approaching trouble of the old rheumatism coming on, or of first attacks begun; who knows? Who knows? That's a conundrum. But there is one thing everybody knows, the best thing to do is to be ready for the weather coming and to take hold of what is. Everybody knows what is best. With St. Jacobs Oil in the house, everybody knows they have a sure cure for rheumatism, acute or chronic. It is likewise known that in any stage of it the great remedy does its work of cure perfectly. If we suffer we need not ask who knows, when it is so well known what is best.

A DANGEROUS RISK.

A Scorcher Is Safer These Days than the Man Who Walks.

It seemed as if everything was settled. The insurance company's physician had reported that the man was not likely to topple over at prayer meeting or to die of laughter in a theater, and the man himself had certified that he was not engaged in any occupation that took him in the vicinity of dynamite or other high explosives.

"So far as business is concerned," he said, "my life is a very quiet and sedentary one. It is office work, and there is no danger or excitement connected with it."

"Very good," returned the insurance company official, who was putting the finishing touches to the examination before issuing a policy; "but how about sports? Men who lead the quietest business lives frequently engage in the most dangerous sports, and of course anything like that counts."

"I care very little for anything in the line of sports," returned the applicant for a policy.

"Never play foot-ball, I suppose," suggested the official.

"Never," answered the applicant promptly. "I would as soon think of joining a circus."

"Base-ball?"

"I should say not."

"Box a little now and then, don't you?"

"If you ever hear of me putting on the gloves with anyone you can cancel my policy," returned the applicant with emphasis.

"Don't belong to any athletic club?"

"Not one."

"Ever ride in bicycle races?"

"Never."

"Ever do any scorching?"

"No. I don't ride the bicycle at all."

"Don't ride the bicycle at all!" exclaimed the insurance official. "What do you do for exercise?"

"Walk."

"Risk refused," said the official with decision. "A scorcher or a bicycle racer is a dangerous risk, but he isn't a circumstance to the man who dares to venture abroad on foot these days. I am surprised you have lived so long." —Chicago Post.

He Remembered.

It is said that no man ever had a more marvelous memory for faces than Henry Clay. The instances given to prove this are numberless.

On one occasion he was on his way to Jackson, Miss., and the cars stopped for a short time at Clinton. Among the crowd who pressed forward was one vigorous old man who insisted that Mr. Clay would recognize him. He had lost one eye.

"Where did I know you?" asked Mr. Clay, fixing a keen glance on this man.

"In Kentucky," was the reply.

"Had you lost your eye before then, or have you lost it since?" was the next question.

"Since," answered the old man.

"Turn the sound side of your face to me so I can see your profile," said Mr. Clay, peremptorily, and the man obeyed. "I have it," said Mr. Clay, after a moment's scrutiny of the profile. "Did not you give me a verdict as juror at Frankfort, Ky., in the famous case of the United States vs. Innis twenty-one years ago?"

"Yes, sir!" cried the old man, trembling with delight.

"And isn't your name Hardwicke?" queried Mr. Clay, after another minute.

"I told you he'd remember me!" cried the old man, turning to the crowd. "He never forgets a face, never forgets a face!"

Train Set on Fire by Ice.

On the northern division of the Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway a train, which was composed of several carloads of ice and lime, came into collision with another at one of the junctions. The ice and lime were thrown together, and this contact was the cause of the mischief. Gradually the ice melted, and the water trickled down upon and slaked the lime. The intense heat developed set fire to the woodwork of the cars and caused considerably more damage than the collision.

Men carry their minds as for the most part they carry their watches, content to be ignorant of the constitution and action within, and attentive only to the little exterior circle of things to which the passions, life indexes, are pointing. It is surprising to see how little self knowledge a person, not watchfully observant of himself, may have gained in the whole course of an active or even inquisitive life.—John Foster.

Settled Long Ago.

"I didn't know it. What was the answer?"

"Money."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

OVER THE HILLS AND FAR AWAY.

Over the hills and far away,
A little boy steals from his morning play,
And under the blossoming apple tree
He lies and he dreams of things to be;
Of battles fought and of victories won,
Of wrongs o'erthrown and of great deeds done;
Of the valor that he shall prove some day
Over the hills and far away—
Over the hills and far away!

Over the hills and far away,
It's oh for the toil the livelong day!
But it mattereth not to the soul aflame
With the love for riches and power and fame!
On, O man; while the sun is high;
On to the certain joys that lie
Yonder where blazeth the noon of day,
Over the hills and far away!

Over the hills and far away,
An old man lingers at close of day;
Now that his journey is almost done,
His battles fought and his victories won,
The old-time honesty and truth,
The trustfulness and the friends of youth,
Home and mother—where are they?
Over the hills and far away—
Over the hills and far away?

THE NEW COOK.

CERTAINLY I was in an awkward fix. My husband did not see it, of course, and when I had said for the thirteenth—I love to be accurate—for the thirteenth time that evening, "Whatever am I to do?" he only replied, to his newspaper, apparently, "If money will be of any use to you, dear, I can let you have a blank check."

I very nearly said: "It has taken more than money to keep your house properly for the ten years we have been married. It takes brains," but he is such a dear, good fellow, that I stopped in time.

However, at the fourteenth time of asking, he simply replied, "I'm going to bed," and went.

I still sat thinking. To be sure, it was only the cook who had left suddenly that day on account of bad news from home. With the assistance of the housekeeper I had contrived to prepare a respectable enough little dinner for once, and, for the matter of that, could have contrived to do so until I was properly "suited."

I do not change my women servants often. The boy is a more valuable quantity, but when I do I prefer to wait a little rather than take just anybody.

Still, there was that friend of George's brother Jim, in Queensland, coming on Thursday to spend a few days, and this was Tuesday.

I could not put him off, as it was the only time he had free, and Jim had seemed really anxious that we should meet him.

"Harry is terribly cut up over the loss of his wife, through that dreadful mistake of which I think I told you in my last letter."

He hadn't. Just like Jim's carelessness.

"This was, indeed, the cause of his coming home. He is a fine fellow and a true friend, too true a friend, indeed, to one thoroughly undeserving," continued Jim, somewhat irrelevantly.

"But the virtues of Harry Gordon can by no possibility breakfast and luncheon and dine him for three solid days if I don't succeed in getting a cook," I concluded as I wandered sleepily upstairs. "I must try Miss Griggs at the Young Women's Christian Association rooms, and take whoever she offers me."

Thitherward I accordingly wended my way the following morning as soon as I had got George comfortably breakfasted and dispatched to the office.

Miss Griggs heard me with attention.

"Well, Mrs. Mason, I think I have a girl living here at this moment who might exactly suit you, provided you are willing to take everything about her on trust. I have been constrained to do this for the sake of her sweet, true face. I can't say that I would go to every mistress with that suggestion——"

"But, you know," interrupted I, "that we look at things from the same standpoint, and remember that in the highest sense we are every day being taken on trust ourselves."

She smiled, nodded, and left the room.

A moment later the door opened gently and a slight, graceful girl of about 23, with brown hair and eyes, and pale, regular features, stood before me.

She was very simply dressed in a well made blue serge gown, but her soft, low voice, a little nervous in its accents, was beyond all possibility of doubt the voice of a lady.

I was so much fascinated by that voice—a deep, musical one, the kind that haunts you, with the tiniest suspicion of a foreign accent in it, and yet not foreign either—that I scarcely know how I stumbled through the usual questions.

"What is your name?"

"Mary Steven."

"Have you any written character?"

"None."

"Can you give any references?"

"No, ma'am."

A pause.

Suddenly she proudly raised her pretty head.

"I have no character, madam, and no references. I shall not tell you anything about myself but my name. I like your face. You seem a motherly, Christian woman." (Motherly, and, again, woman to me!)

"I like you," continued this strange creature, "and if you are willing to give me a quiet corner in your household and some small wages, for I have no money"—as if I would take anybody's services for nothing—"I believe you will find me a capable cook and a faithful servant."

Quite a little speech, you see, with delicate cheeks all ablaze, and tiny hands nervously clenched.

"My dear," said I, impulsively, "I will take you on trust."

So my new cook came home. Four faultless meals she prepared, and ere the hour for the fifth arrived Harry Gordon arrived also.

He was a tall, thin, quiet man, with wavy hair, almost pure white, though he could not be over 35, brushed back off his temples.

Not at all my idea of an Australian shepherd king, which indeed he could scarcely now be called, as of late years he had devoted himself much to colonial politics. Indeed, if Jim's rather rosy account could be believed, a great future lay before him in that direction, could he only shake off the load of depression which appeared to be resting on him. He seemed, as my husband remarked aside to me, "in great want of a mental tonic."

Still, his conversation was most agreeable. He had been a keen observer of men and things, and could relate his experiences well.

Only he seemed burdened with a strange reserve. His home he never mentioned, nor the dear, dead wife. Perhaps he could not trust himself to speak of these with composure—at least not yet.

Jim had intrusted a small parcel to him for us, and a short time after dinner he rose to leave the room to fetch it.

At the same time I felt rather than heard a light footstep ascending the stairs. Carelessly I noted it.

"It is Mary going to bed. She was up early."

Her room was on the top flat, and to reach it she had to ascend the front stairs.

Mr. Gordon had just paused on the landing, his hand still lightly catching the handle of the door.

Suddenly the footsteps faltered—stopped.

"Harry!"

"Marie!"

The man's heart was in the cry.

The little feet flew on as if on wings.

The door reopened, and with the face of one transfixed he again stood before us.

My husband started up.

"What is the matter?"

I am afraid I lost my head a little, and to relieve the strain of the situation remarked foolishly:

"Mr. Gordon looks as if he had seen a ghost instead of such an ordinary person as the cook."

"The cook!" he repeated. "Mrs. Mason, it is my wife!"

George found his voice first.

"But I thought you said you had lost your wife?"

A new light broke upon me.

Yes, "lost," but "found."

I do not generally speak to my husband in a tone of authority, but on this occasion I did.

"George," I said, "go down to your study directly and wait for me there. Stop here, Mr. Gordon."

I went up to Mary's room—a tiny box of a place, 10 feet by 7, but I like each of my girls to have a room, however small, that she can call her own. The girl lay prone upon the little white bed.

"Mary," I said, "you must come downstairs."

She shuddered.

"Is she with him?"

"She? Whom?" said I. "Oh, there has been some sad misunderstanding! Come with me."

I led her, unresisting, to the drawing-room door and left her there.

At this point I may as well tell you the story which we gathered in detached bits later on.

In her maiden days in that distant colony Marie Steven had two lovers, friends of one another, and bearing the same Christian name. There was, however, in her mind, no question of choice between them. For her Harry Gordon was and always had been the only man in the world.

For some time after the marriage the friendship between the two men continued to all seeming unimpaired. Then ugly whispers in regard to Gordon's happiness and personal affairs began to float about. These had, of course, originated solely in the fertile brain of his respectable namesake, and by him it was duly arranged that they should reach the ears of the young wife. Perhaps from a dread of hearing them confirmed by his own lips, she from day to day delayed repeating them to her husband. Wild suspicions tore her heart and left her with no rocks of firm faith on which to cling in the crisis that was fast coming.

Sitting alone one afternoon Marie was surprised by the entrance of her husband's friend. He placed in her hand the letter of a woman signing herself, "Your deserted wife, and conjuring Harry to remember the promise of other and happier days.

"Can you doubt his guilt, Marie, or my disinterested love? This letter must have broken all ties between you. Come with me, and in the old country we shall together begin a new and happier life."

Marie spoke no word. Looking at him as one who saw him not, she glided from the room.

Yet not for one moment could she doubt her husband's guilt.

"Yes, to the old country I shall go, but alone, with no meaner man, 'Not Lancelot, nor another.' There I shall indeed begin a new life. There he can never discover me nor persuade me to condone what this reveals."

She inclosed the fatal letter without a word of explanation in the sealed envelope, laid it on his dressing table, and left the house.

That same evening one of the great Pacific liners sailed with a new stewardess, who had turned up at the last moment, soliciting employment just in time to fill the place of one who had been taken suddenly ill.

More than an hour later we went upstairs, to find our guest and my cook satting on the big sofa before the drawing-room fire, neither of them saying much, apparently, but the little brown head nestling where it should always have been and measureless content in both their eyes.—Princess.

She Had Him Cowed.

While stopping one night at a farmhouse in Missouri a traveler was astonished to see his hostess walk up to her husband about every fifteen minutes and box his ears or give his hair a pull. In the morning the guest, seeing the woman alone, asked an explanation of her strange conduct, and her reply was: "You see, stranger, me and the old man has been fightin' for ten years to see who shall boss this 'ere ranch, and I have just got him cowed, but if I should let up on him for a day he would turn on me again, and my work would all go for nothin'."—New York Journal.

SPECTER AT CUSTER'S GRAVE.

Freak Photograph of the Battle Ground Where Custer Fell.

A. B. Rumsey of Billings, Mont., has a freak photograph of the battleground where Custer fell. The picture shows a giant Indian brandishing a knife upon which is impaled the pigmy figure of a man. The specter is leaning forward above the famous Custer monument, while a score of persons stand around sightseeing in broad daylight.

Mr. Rumsey accounts for the photograph in this way: He had been taking pictures of the Custer monument and also of the sun dance of the Crows, who were holding a celebration in that neighborhood. The view of the monument was taken at noon when the sun was very bright, and at a considerable distance away. About sunset Mr. Rumsey had an excellent opportunity to photograph a big warrior in the full energy of the dance. Seizing a plateholder, he slipped it into the camera and made the exposure. The plate chanced to be the one he had already exposed for the Custer monument. In the darkroom Mr. Rumsey was staggered till he put two and two together.

Passports in Russia.

In Russia a child 10 years of age cannot go away from home to school without a passport, nor can common servants and peasants go away from where they live without one. A gentleman residing in Moscow or St. Petersburg cannot receive the visit of a friend who remains many hours without notifying the police. The porters of all houses are compelled to make returns of the arrival and departure of strangers, and for every one of the above passports a charge is made of some kind.

Remarkable Tree.

Commissioner Mewborne had a photograph yesterday of a pecan grafted into a hickory tree on the farm of John M. McKay, near Fayetteville. The grafting was done Feb. 28, 1897, the bud opening May 25 following. The photograph was taken Aug. 30 last, at which time the height of the stalk was five feet and the circumference at the ground twenty inches. The growth of the scion from opening of the bud until Aug. 30, ninety-six days, was five and one-half feet.—Charlotte Observer.

WOMEN DO NOT TELL THE WHOLE TRUTH.

Modest Women Evade Certain Questions When Asked by a Male Physician, but Write Freely to Mrs. Pinkham.

An eminent physician says that "Women are not truthful, they will lie to their physicians." This statement should be qualified; women do tell the truth, but not the whole truth, to a male physician, but this is only in regard to those painful and troublesome disorders peculiar to their sex.

There can be no more terrible ordeal to a delicate, sensitive, refined woman than to be obliged to answer certain questions when those questions are asked, even by her family physician. This is especially the case with unmarried women.

This is the reason why thousands and thousands of women are now corresponding with Mrs. Pinkham. To this good woman they can and do give every symptom, so that she really knows more about the true condition of her patients through her correspondence than the physician who personally questions them. Perfect confidence and candor are at once established between Mrs. Pinkham and her patients.

Years ago women had no such recourse. Nowadays a modest woman asks help of a woman who understands women. If you suffer from any form of trouble peculiar to women, write at once to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., and she will advise you free of charge.

And the fact that this great boon which is extended freely to women by Mrs. Pinkham, is appreciated, the thousands of letters which are received by her prove. Many such grateful letters as the following are constantly pouring in:

"I was a sufferer from female weakness for about a year and a half. I have tried doctors and patent medicines, but nothing helped me. I underwent the horrors of local treatment, but received no benefit. My ailment was pronounced ulceration of the womb. I suffered from intense pains in the womb and ovaries, and the backache was dreadful. I had leucorrhœa in its worst form. Finally I grew so weak I had to keep my bed. The pains were so hard as to almost cause spasms. When I could endure the pain no longer I was given morphine. My memory grew short, and I gave up all hope of ever getting well. Thus I dragged along. At last I wrote to Mrs. Pinkham for advice. Her answer came promptly. I read carefully her letter, and concluded to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. After taking two bottles I felt much better; but after using six bottles I was cured. My friends think my cure almost miraculous. Her noble work is surely a blessing to broken-down women."—GRACE B. STANSBURY, Pratt, Kansas.

"He was a retired shipbuilder—and hails from Staten Island, New York. He was in pretty good health, but every day when he took what he called his constitutional, that is, his afternoon walk, he was sure to have a sort of cramp which seized him in the calf of his leg with almost the severity of an assault by a ferocious dog. He read about the case of a man whose rheumatism was cured by Ripans Tabules and laughed at the idea. He thought the man a fool, but realizing that his own difficulty was a sort of rheumatic twinge, he finally bought and used some Tabules and of late his friends have noticed that he is more chipper than he had been for years. A lady who knew him well asked him about the dog that used to bite his leg in the afternoons and the old man said: "He is dead and Ripans Tabules killed him."]

A new style packet containing TEN RIPANS TABULES in a paper carton (without glass) is now for sale at some drug stores—FOR FIVE CENTS. This low-priced sort is intended for the poor and the economical. One dozen of the five-cent cartons (120 tabules) can be had by mail by sending forty-eight cents to the RIPANS CHEMICAL COMPANY, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York—or a single carton (TEN TABULES) will be sent for five cents.

SHOULD HAVE LIGHTS.

(Hicksville News.)

While G. W. Lewis was driving along Edgerton-st Tuesday evening, just after dark, having two young ladies in the carriage with him, he failed to see the open trench of the water works extension, there being no danger light at the place, and drove into it. The carriage was overturned and the occupant thrown violently into the trench. Miss Ford, his granddaughter, received a painful injury to her shoulder, but otherwise the party escaped. Mr. Lewis was dragged a number of yards by his fractious horse, but finally succeeded in stopping it. The ladies were very much frightened. Somebody should see to it that danger lights are properly placed along the open trenches before someone is badly injured.

THE LUTHERAN SYNOD.

Officers Elected and a Brief Report of the Meeting.

The first business transacted by the Synod was the election of officers who serve for one year. They are as follows:

Rev. B. F. Grenoble, Camden, Pres.
Rev. C. E. Rese, Elkhart, Sec'y.
Rev. F. E. Buergin, Three Rivers, Mich., Treas.

The general routine of business was then followed. Reports of committees were heard. Rev. M. L. Smith of Bryant, Rev. A. J. Douglass of Columbia City were appointed directors of Wittenberg College and Jacob Walborn of Auburn lay director. Rev. E. W. Erick of Albion was elected member of advisary board of Home Missions. Rev. W. L. Tedrow of Ann Arbor was elected a member of the Pastor's fund society.

Thursday evening the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary society held very interesting exercises. The program was carried out to the letter as printed. The ladies are here in large numbers and have had a good meeting of the society.

Yesterday pledges were solicited for the support of Beneficiary students. They were asked to raise $75 and the collection amounted to $76.

Three Rivers, Mich. was chosen as the place to hold the next meeting.

Four young men will be admitted to the Ministry, three ordained and one licensed.

Rev. W. C. Dunlap of Spencerville delivered an excellent sermon on Temperance last night. Dr. C. S. Alberts of Philadelphia also addressed the meeting last night. Dr. S. A. Ort, President of Wittenberg college was also present and addressed the Synod yesterday.

Today Dr. Alberts again made an address and Dr. S. B. Barnitz of Des-Maines, Iowa also spoke at length.

Rev. C. W. Anshutz of North Manchester will address the Synod on Christian Education.

Sunday will be an interesting day all day. Many of the visiting Ministers will fill the pulpits throughout the city.

ATTEMPTED BURGLARY.

(St. Joe News.)

An attempt was made last Thursday evening to burglarize the residence of Wm. Simanton. Along about eight o'clock in the evening, while Mrs. Simanton was back in the kitchen, she heard a noise in the front part of the house as though some one had run against the stove or some piece of furniture. Instantly surmising that there were burglars in the house she ran out of the back door and called for Charlie Koch. The mauraders made good their escape, while she was after help, leaving no indication of their having been there, except their manner of entrance. A slit had been cut in the screen large enough to thrust the hand through and unhook the door. The men were evidently tramps, as several of such beings were in town that day.

Fifty Years Ago.

This is the way it was bound to look
When grandfather had his "picter took."
These were the shadows cast before
The coming of Conjurer Daguerre
And his art; like a girl in a pinafore
Some day to bloom to a goddess fair.
Men certainly were not as black, we know
As they pictured them, go years ago.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla began to make new men, just as the new pictures of men began to be made. Thousands of people fronted the camera with skins made clean from blotch and blemish, because they had purified the blood with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It is as powerful now as then. Its record proves it. Others imitate the remedy; they can't imitate the record:

BIG MUDDLE IN ELKHART CO.

County Treasurer's Office Declared Vacant. Commissioners Refuse to Appoint a Machine Man.

(Columbia City Post)

For a few weeks past rumors have been current to the effect that W. H. Holdeman, treasurer of Elkhart county was short in his accounts about $19,000. The county commissioners employed an expert, and the circuit judge ordered the grand jury, to investigate the matter. As a result on the 11th instant, Holdeman's bondsmen all asked to be released from the bond, and Holdeman could find no others to take their place. Judge Wilson then declared the office of treasurer of Elkhart county vacant, and the key were turned over to him.

The commissioners were in session and they proceeded at once to elect Delos N. Weaver, of Elkhart, to fill the vacancy. Its seem the republican committee of the county had held a meeting and had decided to give the place to M. U. Demorest, of Elkhart. By ignoring the dictation of the machine, the biggest kind of a muss has been stirred up and it is attracting about as much attention as Holdeman's shortage. It is all in the republican family, so let them fight it out.

Holdeman was fool enough to speculate in mining stocks with public money and like many other greenhorns lost. What his shortage is, will not be known for some weeks yet.

OUR AGE OF PROGRESS.

This age is marked by progress in all things. This morning we saw a cow walking down street demurely on the way to pasture. Riding along by her was a man on a bicycle, with his right hand resting on the cow's shoulder as if to steady him in going a pace slow enough to keep by her side and care for her. The cow seemed pleased with the arrangement and carried that look of satisfaction that only a bicycle can bring. Even the animals are falling in love with the wheel.

Depression of Spirits

so common in summer-time, accompanied by loss of energy, lack of thought-power, means a deficient supply of nourishment. The vital force is lost. It isn't a question of muscle and sinew, but of resistance and endurance. At any age, but especially in youth, it involves the risk of lung disease. Loss of flesh and a cough are threatening signs.

MUSHROOM FIND.

(Laporte Argres)

Henry Chase yesterday picked a peck of spring mushrooms which sprung up under his window. Mr. Chase had been watering the lawn and the result this morning was a fine growth of this delicacy. It is some thing unusual to raise mushrooms at such a dry time of the year.

LARGE ONION CROP.

(Warsaw Times.)

An immense onion crop is finding market at Milford. In Jefferson township and adjacent land there are 1,000 acres of land in onions. The yield will be about 400,000 bushels and will net the farmers about $200,000. The crop is being marketed at the rate of 1,500 bushels per day. The industry is surely one worth looking after.

LOVELY FLOWERS.

Our friends know we enjoy beautiful flowers, and often we receive a bouquet of exceptionally fine ones. Mrs. McGown, east of town thought of this yesterday and the result is we have a bunch of those brilliant flowers produced by several members of the cactus family. It is set off nicely by other green sprays and bunches of chrysanthemum. The cactus flowers are as bright and large as any we have seen, and this particular bush had 64 of them, all perfect. Mrs. M. has thanks.

Something to Depend On.

Mr. James Jones, of the drug firm of Jones & Son, Cowden, Ill., in speaking of Dr. King's New Discovery, says that last winter his wife was attacked with LaGrippe, and her case grew so serious that physicians at Cowden and Pana could do nothing for her. It seemed to develop into Hasty Consumption. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in store, and selling lots of it, he took a bottle home, and to the surprise of all she began to get better from first dose, and half dozen dollar bottles cured her sound and well. Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds is guaranteed to do this good work. Try it Free trial bottles at Robbins & McCord's rugstore. 5

THE WHEAT CROP.

The world's crop of wheat last year is put at 203 millions more than it was this year. The crop was short this year, even in the United States. Hence the great demand and consequent good prices. There is a poor outlook now for the next year's crop in this country, but there is no danger of our having such a failure as to compel us to buy wheat from other nations. Our country is so large, with such a variety of soil and climate that generally some part of it will produce a good crop that will feed the whole.

MOUNTZ-TEETERS NUPITALS

Married in the City Wednesday at the Home of the Bride's Mother.

The COURIER is sorry to announce a day late the Mountz-Teeters nupitals but owing to a scarcity of help in the office the item was crowded out yesterday.

The ceremony took place at the home of the bride's mother on West Fifth street at 3:45 sharp yesterday, and the contracting parties were Howard W. Mountz, of Garrett, and Miss Mary A. Teeters. Rev. F. C. Colvin officiated. The rooms were tastefully decorated with ferns and smilax and as the couple appeared the bride looked lovely dressed in a gown silk mull. The only guests were the immediate families of both parties. They were the recipients of many beautiful and very costly presents. After the ceremony a luncheon was served in five courses. Mr. and Mrs. Howard Mountz are both highly respected and quite popular among their friends. Mr. Mountz is an able and eloquent attorney who is enjoying a lucrative practice. Mrs. Mountz has been identified with the schools of Auburn for years, and at one time was bookkeeper for the late W. P. Harter. She has always been a hard worker in the church, and Garrett will profit by her taking up her residence with them. Mr. and Mrs. Mountz immediately departed after luncheon for their new home at Garrett, which had all been furnished and was ready and waiting for the host and hostess. They have the best wishes of the COURIER for a long, happy and prosperous future.

PLANTING BIG TREES

Elmer Kurrie, a Kendallville man has been here wo or three days, his special work being the planting of large trees. He has a wagon and sort of stone boat, that is made on purpose for work of this kind. The trees are stung under the big wheel and the roots rest on the stone boat. The big wheels enable him to swing the tree into place easily. He is plainting three trees for S. C. Snyder, having procured goods ones from the fields of R. S. Reed north of town. We believe he warrants them for a year.

Who Got the Oats?

Tuesday, as Mr. McKinley was going out south into the country with a load of lumber, on which were some sacks of oats, down near the Dittmar bridge, one of the sacks fell off, into the road. He was enjoying life too much to notice a little thing like that, and kept right on. Just then, an Auburn rig, with two men came along on the way home, jumped out like a flash, got the sack, threw it into their rig, and cracked the whip for town. If they wish McKinley to get his oats back, we will put in a notice free for the sake of finding who the men were.

HE TELLS US WHY

His Life Was Nearly Wrecked, Also How the Wreck Was Averted by

Dr. WHEELER'S NERVE VITALIZER

How often we hear the invalid say, "The first of my trouble was sleeplessness. I could not get the needed rest." The same cause will shatter health while the world lasts. As long as people will neglect nature and fail to satisfy the urgent call for sleep during health they must expect a rebellious nature to refuse to respond when the nervous system is weakened from any cause. When you feel debilitated, fretful, despondent, worried, or cannot secure the full eight hours sleep prescribed by nature, use Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer at once. Build up your nervous system before it's too late. Geo. Halstead, clerk at Jefferson House, Toledo, tells in the following words what it did for him: "I consider Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer a remarkable medicine for nervous troubles; I will tell you why. While living in Lima I worked nights; my sleep during the day was not regular or restful. I became very nervous, irritable, and all run down The doctors failed to help me, so also did other medicine which I used. A friendly druggist told me of Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer. I tried it and it worked like a charm. I was able to secure restful sleep after the first dose. My appetite returned and I regained my lost flesh, and was very soon perfectly well. I have recommended it to a great many and results were equally beneficial."

SURPRISING.

(Hicksville News.)

If the "kodak fiend" would get a flash light picture of the school house vestibules, the steps of the various churches and some of the horse blocks about town, almost any evening, the pictures when finished would be a surprise to some of the good people of this village. If your daughter and your neighbor's son must spend their evenings together, better let them have the parlor than go strolling around the streets.

CAVIN IS CLEARED.

Acquitted by a Jury in the Noble County Court.

The most important case in the Noble county court the past week was of John W. Cavin, charged with assault and battery with intent to kill his business partner, R. B. Clear, of Avilla, on the first day of August last. The case began on Monday. A large number of witnesses were summoned and the case attracted much attention The lawyers finished their pleas on Tuesday evening and the jury retired. Several hours later a verdict was agreed upon. It was delivered at the opening of the court resterday morning, and found Cavin not guilty. His plea was justifiable self-defense.

Mr. Cavin at one time owned considerable property in Auburn, among which was the Hotel Bradford.

THE HORSE MOVED

Columbia City Post.

Thursday afternon a horse attached to a buggy, when in front of the residence of M. D. Lamb, suddenly took a notion to stop, and no amount of persuasion could induce it to budge. While the various suggestions of the crowd were being exhausted, a farmer came driving into town and stopped to witness the fun. When he became satisfied on that score, he said: "Well, why don't you make it go on." He then said that he would guarantee to make the "balkiest" horse in the state pull, and as that was just what was wanted, he was invited to exercise his skill. He got down from his buggy and proceeded to unhtich the tugs of the balky animal. He next procured a rope and tying one end to the cross bar, attached the other to the animal's tail. The effect upon the hitherto stubborn horse was wonderful. He was taken by the bit and the word given, when he started off as willingly as if that were the only desire of his life. No explanation of the wonderful cure is given, but the farmer said that the third application has never failed to effectually cure the most obstinatedcase that was ever known. If this be true, it is a remedy at once simple, humane and of inestimable value. Whipping only serves to increase the horse's determination to "stand fast."

JURY DISAGREE.

The Luetgert jury at Chicago disagreed and were discharged at 11 a. m. yesterday. They had been locked up since Monday at 5 p. m. A majority had all the time been in favor of conviction. They had taken twenty-three ballots and on the last one stood 9 for conviction and 3 for acquittal. Again the little Daily of yesterday gave the news sooner than the big city dailies.

GIVE US A STONE PILE.

Year after year, we are treated to the spectacle of a lot of irresponsible and even criminal persons, mostly strong able-bodied men lying in abject idleness in our jail, singing, laughing, cracking jokes and making the brick walls ring with their hilarity. They even, now and then condescend to yell out some personal witticism at the weary and overworked taxpayer, as he drags his tired feet past the windows of the county bastile. We have had ten to fifteen in our jail boarding at our expense for some time. For twenty or more years we have noticed this, and now and then the COURIER has raised its voice for a change. Is there not some way by which we can make these taxeaters earn their bread? If there is no way now, it is high time we took some steps looking to a change that will relieve the honest taxpayers from supporting in idleness the dishonest portion of our population. And this reminds us that when J. C. Henry was lately visiting in Ohio he found a town in which they had a regular city government and a regular system of making the undesirable elements named, do some work. And not only the men serving sentences in jail, but idle vagabonds and tramps were picked up and set to work as soon as they struck the town. Tramps were not treated as criminals, but were given to understand they must not beg but could have all they wanted to eat and a good bed, if they cared to stay all night, but they must put in a certain time breaking stone for either a meal or a bed. This soon kept the most of the tramps away, but a man out of employment, who was only tramping because he could get no work, was given a temporary job. The stone they broke was valuable, and would be valuable here. If the idle hours that have been wasted in Auburn jail in the last twenty years had been so utilized, we would now have a quarter of the roads of the county as good as macadamized and the county and its farms many thousand dollars better off. Take for example, the tramps that have been hanging about Auburn during the past summer, living off our people. They should have been put at work. Some of them have later, got into jail. and then felt so good and coltish that they nearly took the strong building to pieces and carried it off. Now, before the next set gets in there let us have a way to work off some of their extra vitality in the way of honest toil. Prepare the way for a stone pile for such fellows to earn their board and improve our roads.

LECTURE AT THE JUNCTION

There will be a lecture at the school house at Auburn Junction Tuesday evening, Nov. 2, by Rev. R. C. Jones, of Leo. It will be for the benefit of the Young People's Reading Circle Work. The price of tickets is 10 cents, and they can be had before that evening, or at the door. The lecture will be a good one, and we hope the people will give it a liberal patronage and assist the school in paying this necessary expense.

MARY COMESKEY, Teacher.

WANTED HIS HAT.

John R. Boren, one of our farmer friends had a queer experience last evening or rather, this morning at about one o'clock. He was suddenly awakened out of his sleep by some one wanting to get in, and Mrs. Boren called out, "Who's there?" The voice outside said "I am C. C. Walter." He was asked what he wanted, and replied he wanted his hat. He was told they hadn't got his hat, and in the talk that followed he still claimed to be C. C. Walter. He said he had fallen out of Gene Trout's rig, and lost way. He asked the way to Auburn, and was told the way. Then he replied it was not Auburn he wanted but Spencerville. Mr. Boren said he did not know how to direct him from there to Spencerville and advised him to go away. He then wanted to know the way to Coleman's Corners and insisted on having his hat. Mr. Boren began to think the fellow drunk or crazy, and tried to get rid of him, but the fellow was determined not to go without his hat. Vexed at last Mr. Boren called to his wife to get the revolver, and when she handed it to him he cocked it. The click of the hammer was loud enough for the fellow to hear, and he lost no time in sneaking out of reach. Just who he is, is a mystery. But he is probably some one from town who was too full to know what he was doing, Such chaps are liable to get shot and it would serve them right. C. C. Walter has been sick at his home in Auburn several weeks.

GET THE SNOW PLOW.

We want the marshal to get out the snow plow so as to plow a passage way for pedestrians who go along Sunday evenings on the side walk past the church of God. A lot of boys and sometimes a few girls gather on the walk there when services are going on inside and people have to crowd pretty lively sometimes to get through there. The snow plow would just be the thing.

FLORAL SYMPOSIUM.

Lagrange had a "Floral Convention" a week or so ago. It went through the form of selecting a national flower by means of a program in which each person speaking could favor the flower of his choice. Everything got a good word, from clover to dandelions. Now after hearing the speeches, they will receive votes up to Nov. 6. It created a good deal of interest.

HOW TO FIND OUT.

Fill a bottle or common glass with urine and let it stand twenty-four hours a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys. When urine stains linen it is evidence of kidney trouble. To frequent desire to urinate or pain in the back, is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

WHAT TO DO.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy fulfills every wish in relieving pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passages. It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to get up many times during the night to urinate. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists, price fifty cents and one dollar. You may have a sample bottle and pamplet both sent free by mail Mention THE AUBURN COURIER, and send your address to Dr Kilmer & Co, Binghamton, N. Y. LOST THEIR LIVES.

Two Men Perish in a New York Fire.

Two men lost their lives in a fire on Broadway, near Ninth street, New York. When the bodies were discovered one was found in a standing position, the upper part of the body bending over a beam. The other was found at a front window, indicating that the man had struggled to reach the air and escape the flames. The fire was in a three-story and attic brick building occupied solely by the collar and cuff laundry of Gardner Vail. The flames were discovered shooting out of second-story windows. The flames gained headway rapidly, but the firemen had them under control after an hour's hard work, and on searching the building discovered the dead bodies of Patrick Collopy, engineer, and Henry Haight, foreman

WILL GRANT AUTONOMY.

Spain's Note in Reply to Minister Woodford Ready.

Madrid special: Senor Sagasta presided at a Cabinet council recently. The draft of the proposed reply to the note of the United States, presented through Gen. Steward L. Woodford, American Minister, shortly after his arrival here, was under consideration and was unanimously approved. Its full text has not yet been published. The reply explains that Lieut. Gen. Weyler has been replaced for political reasons, and includes the statement that the Government's decision is to grant autonomy to Cuba, and it protests against filibustering expeditions from the United States.

Silent Hunt for Mob.

An Indianapolis special says: The State officers who have anything to do with the prosecution of the Ripley County lynchers are silent as the grave about what progress they are making or what plans they have. It is a matter of common report that the leader of the mob was an ex-member of the legislature, and seven other names of members of the mob are said to be in the Governor's possession. The Attorney General, who is directly in charge of the case, declines to give any information about it. He said: "I can say only this, that it is the hardest task I have undertaken since I came into office. It is work that must be done slowly and carefully, and we can not go about it with a brass band, but I have hopes that justice will be done."

Shocking Tragedy.

When Mrs. A. J. Lynch entered the residence of C. W. Kessler at Spokane, Wash., a shocking scene was presented. Mrs. Kessler was dead from a ghastly wound in the throat and near by lay her 4-year-old son with a bullet through his head. The husband and father is in the city prison, half insane and under suspicion of having killed his wife and child. He claims his wife killed their child and committed suicide.

General Miles' Report.

General Miles, Commanding General of the army, has made his annual report to the Secretary of War. He commends the efficiency of the army and speaks of the progress that has been made on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts in the matter of fortifications. He asks that Congress authorize two more regiments of artillery to garrison the new fortifications, and also five additional regiments of infantry.

Attempt Made to Wreck a Passenger Train.

The attempt to wreck a train on the L. E. & St. L. Railroad by placing a stone wedge on the track was repeated the other day, probably by the same person, but was discovered. The stone wedges were found on each rail, one in front of the other, near English, Ind., and would surely have thrown the train down the embankment. Officers have been delegated to ferret out the offenders.

Denounces the Saloon.

The National Christian Missionary Convention in session at Indianapolis, decided to hold the next national convention at Chattanooga. Rev. F. D. Powers of Washington, was elected President, and Benjamin L. Smith of Cincinnati, Corresponding Secretary. Resolutions were adopted declaring the saloon the greatest evil confronting the church and civilization.

Burglar Killed.

In an attempt to rob a shoe store at Etna, Pa., Harry Williams, believed to be a notorious crook, was shot and killed by means of a gun which had been placed in the store as a trap for burglars. In his pocket were found fifty skeleton keys and diamonds, rings, watches and chains valued at $2,500.

Scoundrel Caught.

William Carter, colored, who attempted to outrage Miss Kate Swabb, near Xenia, Ohio, has been arrested and was jailed at Springfield instead of at Xenia to protect him from mob violence. It is believed now the danger of lynching is past.

Doctors Fight in Street.

Drs. Clay and Peffer, two young men with good practices at Elgin, O., came to blows recently on the streets of that village. Clay, it is reported, fatally stabbed Peffer.

Action Ratified.

The Ohio Society of Sons of the Revolution met in Cincinnati and ratified the recent action of the joint conference of the committees of the Sons of the Revolution and Sons of the American Revolution, whereby the two bodies are consolidated into one under the new name, "Society of American Revolution."

A Fatal Explosion.

By an explosion in the electrical room o the Colma fuse works at San Francisco, Mary Beek was killed and twelve other employes were injured, eight seriously and four slightly. The remains of the dead girl have not been recovered.

Smaller Than Any Season Since 1892—Only 174,000,000 Bushels.

Not since 1892 has the potato crop of the United States proved so nearly a failure, says the American Agriculturist in its final report of the yield of 1897. Compared with the liberal crop of last year, there is an apparent falling off of nearly 30 per cent. in the tonnage, and the quality of the whole is greatly deficient. County and township returns from the leading potato states to this weekly newspaper show the yield of potatoes to be 174,000,000 bushels, against 245,000,000 in 1896, 220,000,000 bushels in 1895, 185,000,000 bushels in 1894, and only 155,000,000 bushels in the short crop of 1892. The average rate yield per acre is placed at sixty-four bushels, taking the country at large, against eighty-six bushels in 1896, eighty-nine in 1895 and sixty-two in 1892. The reason for the disaster to the potato crop of 1897, is principally due to the blight and rot, the result of weather conditions.

BOILER LETS GO.

Several Men Killed by an Explosion in Detroit.

The boiler in the Detroit Cabinet Company's factory, at Hancock avenue and Riopelle street, in the northeastern part of Detroit, Mich., exploded with fatal and disastrous effects. At least three men are dead, and ten men more or less seriously injured.

The cause of the explosion is not yet ascertained. Both the front and rear ends of the four-story building were blown entirely out and the brick walls are in ruins. No fire resulted from the explosion. The concussion was so great that the whole northeastern part of the city was shaken and many windows broken.

The damaged building is a brick structure 150 feet square and four stories high. The floors were practically uninjured.

Newman Is Alive.

Oakland (Cal.) special: Newman, who left for Alaska several months ago and who was supposed to have been murdered by the Iako Indians, has returned to this country. His only explanation is that he had differences with his partner and sold out and returned here. Newman's disappearance caused considerable apprehension among the Alaskan officials. He was seen going up the Teku River. Later his boat came drifting back. A searching party found his clothes and outfit in the possession of a tribe of Teku Indians. Foul play was suspected and this evidence confirmed the belief. Newman refused to make any explanation.

Will Be a State.

Senator Morgan and daughters and F. M. Hatch, the new Minister from Hawaii, were among the passengers who arrived at San Francisco from Honolulu upon the steamship Belgic. Senator Morgan expressed himself as well pleased with what he saw and the manner in which he was entertained while on the island. He was more than ever enthusiastic on the subject of annexation and intimated that Hawaii may become a part of this country before the close of the coming year. "Hawaii is certainly going to be a state whether it be at the time of its annexation or later remains to be seen."

Robbed by Wholesale.

Byron Kear, a farmer, had a valuable horse stolen from a hitching post in Upper Sandusky, Ohio, at an early hour a few days ago. James Smalley, a wealthy farmer, had $10,000 worth of notes stolen from his pocket and Peter Grummel lost $47 in a similar manner. William Courter, William Seligman, Mrs. John Walter, Mrs. Henry Limbrecht and Mrs. Conrad Silef also had their pockets picked of small amounts.

Fate of a Banker's Son.

Clyde Montgomery, the 18-year-old son of Richard W. Montgomery, President of the Scott County Bank, was killed by falling between the cars of a moving freight train on the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis Railroad, two miles north of Scottsburg, Ind. Several cars passed over his body, which mangled him horribly. The boy was stealing a ride as a lark.

Wakarusa Bank Robbed.

A daring and sucess ful robbery was committed at Wakarusa, Ind. The safe of the Exchange Bank was blown open, and a considerable amount of money, mostly in gold and silver, was carried away. Dynamite was used in affecting an entrance.

Princeton Denounced.

The Presbyterian Synod of Illinois adopted resolutions denouncing Princeton University for allowing the use of wine at banquets, and scoring the faculty for permitting the sale of liquors at Princeton inn.

Murder and Suicide.

At Madrid, Mo., George Westerman, aged 60, shot his young step-daughter and then killed himself. He was suspected of criminal intimacy with his step-daughter. The girl was soon to become a mother.

JURY FAILS TO AGREE

FAMOUS LUETGERT MURDER CASE ENDS IN A MISTRIAL.

Jury Was Out Sixty-six Hours and Stood on Last Ballot Nine to Three for Conviction—New Trial Will Be Necessary.

End of the Long Siege.

The great Luetgert trial in Chicago, the most absorbing criminal prosecution of the century, ended in a disagreement of the jury. For sixty-six hours the jury tried in vain to reach a verdict. For thirty-eight hours the vote was 9 to 3 for conviction and at 10:40 o'clock Thursday forenoon the twelve men announced an irreconcilable disagreement, and Judge Tuthill, being convinced that it was useless and inhuman to attempt to force a verdict, reluctantly ordered its discharge. The twenty-second and last ballot stood nine for conviction and three for acquittal. This was irrespective of any question of the penalty which had to wait on the jury's decision as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner. The big sausage maker, the center of a series of the most dramatic episodes in the annals of criminal procedure, will have to go through this experience a second time, for he will be put on trial again for the murder of his wife.

The closing events of the famous trial made up a scene of not more than eleven minutes' duration. But a tense, feverish emotion was packed into every one of these minutes and even Luetgert, with his iron nerve, felt the strain. His face was bloodless as he entered the court room and a tangle of deep furrows extended across his brow. A keen, swift look shot from beneath his shaggy gray eyebrows and his glance seemed to take in at a flash that the supreme moment in his fate had arrived. As he came in from the jail a battery of eyes threw at him looks whose significance expressed all degrees of curiosity. In his walk, his manner, his mien, constraint was there and the anxiety that sent the blood from his cheek and put a purple tinge on his lips was visibly shared in by his counsel.

Court was opened and the jurors notified to appear. Nearly three days of wrangling, loss of sleep, and the close confinement had worked a wonderful transformation on them. They entered the room with lagging steps and sank into their chairs a woe-begone looking crowd.

ADOLPH L. LUETGERT.

In response to command from Judge Tuthill, Foreman Heichhold arose in his place and announced as his positive belief that no verdict could be reached. The judge interrogated the jurymen individually and each positively declared that no influence or argument could change his opinion. The attorneys for both sides agreed that the jury be discharged, and it was done.

Thus ended the first trial of what must be regarded as one of the most remarkable criminal cases of the century. The trial was in progress nearly nine weeks and cost the State of Illinois over $15,000. Of the disagreement it can frankly be said that the division in the jury fairly represents the division of opinion in the great world outside the jury box, where every fact and incident of the trial has been followed with engrossing scrutiny. It is probable that a poll of all those who have given intelligent consideration to the testimony and the law as laid down by the court would present a division of three to one in favor of a conviction. The proportion of those who believe in the prisoner's guilt is probably much greater. But belief in guilt and convicting a prisoner on circumstantial evidence such as that produced for the State in this case are two very different things.

Ready for a New Trial.

State's Attorney Deneen said he would press for another trial, but when he did not know. He said it would be on the same theory as the one finished was prosecuted. The vat theory, the boiling of the body of his wife in crude potash, and again the convincing part of the evidence of the heinous murder would be the rings. It was the rings that fortified the majority in the jury in its demand for the conviction of Luetgert. Attorneys Vincent and Phalen said they were ready for the new trial whenever it might be held. They said they would present a far stronger defense than before. Luetgert said he was anxious for another trial and confident it would be ended in his acquittal. He charged the failure of securing a verdict that would exonerate him from the fearful charge to the fact that Juror Shaw was accepted. The next time, he asserts, he will take the stand in his own defense, with or without the consent of his counsel. Judge Tuthill said that he believed it would be impossible to select a competent jury in Cook County on account of the publicity given to the proceedings of the trial just ended. It is therefore possible that Luetgert may never be tried again.

Luetgert said he was not surprised that the jury disagreed and that he was confident no verdict would be made twenty-four hours before. He was not taken by surprise when he heard Foreman Heichhold announce that no verdict had been made and none was likely to follow. Neither was it a surprise to him when every man in the jury box said the same thing in response to the questions of Judge Tuthill as he polled the jury. No objection was made to the discharge of the jury. Judge Tuthill asked Attorneys Vincent and Phalen what they were disposed to do and they said it seemed as if the discharge of the jury was the only thing justified by the situation. Luetgert was then asked the same question by Judge Tuthill and he agreed with his attorneys. State's Attorney Deneen said he thought it was apparent that the jury could not agree. Not once, however, did the jurors ask to be discharged. They were a determined set of fighters and they looked for no interference on the part of the judge, in whose discretion they might have been released at any time.

In the interviews given by members of the jury they said they paid little attention to the bones. Although the battle of the osteologists was the great feature of the trial, the sesamoid, femur and other bones which were introduced in evidence as portions of Mrs. Luetgert, and over which the battle was fought, were not considered by the jurors. They were cast aside as having no weight in proving guilt. To the way of thinking employed by several of the jurors, the work of impeaching the Schimpke girls and Nick Faber was fruitless. There were those in the jury who gave credence to their testimony that they saw Mrs. Luetgert with her husband going toward the engine room of the factory that night.

Greater, however, than all of the evidence was that of the rings. The absence from the smaller ring of any milling was the point that did most to keep the three jurors strong in their assertion that Luetgert was innocent. Nearly all of the witnesses said the small ring had a milled edge when they saw it with Mrs. Luetgert, while the one in evidence had a smooth outer surface. And when it was all ended an encomium of Inspector Schaack's methods issued from the jury room. With the exception of Foreman Heichhold, who wrote this peculiar document in which Schaack's manner of securing evidence was commended, most of the jurors denied any knowledge of signing such a document. They admitted having signed resolutions of thanks to Judge Tuthill and the court officers, but exhibited no knowledge of the last paragraph which sounded approval of the north side police inspector.

Were it not for Juror Harley, it is asserted by many of the other jurors, a verdict of guilty would have been rendered. Harley was convinced of Luetgert's innocence and he voted for acquittal on every ballot. His positiveness was a prop and support to Holabird and Barber, who voted with him on every ballot. When he left the court building he was cheered by the crowds in the street, who distinguished him as the one who was immovable in his belief of the prisoner's innocence.

After nearly two months of legal contention the case goes upon the records to be cited as another of the historic murder trials of the century. The celebrity of this sensational case has been partly due to the extraordinary character of the alleged crime as described by the State and partly to the unusual developments of the trial itself. The State had before it the difficult task of evoking the image of Mrs. Luetgert from a few bones and two gold rings. To connect the dead woman with the accused it then had to present to the jurors a story which naturally would seem hard to believe, and in proof of which it had only circumstantial evidence to offer. Experts were called in to identify bones and debris, and then these gentlemen were promptly met by experts for the defense who were able to deny the possibility of such an identification. This feature of the case, more even than the length of time consumed and the endless technical discussions, will call attention again to the marked inferiority of American criminal procedure as compared with that abroad. There was a waste of time and money and there was an unconscionable waste of words. There were times during the testimony of the experts when the recondite investigations into science became almost farcical and made this grave case a subject of jocular mention throughout the country.

As a result of all this the jury when it retired for a consideration of the law and the evidence found it impossible to unite on any verdict satisfactory to all of the twelve men. After spending sixty-six hours in heated discussion a majority numbering nine men gave up the attempt to persuade the other three that Luetgert should be convicted and Judge Tuthill let them all go home.

While the majority of the public may believe that Luetgert was guilty of the terrible crime laid to his charge, there has always been room for a lingering doubt in many minds that would operate powerfully on a juror's mind to prevent conviction. But for this lurking fear of doing an irreparable injustice to an innocent man the circumstances of this case would have placed Luetgert beyond the pale of human sympathy. The trial with its disagreement has blasted his life forever—a wrong beyond repair if he is innocent, a righteous retribution if the circumstantial testimony of the deserted factory and its hideous evidences of crime told the truth.

The Cleveland express on the Cleveland and Pittsburg Railroad ran into a shifting engine in the West Park, Allegheny, Pa. Ross Griffin, fireman, was fatally hurt and a number of passengers were cut and bruised.

THIS YEAR'S ELECTIONS.

Interesting Contests Are Being Carried On in Ten States.

Though the elections in November are for the most part for offices of little national importance, the result is looked forward to with interest. Elections will be held this November in Ohio, Virginia, Iowa, Pennsylvania, Kentucky, New York, Nebraska and Massachusetts. Ohio and Iowa Governors will be elected. In Maryland and Ohio a special national interest is involved on account of a United States Senator having to be elected from each of those States.

The greatest interest attaches in Ohio, Maryland and New York. In Ohio, the Democrats have endorsed the Chicago platform, and the silver forces are contending for the establishment of their doctrine and the election of a Senator. The Republicans are making a fight for the present gold standard, for Republican principles and for the election of Mr. Hanna to the Senate.

In Maryland the important fight is over the senatorship. It is a question of the complete overthrow of Gorman or the reestablishment of Gormanism. The situation is so mixed that few wise people attempt prediction. Gorman has the anti-Gorman element in his own party to contend with, and the Republican factions are more or less at outs on account of the successful resistance to Mr. Wellington's attempts to establish a dynasty of his own.

In New York, where interest centers almost solely in the Greater New York mayoralty fight, the situation is even more mixed than in Maryland. The Democrats are divided into silver and gold factions, Tammanyites and anti-Tammanyites. The Republicans have to contend with a division of their forces on account of the independent nomination of the Citizens' Union in New York City, and with a small fragment of the anti-Platt Republicans.

The interesting feature of the Massachusetts election is found in the fact that the Democrats have come out squarely for the Chicago platform. The result is not in doubt, but the interest is in knowing how large a vote the silver Democrats can get in Massachusetts.

In Iowa very important local considerations enter into the fight. The Democrats, in addition to making a fight on the other Bryan lines, are attacking the record of the present Republican State officers, accusing them of extravagance, etc. Strong speakers are being put into the State by both parties and a hard fight is being made.

In Nebraska the Democrats, Populists and silver Republicans are united. In Kentucky it is a struggle between Blackburn and the Carlisle-Lindsay gold Democrats. In Pennsylvania there is a fight between the Quay and the anti-Quay elements in the Republican ranks and the election of State Auditor will show how strong the antis are. In Virginia the Republicans have no regular ticket. The Democrats will elect a Governor and a Legislature that will return Senator Daniel. In Colorado there is a great mix-up among the silver forces.

M'KINLEY'S IMAGE IN BRONZE

Medals Now Being Struck Off by the Philadelphia Mint.

Bronze medals bearing the likeness of President McKinley are being rapidly struck off by the mint, and soon the whole issue will have been finished. This work is being done in accordance with an ancient custom that has prevailed ever since the time of Washington. The medals are very valuable, inasmuch as the supply is limited and the demand is large. Some collectors have complete collections of these medals, from that showing the profile of Washington to that showing the profile of Cleveland. Several of the medals already struck off have been sent to the President for himself and the members of his cabinet. The profile of the PULLMAN IS NO MORE.

PALACE CAR MAGNATE DIES OF HEART FAILURE.

End Comes Suddenly in the Early Morning—Started a Poor Lad at $40 a Year and at Death Was Reputed Worth $40,000,000.

Career Is Closed.

George M. Pullman, president of the Pullman Palace Car Company, died at 5:30 o'clock Tuesday morning, at his home in Chicago. Death was sudden, and is attributed to heart failure. Monday night Mr. Pullman retired at 11 o'clock, after entertaining a party of friends at his home. At that time he made no particular complaint regarding his health.

During the past month Mr. Pullman had been ailing, but the trouble was not sufficient to interfere with his business, and Monday he was at his office as usual. Early Tuesday morning a friend, who was stopping with Mr. Pullman, heard a slight noise from his host's bedchamber and entered to see Mr. Pullman make his way to a safe, where he fell gasping for breath. Physicians were summoned, but the sick man had expired before a doctor could reach his side. His very sudden death came as a shock to his relatives and friends, and as it became known throughout the city formed the chief topic of conversation in business circles. Mrs. Pullman was in New York at the time of her husband's demise.

Founder of a City.

George Mortimer Pullman, one of Chicago's most distinguished citizens and founder of the city which bears his name, was born in Chautauqua County, N. Y., March 3, 1831. At the age of 14 he was a clerk in a country store at $40 a year and his board. Three years later he went to Albion, N. Y., where he was employed as a cabinetmaker. During the following ten years he was engaged in contract work of various kinds. In 1859 he went to Chicago. Between 1859 and 1862 he remodeled several passenger coaches into sleeping cars. These cars were first run over the Chicago and Alton and Galena and Chicago railroads. In 1865 the first complete sleeping car, "The Pioneer," was finished at a cost of $18,000. He then organized the Pullman Palace Car Company and established the plant at the town of Pullman, which was a plan of his own creation, and has grown to splendid proportions and is known the world over as a model city. At the time of his death Mr. Pullman is reputed to have been worth $40,000,000.

The Pullman Palace Car Company is the largest railroad manufacturing interest in the world. It employs a capital of $40,000,000 and has assets exceeding $45,000,000. About the time of the World's Columbian exposition it had in its service 2,239 cars and employed 13,885 persons, whose annual wages aggregated $3,331,527, being an average of $610 per capita. At present, however, both the number of employes and their wages are lower than then.

But, although Mr. Pullman was the moving spirit of this vast enterprise, his capacity for business was not fully satisfied in any single venture. Among the important interests with which he was identified were the Eagleton iron works of New York, and the New York Loan and Improvement Company, which he organized and which built the Metropolitan Elevated Railway on Second and Sixth avenues. He had also been interested in the Nicaragua canal plan since its inception.

At the time it was constructed, in 1884, the Pullman office building, where the business headquarters of the car company are maintained, was probably the finest business and apartment block in Chicago, and it does not stand behind many to this day. His home, a mansion of brown stone on Prairie avenue and Eighteenth street, is one of the finest appointed residences in Chicago.

In business Mr. Pullman was prompt but never hasty. Socially, he was courtly in manner, but his formality was not such as to make him unapproachable. In 1867 he married Miss Hattie A. Sanger, daughter of James T. Sanger of Chicago. Their four children are Florence, Harriet, George M. and Walter, the last two being twins.

GEN. RAMON BLANCO

Succeeds "Butcher" Weyler as Captain-General in Cuba.

Gen. Ramon Blanco, who succeeds Gen. Weyler in Cuba, is credited with being one of the ablest commanders in the Spanish army. As governor of the Philippine Islands he gave satisfaction to his Government and treated the natives with justice and moderation. While much of his work in Cuba will be of a military nature, it is certain that he will follow the example of GENERAL BLANCO.

Gen. Campos and carry out all his military operations according to the accepted principles of warfare, thus reversing the savage and sanguinary policy of Weyler. Gen. Blanco is a fine appearing man and is entirely in sympathy with the policy of the Liberal party, which means to grant autonomy to Cuba. The Cubans, however, will probably reject any such offer and will fight to the last for their independence.

INDIANA INCIDENTS.

RECORD OF EVENTS OF THE PAST WEEK.

Shoots His Inamorata and Then Himself—Hammond Man Dies of Lockjaw—Found Dead in a Well—He Declines a Consulship.

Murder and Suicide.

A double tragedy occurred in Logansport, at the home of ex-Councilman Schaefer. Miss Laura Bopp, a domestic, was shot by Charles Ward, a young machinist, who then fired two bullets into his own body. One of the shots penetrated his heart and his death was instantaneous. The couple were engaged to be married.

Shot by a Boy.

At Maulridge Church, four miles west of Bedford, a fight occurred, resulting in the death of William Pierce and the serious wounding of his brother Walter. The Pierces were shot by Alonzo Roach, who went to Bedford and asked to be locked up. The tragedy is the result of a feud of long standing between the Pierce and Roach families, who live in the same neighborhood.

Declines the Consulship.

James S. Dodge of Indianapolis has announced that he prefers the position of department commander of the Grand Army of the Republic in Indiana to the consulship at Nagasaki, Japan, and he sent to the State Department a letter declining the appointment. He is the third to decline the appointment.

Lockjaw Kills Henry Huehn.

Henry Huehn, former city treasurer and one of Lake County's most prominent citizens, died at Hammond of lockjaw. Oct. 1 he stepped upon a rusty nail. He appeared to be recovering until three days before his death, when his jaws set.

Took Away About $30,000.

The Indianapolis police have not been able to get any trace of P. A. McDonald, the absconding "banker and broker." An investigation indicates that he took about $30,000 out of the city.

Found Dead in a Well.

Peter Cary was found dead in a well in Taylor township. It is supposed that he was cleaning the well and that his death was caused by "damps."

Bloody Fight Ends a Dance.

At a dance at Smyrna there was a bloody battle in which one man was killed and several fatally hurt.

Congressman C. L. Henry, who represents the gas belt district, has officially announced his withdrawal from the congressional race, which is already on.

There are 400 cases of Texas fever in Vigo County, and while the death rate so far has not been heavy, there is danger of serious results from the epidemic.

A "quart" shop at Greenwood gave the villagers much offense, and a charge of dynamite was placed under the building and the structure and contents were scattered broadcast.

Mrs. Sallie Stier, residing east of New Albany, committed suicide by inhaling chloroform on account of a quarrel with her husband, Alonzo Stier. The suicide's mother was a niece of President James Buchanan.

James Ray, colored, was shot and probably fatally wounded at New Albany by Dr. Botany Jones, during a dispute over a doctor's bill. Jones tried to escape, but was caught. The bullet entered Ray's spinal column, and he is partially paralyzed.

Anderson has the littlest humane society in the country and the members have begun their first prosecution. They are tots whose ages run from 5 to 10 years. A RECORD-BREAKING RIDE.

"Belverton-on-Sea, July, 189—.
"Messrs. Gearup & Co.:

"Gentlemen: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your favor of yesterday's date asking me to ride one of your Special New Hellespont Bicycles in the South-Eastern Mile Championship Race to be held in this town on Saturday next. In declining to comply with your request, I cannot refrain from expressing my astonishment at the extraordinary offer by which it is accompanied. To endeavor to tempt an amateur rider with a monetary bribe is, as I should have thought you would have been aware, a very serious matter; and it will hereafter become my duty to consider the propriety of bringing the case under the notice of the National Cyclists' Union.

"Yours faithfully,
"RICHARD DINGLE."

I despatched the above on Tuesday night, and before noon on the following day I received a reply-paid telegram from Messrs. Gearup worded as follows: "Our letter sent under misapprehension; will fully explain in a few days. Meanwhile, obliged if you will defer communicating with N. C. U. Kindly wire."

My answer to this was "Very well; will wait one week," and, when I had handed the form to the messenger, I dismissed the matter from my mind with a little laugh, and spent the next half-hour in the examination of the high-grade Gravelotte machine which had just been delivered to my order, and on which I hoped to achieve the victory in Saturday's race.

I had only recently started as a medical practitioner in the rising watering place of Belverton, and so far had not found the duties of my profession interfere to any appreciable extent with the pursuit of my favorite amusement—cycle racing.

During the particular week of which I am writing my services were required for the first time on Friday morning, by a tall, bearded man of gentlemanly appearance, who informed me that his sister, who, with himself, had just arrived for a brief seaside holiday, had been taken suddenly ill.

If I could come at once he would be extremely obliged, and would escort me to the furnished cottage they temporarily occupied. To this I assented, and we left the house together.

"You have capital outbuildings here, doctor," remarked my visitor, who had given the name of Selhurst, as he glanced at the large wooden shed which ran along the side of the house.

"Yes," I said, "and they are very useful. My space indoors is rather limited."

"Cycles do take up a lot of room," he replied. "You will excuse me for mentioning it, doctor, but I am a rider myself—somewhat of an enthusiast—and am glad to meet a man of whose doings on the track I have often read with admiration."

We walked on in silence for a few moments, then Selhurst inquired, suddenly:

"Have you ever studied mental disorders, Dr. Dingle?"

"Oh, yes; not specially, though."

"Ah! It is in that way my sister suffers."

"Indeed?"

"Yes; she has never been herself since the death of her little girl, which occurred under exceptionally painful circumstances, about a month ago. The poor child was always a weakling, and, acting under medical advice, her mother let her accompany me on my last business voyage to Australia. Alas! she died on the way home, and we buried her at sea."

"Your sister is a widow, I presume, Mr. Selhurst?"

"Yes; her husband has been dead two years. She is a Mrs. Gray."

"What form does her derangement take?"

"A most curious one—she fancies that her child is still alive."

"I am afraid the case is serious. Has she been under treatment before?"

"No; I was always hoping she would get better, and, indeed, she seemed so before we left London. She has acted as my housekeeper since her husband died, you know; but this morning she is very wild—I fear the excitement of yesterday's journey down here must have upset her. Ah, here we are; you shall judge her condition for yourself."

We entered a two-story house on the outskirts of the town, and, leaving me in a small sitting-room on the ground floor, Selhurst went upstairs. I heard him unlocking a door rather noisily; then he descended and asked me to follow him.

He conducted me to a room immediately above that in which I had been seated, and murmuring, "She seems to have been asleep," left me to contemplate one of the most beautiful women I have ever seen.

She was lying on a couch near the window, fully dressed in deep mourning. The morning sunshine played on her rich, auburn hair, and accentuated the extreme pallor of her exquisitely chiselled features.

The next moment she opened her eyes; then, before I could utter a word sprang up, and running to the door, opened it, and having surveyed the landing, came back to where I stood and said at once:

"You are a doctor, I believe? I am not ill, but I want your help. That is why I let him—Mr. Selhurst—summon you."

"What can I do for you?" I asked, soothingly.

"I like your look—I am going to trust you. But first, you can tell me this: Has he informed you of the death of my darling little girl?"

I nodded assent.

"It is a lie," she cried fiercely. "My child is alive. She is always calling to me, but he won't let me go to her. He—he has tried to drive me into madness. Listen, my dear one is actually here, in another room, at this moment; I heard her cry a few minutes since."

"Why, then, did you not—"

"I could do nothing; I was locked in."

"But if he wishes you to think your child dead, why does he bring her here?"

"Why? It is part of his plan. It is what for some weeks he has done in London. He wants me to hear her voice, to chafe at my inability to reach her, to rage impotently when he repeats the fiction of her death. I am naturally nervous, and perhaps, hysterical; if you do not help me, I shall not be able to bear the strain much longer. Selhurst will succeed in effecting his object."

"But why should he desire to do this thing?"

"I'll tell you in a word—for money! In the event of my insanity he would become my child's guardian, and would thus have the handling of our property, a sum of about £4,000."

"You are making terrible charges," I said, slowly; "terrible! If Mr. Selhurst—"

She interrupted me. "Mr. Selhurst—I can never again bear to speak of him as my brother—is thoroughly unscrupulous," she said. "He sticks at nothing. Even in sporting matters he has acted dishonorably. Three years ago, at a great bicycling handicap in the Midlands, he was warned off the track for giving a false name and false particulars in his entry form. He won the race, but some one found out the fraud. Since then—but why do you start?"

The movement had been involuntary. I recollected now that I had seen the man before, and how chance had enabled me to unmask him. I did not reply to Mrs. Gray's question, but asked instead:

"Well, how can I help you?"

"In this way. I believe that this evening I shall be able to make my escape—that is, if you will help me. Do you know a village called Nepton?"

"Yes, but it is six miles from here, and a long distance from a railway station."

"Never mind; I must get there; I will tell you why. My dear husband's father is the rector of the place; he is the only friend I have in the world now, and I want to tell him how I am situated, for I know he will help me."

"Yes, but—."

"You ride a cycle, don't you? Everyone does nowadays. I ride myself, though I haven't a machine. But Mr. Selhurst has one, and he has brought it here. If you will only come with me, I can go on that. I—I can wear his clothes. Do come with me, Dr. Dingle," she added in a pleading voice.

What was I to say, to do? Was she mad, or had she spoken truth? Distrust of Selhurst almost led me to believe her.

"At what time would you start?" I asked, at last.

"You will come, then? Thank you—thank you!"

"I cannot promise."

"Oh, you will come! Be here at nine—outside the house. You must go now, or my jailer will grow suspicious. Good-bye." She pressed my hand gratefully.

I went downstairs and confronted Selhurst.

"Well?" he said.

"Well," I answered, "the case is a difficult one. I must think it over. You shall hear from me later on."

"No immediate development is likely?"

"Oh, no."

I was about to step into the street when a piercing cry in a child's voice rang through the house. An evil look mounted to Selhurst's brow, but he said nothing. I went out. That cry decided me. Mrs. Gray was a victim of this villain's wicked plans. She should have my help.

Accordingly at 8.45 that evening I went round to the outhouse which had excited Selhurst's comment and got out my old roadster. As I did so, I glanced at the new and glittering mount I was to bestride in to-morrow's race, and suppressed the thought that to-night's adventure was scarcely the best possible preparation for that encounter. Then I locked the door, put the key in my pocket and started for the rendezvous.

Mrs. Gray, dressed in knickerbockers and short jacket, awaited me, and rewarded my punctuality with a smile and a slight blush.

"I hate riding in these things," she said apologetically; "but you see, doctor, I have no option. Let us get away at once," she added.

I assented, silently, and we both mounted and rode off.

There was little conversation between us. Our way lay along smooth and level roads, so that we proceeded at a good pace, and were soon within a mile of our destination. But at this point Mrs. Gray, who had fallen behind, suddenly called out that she had punctured her tire. I dismounted, and walked back to where, apparently in tears, she stood beside her bicycle.

"How unfortunate!" she cried, brokenly. "Oh, how unfortunate!"

"Perhaps it can be set right," I said, soothingly. "Let me see if I can find where it is."

Then asking me to hold my own bicycle I stooped down, and——

In a moment she had mounted my machine, and was riding away at topmost speed.

I stood transfixed. I neither called to her to stop nor made any effort to go after her. Mechanically, I turned again to look for the puncture, and found that it consisted of a slit about a foot long. It had evidently been deliberately made with a knife. I had been tricked, fooled, duped!

But was the woman who had thus treated me mad or sane? That was the question I asked myself when I had grown somewhat calmer. In the former case my predicament would indeed be terrible; in the latter, I must have been victimized for some reason I was altogether unable to guess.

In this uncertainty I trudged beside the disabled bicycle wearily back to Belverton, and made my way to Selhurst's cottage. It was in complete darkness, and, though I knocked several times, I obtained no answer. At last, however, a lady from the next house came forward, and told me that the gentleman I was in search of had been unexpectedly summoned to town, and should not be back. I thanked my informant and proceeded homeward. Should I now unravel the mystery, I wondered? Reaching my house, I went first of all to the outhouse to deposit the bicycle. Then I gave a cry. The lock on the door had been forced; evidently I had been decoyed for purposes of theft. My racer my splendid Gravelotte, had been stolen! I was wrong. The machine stood just where I had left it!

My housekeepr was unable to throw any light upon the circumstances of the forced lock, and I was eventually obliged to retire to rest more mystified than ever. Physically worn out, both physically and mentally, I fell at once into a deep, dreamless slumber, from which I did not awaken until after 8 o'clock next morning. I immediately determined not to perplex myself about the previous evening's adventure until the great race had been won or lost. This, I suppose, was a wise decision, for when the afternoon arrived, I felt fresh and fit, and not only came off victor, but actually succeeded in breaking the amateur record for the distance.

My performance caused tremendous enthusiasm, and on my way to the dressing-room at the conclusion of the race I had to receive the congratulations of quite a throng of friends. It was at this moment that a man in the crowd seized the head of my machine, from which, of course, I had dismounted, and, striking it with a heavy stick, promptly disappeared. The effect of the blow was to remove the name-plate containing the words "Gravelotte No. 1," and I stooped to pick it up from the ground. Then, to my astonishment, I saw that it had only been loosely fastened on, and that let into the enamel on the very spot on which it had hung was the inscription, "Special New Hellespont." Had I, after all—? Yes, the two makes were almost precisely alike, but now I noticed several small points of difference between the wheel I had just ridden and the one I had examined the other day. The former, with its false name-plate, had evidently been substituted for the latter during my absence last night—and, I felt sure of it, by none other than the oppressor of the charming widow in whose company I had started for that brief but eventful ride to Nepton.

My surmise was correct. On reaching home I was handed a note which had been delivered by hand during the afternoon. It ran as follows:

"So, in spite of everything, Dr. Dingle has done excellent service on behalf of the machine he spurned, better than might reasonably have been expected. His double feat shall be duly chronicled in large type in every important newspaper in the country when, on Tuesday next, the prospectus of the "Special New Hellespont Company, Limited," is published for the benefit of the financial world. Would Dr. Dingle like some preference shares? He treated Messrs. Gearup & Co.'s head partner, the future managing director of the new company, very badly a few years since, and would like to have done so again. James Selhurst, however, forgives him in both these matters, and for the attempt he made last night to run away with his, J. S.'s, wife. But if this attempt were generally known it would hardly enhance Dr. Dingle's professional prospects, would it? Let Dr. D. think over this, and probably he will hesitate before making the communication he contemplated to the National Cyclists' Union. Otherwise—"

That was all; the document was tpyewritten and bore no signature. There could be no doubt, however, as to the identity of the sender. Selhurst's audacity simply staggered me, but not more so than the wonderful acting of his wife. Of course, I could say nothing about the affair; the ingenious couple were in a position to swear away my character effectively, and who would believe the extraordinary story I should have to tell in my defence?—London Tit-Bits.

REDEEMING OLD BILLS.

Currency Sent to the Treasury Sometimes in Bad Condition.

Speaking about the fumigation of old bills which arrive at the Treasury Department from the New Orleans Sub-Treasury, Assistant Treasurer Meline said to a Star reporter to-day that this was absolutely necessary for the protection of the clerks who handle this old currency.

"These clerks," said Major Meline, "are constantly exposed to danger in the handling and counting of old currency. Sometimes the smell of these old bills is nauseating. I don't remember, however, a case where any clerk has ever been attacked by a disease from the handling of this money. This may be due to the fact that every precaution is taken. Whenever money has come here from points infected by contagious diseases it has always been fumigated. The clerks frequently wash their hands with disinfecting soaps and take other precautions. I consider that they have been remarkably fortunate."

There have been cases at the Treasury of money sent in for redemption in a terrible state. In several instances this money has been taken from the bodies of people found mysteriously murdered. The bodies lay for weeks or months without discovery until the clothng which contained the money would be alive with putrid matter. Money thus discovered is not handled by the authorities, but rushed to the Treasury for redemption. It is sometimes in such condition that the odor is almost unbearable. This is only one of many instances of a similar nature. Dogs and goats which swallow money are often killed, dissected and the remnants of the money sent to the Treasury for redemption.

This is the time of the year when money hidden away in stoves is damaged by forgetful owners starting fires. They pick up what is left and send it here.—Washington Star.

Mill Hand and Scholar.

Balliol, the most exclusive of Oxford colleges, has among its undergraduates a married Lancashire mill hand 23 years of age, who worked his way into the university by studying after factory hours, with the help of free libraries and university extension lectures. He passed his Greek examination eighteen months after learning the alphabet, and within six weeks after admission to college won the Brackenbury history scholarship, worth $400 a year for four years. He is trying for an honor degree in history.

DOWN THE MISSISSIPPI

DID you ever make the trip in a big steamer plying between St. Louis and New Orleans? The height of the season of 1897 has seen the usual pilgrimage of tourists, and the belles and beaux of many a river town have crowded the decks and staterooms of the soft-moving boats that float out from some city wharf, and drop anchor only after many days, 1,250 miles away. At the very outset it is interesting to watch the roustabouts, tumbling over each other in the haste engendered by the hoarse voice of the mate, loading merchandise found for Southern ports. They are a curious study—these roustabouts—with their half-clad, powerful figures, their song-song cry of "heave-he ho-o!" their jog-trot shamble, and the reckless abandon with which their work is done. They have no cares. If they have any ambition it is to get the big steamer out of port, lie lazily on the lower decks, or play "craps," or sit and watch the white foam of the river as the boat plunges forward on its way.

When the last barrel, box and trunk is bestowed the big bell gives three taps, the captain, from the hurricane deck, shouts "Let her go, there!" the gangplanks are pulled in, the prow of the great steamer swings out and with a wide turn starts on its delightful pilgrimage. The captain is the patriarch and hero of the expedition. You can hear his big voice at all hours of the night, sometimes over your head, where he stands sentinel to see that all goes well; sometimes from the lower deck, where his vigorous and secular Anglo-Saxon arouses the mate and his roustabouts to duties engendered by new conditions; and oftener on the promenade deck, where he talks politics with the men and relates the history of each point of interest, a history which he has come to believe is faithful by reason of its repetition. Nobody knows when or where the captain sleeps. The cheerful buzz of his voice reaches your stateroom in the still night, and you drop off to sleep wondering if the captain ever does retire. When you wake in the morning there is the captain again, freshly-shaven, clean, bright and cheerful as ever, with an appetite for breakfast that only equals your own.

While the Nile has been rolling along for ages in the same channel, the Mississippi has been roaming all over its valley, twisting hither and thither, building up banks and then cutting through them and suddenly abandoning the old channel for a new one. It is doing the same thing to-day. The vast length of the Mississippi and its tributaries, measuring 9,000 miles of navigable waters and draining an area of 1,244,000 square miles, must account in a large part for the great quantity of matter it cuts away, but even when these facts are considered the estimate must still appear enormous. It is stated by experts that the dirt carried down by the Mississippi in a single year amounts to a solid mass one mile square and 163 feet deep. This sediment is being constantly deposited along the shores and upon the bars and islands that abound in this remarkable stream.

The atmosphere of lazy floating days, on board a steamer, crammed full of unusual scenes, flashes of excitement, grand and bewildering vistas of field and flood and verdure-clad hills, in which the beauties of the Hudson are duplicated, reproduced and excelled with enough scenic luxuriance to create a score of Hudson Rivers, cannot be expressed or indicated upon a newspaper page. It is altogether unique, and most of the people in this great, bustling country will never be able to enjoy the sensation in proper person.

The rafting industry is exclusive. It is not carried on before a grand stand or in the presence of a multitude. Its secrets are all its own, and one of these days the material exhausted, this industry will disappear with all of its traditions and romances, and with it will vanish from view the river types, the sturdy logger, the peculiarly northern roustabout or "rooster" as he is familiarly known, and the rugged captains who embody all the river lore and are walking encyclopedias of everything that belongs to the history of this great stream since the first Canadian voyagers and hardy French woodsmen penetrated these wilds.

One of these rafting steamers is a sight to see. It keeps its bows against the rear end of a mighty fabric of logs, in a position to push it down stream. A second steamer, smaller in size, is fastened transversely across the front end or bow of the raft, and is pushed along quiet and unresisting, with its wheel motionless, as a sort of cut water for the unwieldy expanse of logs. But this is not its mission. A telephone connection is established between the two steamers by means of wires stretched across the raft, and as the rear steamer pushes the entire mass slowly and majestically down stream it soon becomes evident what the function of the bow steamer is. The tortuous course of the river requires a constant shifting in the head of the raft to keep it from going ashore or into cross currents, and this is the duty of the assisting steamer. Lying transversely across the river and attached firmly to the raft, a few revolutions of its wheel pushes the front end of the raft away from a dangerous bank, and by backing water the head of the raft is dragged back into the channel away from threatening shoals.

The difficulties of turning and twisting an invertebrate mass of logs in narrow and tortuous channels will be better appreciated when the actual size of the raft is understood. In length it is 1,200 feet, and thus equal to several average city blocks, and its width is almost 300 feet. More than half the raft is double decked, meaning that it is composed of two layers of logs, and it is estimated that not less than 10,000 logs are included within its booms, a number sufficient to yield more than 2,000,000 feet of lumber. Scores of freight trains would be required to transport the members of this inarticulate leviathan, whose weight is almost beyond computation.

The passenger on a Mississippi River steamer is expected to spend most of the day in good weather on the promenade deck, with field or opera glass in hand, viewing the delightful scenery.

About the third day one begins to take interest in the landings. You want to know how long the boat will stop at the next town, and whether you can run up into the city and "stretch your legs." You try it once or twice, only to find that the Captain has hurried your return by a vigorous pull on the bell. This is one of the Captain's little jokes. He doesn't mean it, and as you wipe the perspiration from your brow he tells you how many points of interest you might have seen if only you had not foolishly run back to the boat.

The old days of the passenger steamer industry are a vivid memory with every river veteran—the high gambling days, those when every inch of steam was put to the danger point in a race between two stately flowing palaces. There is still lingering reminiscence here and there, suggestions of those brilliant, exciting hours, when life was a reckless whirl for the deck hand, and a thrilling experience for the passenger on a typical steamer. The gamblers, the grotesque dancers, the singing roustabouts, are nearly all gone, but the odd characters who have furnished themes for many a captivating story still haunt the landing places that one passes in a trip down the Mississippi River.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.... October 21, 189

JUDGE ROBY'S PLAN.

To Work Out Instead of Board Out Fines.

Some Practical Suggestions.

Judge Roby of the DeKalb circuit court, has addressed a letter to the commissioners of the county, offering some very wholesome and practical suggestions concerning the management of jail prisoners. He says:

All able bodied male prisoners sentenced to the county jail held for punishment or for non-payment of fine or costs only, may be put at hard labor upon the public wharves, streets or alleys or other thoroughfares in any town or city in the county where convicted, or improvement for the public good or benefit, under such rules and regulations as the board of county commissioners shall prescribe, and the sheriff or custodian of such prisoners shall obey all such rules and regulations. Burn's Statutes, Sec. 1935.

Sec. 1936 provides for the appointment of guards and other incidents. This act was in force Sept. 19, 1881.

Sec. 8330 was in force May 31, 1879, and confers upon the county board power to establish work houses. Sec. 8331 confers upon the board power to appoint superintendents, who shall, if the work house is on the poor farm, be superintendents of the county asylum. Sec. 8332 empowers all courts and magistrates to sentence any person to the county work house instead of the county jail. Sec. 8334 provides that all inmates of the work house shall so far as is consistent with age and sex and ability, be kept at hard labor in such manner as the board of commissioners shall deem most advantageous to the county, such labor to be performed in or at such work house or upon the public streets or improvements, substantially as provided in Sec. 1935. Further provisions of the act relate to management and details.

These statutes are independent of each other and seemed to have escaped attention in the county. It is believed that existing conditions render it desirable that without coming into competition with other labor, inmates of jail be maee to do some useful work. Juries are disinclined, as it is, to impose jail sentence on account of the expense to the county and the well known fact that such prisoners are kept in comparative luxury and absolute idleness.

Because of this feeling states prison sentences have sometimes been imposed when a shorter time of hard labor in the county jail would have answered every purpose as well, and acquittals have been had when some punishment ought to have been imposed.

Persons convicted of minor offences by justice of the peace, who can not or will not pay the fine assessed, are sent to Auburn and made a charge upon the county. If they were put to work the corrective effect of the punishment would be agumented and the county would receive, in addition to the benefit derived from the punishment of crime, an equivalent for the money expended. As it is, justices hesitate to impose adequate fines in many cases. since to do so is merely to furnish board for persons of no character. If hard labor with such confinement, the justice would feel free to commit, and increased certainty in the punishment of minor offences follow, I believe it would reduce the tramp nuisance and such offences as public drunkenness to a minimum.

The states prison is maintained by taxation equally with the jail and the same people pay the tax. It is now crowded and its occupants are idle. Commitment to it ought not to be made except as the crime compels.

There were over eighty men confined in the jail during the year last past. The total time served by them was over 1,500 days. Many of these men were awaiting trial and not could have been compelled to work, but it is safe to assume that DeKalb county can have the yearly benefit of 1,500 days work at forty cents a day. The price has to be paid anyway, while at present the time is wasted.

Ninety-seven out of every hundred persons use Brant's Cough Balsam. We appeal to the three who don't.

"It cured me after all others failed." Charles Goetz, Gaylord, Mich.

We warrant it—25 cents.

PAINFUL ACCIDENT

John Clark Shot Through the Leg With a Shotgun.

The true particulars of the accident with which John Clark met on Hamilton Lake Sunday could not be learned until late last night, and is as follows:

Last week Joe Forman, Chas. Wyatt, Chas. Bolton, and J. G. Johnson went up Hamilton lake to hunt and fish a few days.

Sunday Mr. Clark took a rig from Mr. Johnson's barn and went up there after the party. He arrived at the lake at about eight o'clock and concluded to go out with the boys in a boat and fish a while. He and Mr. Johnson were in one boat. They had with them a double barreled shotgun which belongs to Jim Rainer. When quite a distance out they saw a couple of mud hens fly up and Mr. Johnson hurriedly raised the gun which was lying in the bottom of the boat and shot one load at the birds. By this time they were off too far to waste a second load and Mr. Johnson laid the gun down in the boat and just as he did so the other barrel was discharged. He has no knowledge that the hammer was cocked, but thinks it was not. The load entered the calf of Mr. Clark's leg and went upward, tearing a terrible hole about six or eight inches in length. Medical skill from Hamilton was summoned as soon as possible and during the day Mr. Clark was brought home. Monday Dr. Hines dressed the wound and it is his belief that the wound is such that it will easily heal up, if given proper attention. It is the belief of both Mr. Clark and Mr. Johnson that the accident was wholly accidental, and the blame falls on no one. Mr. Clark will no doubt be confined to his bed for weeks, and it will probably be months before he will be able to work.

MORE GRAVEL ROAD,

Trustee Dancer, of Jackson, deserves a medal. He is working to get subscriptions to gravel the slanting road out southeast of town, from a point on the town line of Jackson, near S. J. Brandon's home, east to Magginis' farm. This has always been a notoriously bad piece of road, and its improvement will be hailed with joy. Mr. Dancer hopes to get $100 in cash subscriptions, and has already got about half of it. Several of our business men gave $5 to $10 each. Then he is going to get the hauling contributed as far as he can, and he thinks in this way, the job can be done. DeKalb county is bound to have good roads.

OBITUARY.

Philip Lung, son of John and Susanna Lung was born in Champaign county, Ohio, Aug. 15, 1819 and died at his home Oct. 23d, 1897, aged 78 years, 2 months and 8 days.

He was the youngest of six children, all of whom have preceded him to the world of joy.

His boyhood days were spent in his native county where he attended school 18 months, which was the extent of his educational advantages. Before his eighth birthday he went to live among strangers where he remained until of age. In 1840 he came to DeKalb county and entered 160 acres of land in Butler township. After remaining here a short time he returned to Ohio, remaining there ten years he again came to Indiana. He sold the farm which he entered in 1840 and entered the farm where he lived the remaining years of his life. He was married in Pennsylvania, Nov. 3d, 1859 to Margaret S. Ott who died March 1st 1872, aged thirty-four years. To them were born four children, two are living Nicholas and Daniel. In his earlier years he, with his wife, was a member of the Lutheran church but later he united with the Methodist Protesant church at Butler Chapel. For many years he was a member of the DeKalb Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons in which fraternity he was a Master Mason. At his own request at the stated communication of that Lodge held on Tuesday evening Dec. 15th, A. D. 1891 A. L. 5891, he was Demitted by that lodge from which date all jurisdiction by it over his membership ceased. He was recommended to the favor and protection of the craft wheresoever dispersed throughout the world. He, by his integrity and honorable dealing, won the esteem and love of his fellow citizens and was a representative of the pioneer settlers of DeKalb county.

The funeral services, held near the home of the deceased, were conducted by Rev. Green. The features of the funeral of the deceased showed the universal esteem and love for him. Many of his F. and A. M. brothers with whom he associated more in his earlier years were present to pay the last tribute to their deceased brother and friend. He leaves, besides two sons and seven grandchildren, a multitute of more distant relatives and very dear friends, all of whom in their sorrow try to be consoled and say:

"God has given and God has taken away."

WHOLE BLOCK GUTTED

Garrett Has a Disastrous Experience With Fire.

We clip the following from the Fort Wayne Morning Journal concerning the Garrett fire which, we have found out is substantially correct.

A fire started in Johnson's livery stable about nine o'clock Monday night, and for a time threatened to destroy the entire business part of the city. As it was, half a dozen buildings were burned, and several others were scorched and badly damaged. For two hours the fire held sway, defying the efforts of the fire department, and the greatest alarm prevailed. The difficulty in getting a sufficient pressure of weatr handicapped the firemen at the outset, and the bursting of four sections of hose still further retarded the work. The fire laddies worked heriocally however, and at 10:30 had the blaze under control.

The fire started in an unknown manner in the livery stable, and soon communicated to the saloons of Peter Behler and Charles Linkenheld, both of which were destroyed. John Paul's dwelling house and barn, and a barn adjoining caught fire and were gutted. Behler's barber shop was next attacked, and went up in flames. Before half an hour the Central hotel, the opera house, Isaac Whirlidge's residence, and some adjoining barns were on fire, and it looked as though the entire block would be wiped out. The firemen had four streams playing on the flames, and finally, by almost superhuman efforts got the best of the devouring element. The lossess will be heavy.

Ben Johnson, the liveryman, lost two fine horses, a number of carriages and sleighs, and all his hay, feed, harness etc. His loss will amount to several thousand dollars. John D. Paul, owner of the barn, estimates his loss at $500. Mr. Behler had just had his saloon building remodeled and refurnished, and lost everything. His loss will amount to $3,000. Linkenhelt's saloon was also totally destroyed, and the loss amounts to over $5,000, with $1,000 insurance. Part of the wall and roof of the Central hotel was burned, and the front of the opera house was badly scorched. Isaac Whirlidge saved his house by turning on several streams from garden hose and organizing his family into a bucket brigade. The total loss will come close to $20.000.

MRS. C. C. WALTER

Monday's Daily.

Sunday morning the sad news rapidly spread over town that Mrs. Walter, wife of Ex-Auditor C. C. Walter had died suddenly at about 8 o'clock of a hemorrhage of the lungs. Her brother at Edgerton, A. C. Donaldson was at once telegraphed to, and other friends notified

The particulars of her sudden death are like this:

She had been ailing for some time from a severe stomach trouble, but Dr. Hines, her physician had succeeded in getting this under control. But she was a woman of great energy and it was very irksome for her to lie in bed long enough to regain the proper strength after such a weakening illness. It is feared she got out sooner than was safe, and may have taken a cold. On Thursday afternoon she was taken suddenly with a sharp pain, probably of pleurisy and then began to spit blood in great quantities as if a large blood vessel of the lungs had been ruptured. In spite of all that could be done, it was not possible to check this or if temporarily checked it would return, and in her already weak condition it was soon seen to be a critical matter. She gradually failed under the drain of blood, till death ended her sufferings as stated, yesterday morning. The funeral will be to-morrow, Tuesday, afternoon at the residence at 2 p. m. Interment in Evergreen cemetery.

Mr. Walter, himself is still confined to his bed, as he has been for several weeks, of an acute attack of rheumatism, but the doctor thinks he is now in a fair way to recover.

OLD IRONSIDES.

Last Thursday, Oct. 21, was the Centennial of the launching of the famous old frigate Constitution, the ship that won so many hard sea fights, especially during our last war with Great Britain, the war of 1812. She is still in existence, being now covered by a roof and used as a store and training ship in the harbor. She would have been destroyed many years ago, but for stirring poem of Whittier, which appealed so strongly to the authorities at Washington, that the old ship was spared.

LAKE SHORE AGAIN.

Robbers Enter The Depot But Get No Money.

Robbers paid their annual visit to the Lake Shore depot again last night but were unfortunate, as there was no money in sight. Two keys were taken from the brake shoes of a Wabash box car or the siding and the east door to the gents waiting room opened, by prying it up enough to allow the latch to slip out. Their next attempt was then made to pry open the litttle window at the north of the ticket office, but failed in this. Then the door to the ticket office was tried but in this they also failed. Then they went out doors and succeeded in breaking open one of the windows which gave them an entrance to the ticket office. They did not break open the money drawer, and it could not be seen that any damage was done at all. They left the break shoe keys in the office. The ends were broken off which showed that it took hard work to pry open the doors and windows. When Agent DeLapp arrived this morning he discovered two tramps who had taken lodging in a hay car. He at once phoned Marshal Potter and he went up and arrested the two men and locked them up But as no proof could be given the men were liberated.

LOVELY ANNIVERSARY

Celebrated By Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Garwood Last Night.

Mr. and Mrs. Don. A. Garwood, last evening celebrated the fifteen anniversary of their wedding, and a large number of friends gladly responded to invitations to be present. The elegant and spacious residence was well filled with Auburn society people and a most agreeable evening was enjoyed There was piano music by the hostess and her two charming little girls, a violin solo by Dr. Buchtel and singing by Mrs. Fred Yesbera and Mrs. Ed. Robbins, It was all highly enjoyable, and the evening closed with a delicious lunch in several courses. A rare feature of the lunch was the 15-year old wedding cake that Mrs. Garwood had preserved through all these years, not a mere piece for a sample, but an abundance to serve to each guest. It was almost past belief that such a thing was possible. But there was the word of the bride herself, and of her mother, Mrs. Judge McClellan, who made the cake. And there was the cake itself showing age, and a trifle dry, of course, but still palateable. It was noticed that many of the guests preserved a piece to take home to "show" what things are possible in the hands of a careful housewife. And it might also be noted that Mrs. Garwood wore her wedding dress, and so little have she and it changed in these years, that it would easily have escaped notice, as an article of recent date. The guests are enthusiastic and unanimous in the opinion that there are no better entertainers than Mr. and Mrs. Garwood, and that they never had a more pleasant, social evening. They were the recipient of many very beautiful pieces of cut glass, some of which were very valuable.

A TRIBUTE TO INDIANA.

SPECIAL TO THE COURIER.

CHICAGO, OCT. 25:—Rev. Dr. Robert McIntyre of the great St. James M. E. church of Chicago on last Sabbath morning said to a packed house, that when we wanted to find literary merit we used to look to the east; but that the literary center of this country is now in the "much abused" State of Indiana. That in his estimation the greatest romance ever written was by Lew Wallace, of Indiana. That the greatest dialect poet since the days of Burns, was James Whitecomb Riley, of Indiana. He classed C. H. Miller (Joquin Miller) with the four great poets, Longfellow, Whittier, Holmes and Lowell, and said that, since the death of Lowell, Miller of Indiana, held the foremost place as a straight poet in America. As a historian he thought Indiana had the first in the land in the person of John Clark Ridpath; while the novel, in point of numbers sold at least, (Uncle Tom's Cabin a political tract probably excepted) was the Hoosier School Master written by Edward Eggleston of Indiana.

Rev. Wm. Meese is visiting with his daughter Mrs. Ira T. Eaton of Chicago He attended Rev. Dr. McIntyre's church last Sabbath. It is called the St. James. It is an immense structure is beautifully and conveniently arranged and takes rank as among the finest church structures in the city. It is new, having been dedicated with very imposing and impressive exercises some three or four weeks ago.

Mr. Will Kessler spent several days in Chicago last week in the interest of his Standard Electric Cigar Lighter and while there placed several in some of the fine business places.

COURT.

This morning, Thomas O Brien, the prisoner who had asked for a new trial was called into court and several letters from friends and relatives were read by the Judge. They had been sent to Mr. Welsheimer, defendant's counsel and each one declared that O'Brien had never been in trouble before, but had been a steady and industrious man The Judge granted a new trial but admitted he did not know as he ought to rely too much on these letters. He will call the case up when the prosecutor comes down and is ready.

Then came up the case of Trout vs Plum. This is an old, unsettled matter. Trout boarded Plum's horse for four years, during the latter's two terms as sheriff. Now there is a disagreement as to the total amount. Plum claims Trout's books show some items outside of the regular board bill, where parties he was not responsible for got teams to use, and had them charged to Plum. The necessity of going over these long accounts dragged the case out all day.

Before finishing this case, the pleas were made in another in which testimony had been heard yesterday. Col. E. B. Alsbaugh of Garrett had sued his divorced wife on a note she had given him to get rid of him. Now she claims, he should not be paid as she got no consideration for the note. It appears she had given him all the means he ever had and had even paid debts for him and paid his board. Rose & Rose were her attorneys and Myers & Mountz for Alsbaugh.

FRANK B DAVENPORT, PRESIDENT; U S Custom Service, Chicago

DIRECTORS.

FRANK B. DAVENPORT, JAMES R. RIGY,
CAPT. N. L. HANSEN, CHAS. REICHARDT, E. T. MILLIGAN.

To those desiring to secure a share in the wealth of the wonderful Gold Fields of Alaska and the Klondike, the Merchant's Alaska Mining Company offers an unequaled opportunity.

WHILE all cannot go to Alaska, there are many who realize the opportunities that have been opened up there, and would make an investment if they could be assured that their money would be honestly handled, and that they would receive their proper share of the profits.

The MERCHANT'S ALASKA MINING COMPANY offers such an investment. It is a reliable, honest enterprise, directed by responsible men of business standing and character. It has associated with it mutually the firm of Atkins & Milligan, Mining Engineers and Operators, whose long experience and success in the mining business is a guarantee of the investments of its funds in the most renumerative manner, and whose reputation and business standing among mining circles is second to none. Their thorough acquaintance with the Northwest Mining Regions enables them to grasp opportunities others would overlook, and keep out of those ventures their experience has shown to be unsafe. The engineers and prospectors who will go to Alaska for the Company will be men of reputation for honesty and capability.

What the Company Will Do.

The lines upon which this Company will operate are novel in many particulars, and particularly adapted to the conditions in Alaska, and are sure to acquire for the Company large interests and reap immense profits for the stockholders.

First.

It will prospect and locate mines in mining claims through agents and prospectors, and by grubstaking reliable miners to stake and operate claims on shares.

Second:

It will develop, operate, buy and sell mines and mining property.

Third:

It will acquire interests in claims already staked out and partly developed, whose owners are out of supplies and money, and who are unable to proceed with work, but who have good claims; by advancing money, supplies and labor to such owners in consideration of an interest in their property.

Fourth:

It will conduct a general mining and mercantile business in Alaska, British Columbia, Northwest Territory, the United States and elsewhere in accordance with the terms of this charter, as opportunities may present.

The Company is now the owner of the "CELTIC" Mineral Claim located in the famous Big Bend District in the rich Kootenay Country, British Columbia. Late reports from this property give promise of rich developments. The camp in which it is located is a thriving one, rapidly building up. The assay on this property shows an average of from $10 to $15 per ton in gold. Every stockholder in this Company becomes on receipt of his stock a part owner in this property in addition to the interests he will acquire in every investment of the company in Alaska. This property will not be developed at present, all the efforts of the Company being directed towards Alaska, the land of such wonderful opportunities.

A limited amout of the stock of the company is for sale at Fifty Cents per share. The stock at this figure is very low, and should advance in price at an early date. Subscriptions should be made at once to secure it at that figure. The Directors reserve the right to advance the price of stock or withdraw the same from the market without notice

Do Not Miss This Opportunity! Money In It For You!!

Applications for one share will receive the same attention as those for thousand. GET AN INTEREST IN ALASKA. It is a greater chance than California in '49.

AN AUBURN BOY.

Now President of the Merchants Alaska Mining Co. of Chicago

Our young friend Frank B. Davenport has been pushing to the front in Chicago. He has recently formed what is known as the Merchants Alaska Mining Co. and at the meeting, when the organization was perfected, Frank was chosen president of the company. They are incorporated under the laws of the state of Wisconsin, and have a capital stock of $250.000. He has associated with him a number of the representative men of Chicago. There plan of operation has been presented to many of the old mine owners and operators of that city and has received their hearty endorsement. Their plan of operation will be to send prospectors to the gold fields of Alaska, and buy up claims already staked out and partly developed, of owners whose supplies and money, have been exhausted. They will also buy and sell develop and operate mines and mining property. The company now own the "Celtic" Mineral claim located in the famous Big Bend District in the Kootenary country, British Columbia. They will not do much with this however, but put forth all their energies in the Alaska field. The stock of the company is put at 50 cents a share and will soon be advanced. To those desiring to secure a share in the wealth of the wonderful gold fields of Alaska, and the Klondike, the company offer an unequaled opportunity. The shares sell at $1 each, and are full paid and non-assessable, you can take one share or one thousand. The small stockholders will receive the same attention as the large ones. By investing a few dollars in this company, you may in a year's time become the owner of stock which will bring you in a large dividend. While at Chicago Saturday the reporter met Mr. Davenport, and we were taken to the office of the company in the Great Northern Building and we heard their plan of operation thoroughly explained. We also have blank applications for shares and other matter giving much information, and will be glad to send in the application of any who wish an interest in the gold fields and who are not financially able to go there, and stake off a claim. We will add further that Mr. Davenport has invested a large sum of money in the company, and we believe him to be a man of his word, and would not be connected with any company which was not strictly legitimate.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

PURELY VEGETABLE.

The cheapest, purest and best family medicine in the world! An effectual specific for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen. Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

Bryan arrived at the Junction in his special car today noon from Montpelier and changed for Defiance Although Mr. Bryan's arrival had not been generally announced, more than 500 people had assembled to see and greet him. He came out on the rear platform and quite a large majority of the crowd shook hands with him. Mr. Chapman, democratic candidate for Governor of Ohio, besides many other prominent men were with the car. A reporter for a Chicago paper who was in the party stated that there were 12,000 people at Montpelier this forenoon.

They Like the Country.

"Naval officers always settle in the country when they can," remarked a prominent officed to a Star reporter. "During their active careers, that is, during the time they are at sea, they are necessarily cramped for room, and while some of them on the large modern ships have elegant and sumptuous quarters, there is necessarily a limit to it. This thing frows on a man to such an extent that the first thing he does when he is retired, and in hundreds of cases long before retirement, he hunts up and locates on a farm. Three of the admirals on the retired list, headed by Admiral Ammen, are the owners of farms in the immediate locality of Washington, and any number of other officers are similarly provided for, though their farms are not so extensive. They seem to want stretching room, and it will be noticed that when they do locate they secure big places. Their minds run into stock and chicken raising. The officers of the Marine Corps have been noted for years as the owners of the speediest horses owned or driven about Washington, and they have been always prominent in connection with our racing associations and organizations. Naval officers have been similarly prominent. It is different with army officers. Their ambition seems to be for nice houses in the cities. The naval officers' ideas all run toward the country. I don't like to give names, but I could give dozens of illustrations to prove what I say, if it were necessary. Take a look at the incoming cars from any of the suburban places around Washington any morning, and there will be sufficient proof of what I say."—Washington Star.

A Monstrosity.

A remarkable curiosity—or perhaps it should be called a monstrosity—the like of which was never before heard of by Superintendent Stephan, was discovered at the Zoo yesterday. It seems that white rats and white mice have lately come into unprecedented favor with the children and women of Cincinnati. Learning of this, Superintendent Stephan about seven weeks ago bought 10 white rats. They seem to be a race unto themselves, having pink eyes and dainty appetites—and set them to multiplying. Almost beyond belief as it may seem, yet in these seven weeks those ten white rats have become fifty. Being in a cage somewhat removed from view, little attention has been paid the record-breaking family until yesterday, when the Superintendent took a good look at the snowy white rodents. The result was that he discovered that one of the little fellows was formed and fashioned almost exactly like a wild boar. Most prominent of all the marks were two long tusks growing out of the sides of the mouth, and curving upward to fully twice the length of the head. These tusks are a hard, bony growth, and shine like well-kept finger nails. They are about as thick as the lead in a pencil and sharp as needles. On making the discovery, the superintendent immediately placed the little wonder in a case by itself, and intends raising it with the greatest care. When molested, the little thing grunts like a pig, instead of making the noise common to its kind. Its mouth and nose also resembles those of a hog.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

INCREASED MAGNIFYING POWER

Difficulties in the Way of Obtaining It in Telescopes.

The question of increasing the power of the telescope is one that has engaged the attention of practical astronomers and lens-makers for over 200 years, and every possible device that seemed likely to accomplish the result has probably been tried in the effort to augment the magnifying power of this wonderful instrument. The new Yerkes telescope will, it is stated, bring the moon to an apparent distance of 100 miles from the earth, and to the uninitiated reader it would seem as though additional lenses could be provided which would still further decrease the apparent distance of the moon and stars. If, for instance, another telescope equal in power to the Yerkes could be placed at the end of that instrument, the ordinary reader does not always understand why the magnifying power would not be doubled. As a matter of fact, such an addition to a telescope is an impossibility, and even the limit of the telescopic machinery and of the lenses seems to have been nearly reached. The great lenses now manufactured require years for their completion, and even after they are finished and placed in position in the telescopes, great difficulty is sometimes experienced from causes unsuspected by those who have had no practical experience with the use of such instruments. A telescopic tube is of great length and enormous weight, and, although every precaution is taken to guard against vibration, there are, from time to time, differences in the machinery, caused not only by trifling tremors in the instrument, but also by contraction from cold and expansion from heat. Larger telescopes than the Yerkes and Lick may yet be constructed, but before they are, means must be devised for overcoming the difficulties which now lie before the telescope builders.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Grateful Tyranny.

Summary measures may often be taken when human motives conflict, if only, at the same time, "mercy seasons justice."

When Sir Richard Burton was British Consul at Damascus, his wife, Lady Isabel, found that a large wooden gate, in the garden next hers, swung continuously on its hinges, and that it was keeping one of her guests, an English official, awake at night.

The garden belonged to an old woman, and Lady Burton asked her to have the gate fastened; but she sent back word that it was impossible. It had been broken for years, and she had no money to repair it. So the English lady took the law into her own hands. That night her guest slept well, and at breakfast he asked gratefully how she had managed about the gate.

"If you will look out of the window," said she, "you will see it in the court yard. I had it pulled down at sunset."

He drew the long face of official rebuke.

"Oh!" he said; "but you really must not treat people like that! Suppose they knew of these things at home?"

"Suppose they did," echoed she, laughing.

After her guest's departure, she ordered the gate to be mended and replaced at her own expense; and the next time she went out, the little old woman next door ran after her, crying:

"O thou light of my eyes, thou sunbeam! Come and sit by the brook in my garden, and honor me by drinking coffee, and Allah grant that thou mayest break something else of mine, and live forever!"

A Cure for All Evils.

Medicine bags of the Navajos, Zunis and Apaches, all kindred tribes in New Mexico and Arizona, contain a curious powder, known as corn pollen, or hoddentin. This powder, which is the pollen of a rush, and also of maize, appears to be used as a medicine, being eaten by the sick man and put on the head or other parts to ease pain, but principally as a sacred offering to the sun and moon, and as a sanctifier of everything. A pinch of it is thrown toward the sun and then toward the four winds for help in war or the chase, is put on the trail of a snake to prevent harm from it, placed on the tongue of a tired hunter as a restorative, hung in bags around the necks of infants as a preservative, and sprinkled on the dead. In fact, every action of these Indians is sanctified by this powder, so that, as Capt. Bourke writes in the ninth volume of "The Report of the Bureau of Ethnology" (Smithsonian), "plenty of hoddentin has come to mean that a particular performance or place is sacred."

Capt. Bourke shows many analogies to the use of this sacred powder, both in the East and among the ancient Greeks and Romans, and it is clear that similar practices with regard to "medicine"—that is, magic—have prevailed everywhere, and in all ages, for superstition seems to be the universal heritage of man, so deeply ingrained in his very nature that all the efforts of philosophers and "thirteen clubs" will not avail to root it out.—Chambers Journal.

COLLEGE GIRL BOOTBLACK.

How Enterprising Miss Hall Has Earned Her Education.

Miss Lu Verne Elizabeth Hall, the plucky Denver girl who has been conducting a ladies' bootblacking establishment to earn money for a college education, has left the Western city for Poughkeepsie, where she will matriculate at Vassar for a four years' course.

Miss Hall has been extremely successful in her undertaking; in fact, the revenues from bootblacking during the summer of 1897 were sufficient to guarantee her at least a year's tuition. She will not close her establishment, which is situated right in the heart of the shopping district of Denver, but will continue to run it throughout the four years.

The business is no longer an experiment; it has been so thoroughly advertised that hundreds of ladies from every section of the city are now regular patrons. While Miss Hall is pursuing her studies in the East a young woman who has acted as cashier will look after the business, and a half-dozen uniformed attendants will do the "shining."

The girl's parents did not have the means to assist her in a college education, and as ordinary work at a salary would not enable her to get together the necessary funds, she sought some other way out of the difficulty. Miss Hall, with commendable foresight, decided upon the bootblacking idea as the one most practicable. She accordingly rented space in the rear of a confectionary store in the downtown district, and hung out her sign. One colored man was employed, and he was busy a very small part of the time for the first week or so. When the object of Miss Hall's venture became noised about the business showed signs of improvement. The rush did not commence, however, says the New York Journal, until the newspapers told in detail all about the enterprise and the young woman back of it.

In three weeks Miss Hall increased her force to three men and enlarged her parlors to keep pace with her rapidly growing trade. Later on it got to be a "fad" to patronize Miss Hall, and within a remarkably brief period she and her admirers were rejoicing over the fact that the success of the thing exceeded their most sanguine expectations. By the 1st of August the force numbered seven people, a cashier and six "shiners," kept busy almost continuously ever since.

Miss Hall, who is very modest, was delighted over the success of her venture, but was much grieved because the public had seen fit to regard her as something of a curiosity. She is of the brunette type, with a wealth of dark brown hair and large expressive black eyes, which some one has declared to be heavenly. She has fine features, and her figure is well rounded and graceful. The receipts from her bootblacking parlors during the month of August aggregated nearly $1,000. Some idea of the fame that Miss Hall has so strangely acquired can be gained from the fact that for six weeks her mail reached several hundred letters weekly. These letters came from every State in the Union. Some of the writers congratulated her for her pluck, others contained offers of financial aid and free schooling, while not a few were proposals of marriage.

SOUNDING WITH THE NEW ELECTRIC SYSTEM.

MISS HALL.

IN THE BOOTBLACKING PARLORS OF MISS HALL.

FOR DEEP SEA SOUNDING.

Apparatus Expected to Supersede the Lead and Line.

John P. Buckley, of New York City, after twelve years' experimenting, has perfected an apparatus known as an electric sounder. The invention will be invaluable to navigators, as by its use captains may be able to ascertain the depth of water for 2,000 feet ahead of their vessels. The inventor expects that it will supersede the lead and line. Mr. Buckley is confident that his apparatus will do away with the present tedious manner of making soundings, and that vessels will no longer have to feel their way into port when the air is foggy. With his invention the sounding is done by means of a bell circuit, which passes through a carrier, and thence to a nonconducting cylinder filled with quicksilver. When the cylinder strikes bottom a circuit is completed, which rings a bell on board the vessel and gives warning that the vessel is in dangerously shallow water.

The apparatus, to speak more in detail, consists of an air gun, about 2,000 feet of wire, or, rather, of two wires bound around each other, a hollow shell, which will float a cylinder of quicksilver, and an electric battery. The air is forced into the chamber of the air gun by turning a wheel. The cylinder with the wire attached is loaded into the gun. The wire is placed upon a reel, and as much is wound off as the force of the projectile will take with it. The cylinder is hurled through the air for anywhere from five to 2,000 feet. The distance depends upon the number of turns the operator has given the wheel by which the air gun is loaded.

The cylinder strikes the water and sinks. The length of wire which intervenes between the cylinder and the hollow floating shell, or carrier, represents the depth of water in which it would be safe for the vessel to venture. Most large ocean steamers draw thirty feet. When the wires enter the cylinder they are separated. They run into the cylinder separately and terminate within only a short distance of the surface of the quicksilver.

If the water is deep enough the cylinder will simply hang to the end of the line. If the water is too shallow, however, the cylinder will tumble over on the bottom, for the end of it is rounded. The mercury, which the cylinder contains, will then rush about the ends of the wires, complete a metallic current and cause the ringing of a bell on board ship, with which the wires are connected.

As soon as the cylinder sinks the man in charge of the apparatus proceeds to draw in the line. If he hears no warning bell he may be sure that the course is entirely clear. The vessel may then proceed for the distance to which the line has been cast. If 2,000 feet have been sent out the mariner may know that his course is clear for that distance. He may then proceed. When the vessel has gone half the course he may discharge another cylinder. When he has reached the end of the course which the first cylinder has told him was safe he will have determined the nature of the channel for the next 2,000 feet.

Renewed Hope for the Blind.

A very important discovery made by Dr. R. Deutschmann of Hamburg is just now much spoken of by physicians, especially by specialists on the eye. It deals with the successful cure of a disease of the eye which but a short time ago was considered absolutely incurable, the so-called detaching or peeling of the retina, which sometimes follows a case of retinitis. This disease consists in the shrinkage of the aqueous humor, a watery, slightly salty fluid which lies between the cornea and the crystalline lens, with the greater part of its substance in front of the iris. If the quantity of this fluid is lessened to a certain extent the eyesight is absolutely destroyed and the physician can do nothing but pronounce the disease incurable. Now Professor Deutschmann has succeeded in introducing into the diseased eye a sufficient amount of the aqueous humor taken from a live rabbit's eye to restore the lost sight. Several cases where this most delicate operation was successfully performed are on record, the one of a purser on one of the steamers of the Hamburg-American line being most interesting. This man, totally blind three years ago, was able to resume his former occupation after undergoing the operation just described, and his sight is now as good as it was at any time in his life.—Philadelphia Record.

EIGHTEEN YEARS A SENATOR.

John R. McPherson, Once the Democratic Leader in New Jersey.

A once dominant figure in New Jersey politics and a man of affairs at Washington for eighteen years passed away in the person of ex-Senator John R. McPherson. Mr. McPherson was a type of the successful politician. Born in Livingston County, New York, in 1833, he removed to Jersey City at the age of 25 and became a dealer in live stock. Almost immediately he commenced taking a part in politics and six years after taking up his residence in Jersey City he was chosen alderman. From 1864 to 1870 he sat in the Common Council and meanwhile made money in various corporations. In 1871 he was elected to the New Jersey Senate and served three years. When Frederick T. Freylinghuysen's term in the Federal Senate expired McPherson had become enough of a power in Democratic politics to have himself elected to succeed him. This was in 1876. Twice he was re-elected, his service at Washington running from 1877 to 1895. In these eighteen years he was a prominent member of the upper house and very influential on the Democratic side.

CHILDREN AND WHEELS.

Danger that the Young Will Exercise Too Violently.

It is a curious fact that of all sportsmen bicyclers seem to be the most sensitive to criticism from a hygienic point of view. This is possibly because they get so much of such criticism; and certainly with the air so full of warning and admonition, adults may now be left mostly to their own discretion. And yet, in the face of the scorcher's condemnation, we must summon our courage and in the interest of the very young assert that the present recklessness, if not checked, will result in a harvest of shortened lives.

While bicycling in moderation is one of the best forms of exercise for many adults, particularly the gouty and those who lead sedentary indoor lives, indulgence in it by the young should be hedged about with many precautions. When not overdone, it is probably as beneficial to children as to their elders, but it is less needful, since the young, especially boys, seldom suffer for want of exercise, their outdoor games giving them, as a rule, all they need. But aside from this there is positive danger in the wheel, arising from the proneness of children to compete with adults—to ride too long, too fast and too far.

Wheeling resembles stair-climbing in its nature and effects. No mother would allow her child to run up the steps of the Washington monument two or three times a day, yet she will let him take his bicycle and race over country roads for miles, his little heart pumping one hundred and fifty or two hundred times a minute, and fondly thinks it is doing him good.

It is just here that the danger lies—the heart is strained, overstrained; it is dilated and then enlarged; it works continuously to its full strength, drawing on all its reserve force, and by the time the child has become a man the heart is permanently tired and may possibly stop short some day without warning.

Children need not be forbidden the use of the bicycle, but parents should see to it that they have properly constructed saddles, and that they do not "scorch," climb steep hills, ride against high winds, or ride at all more than a few miles at a stretch. Unfortunately it is these very feats that they are often incited by their elders to perform. There are few more piteous sights, to one who has seen the consequences of such folly, than that of a tiny child, on a tiny wheel, struggling up a hill after a six-foot father and a seasoned mother.

He Made It Plain.

The wise speaker knows that no illustrations are so effective as those which have to do with familiar, every-day objects. In this respect the Great Teacher set an example for all who should come after Him. How an itinerant preacher in the Tennessee mountains profited by this example is narrated in the American Missionary:

A group of young men were assembled one Sunday in a grove to hear the preacher, when one of them said:

"See here, John, why didn't ye bring up my rifle when ye come to preachin'?"

"Well, Sam, I 'lowed 'twa'n't right to bring it up on Sabbath. I mought see a varmint on the road and git a-shootin', and forgit it was Sabbath."

"Huh! There's no use being so particular as all that. I think it's all right to do little turns of a Sabbath. Even a little shootin' won't hurt, if ye happen to see game."

The discussion was joined in on either side by those around, and it was finally decided to leave the question to the preacher. He was called, and the case stated.

"Look yer, boys," said he; "s'posin' a man come along here with seven handsome gray horses, a-ridin' one, and the others a-follerin'. You all like a pretty beast, and you look 'em all over. You can't see that one is better than another. They are all as pretty critters as ever were seen among these mountains, though there will be differences in horses, boys. When you come to know 'em no two is alike. Well, that man says, "Here, boys, I'll jest give ye six of these beasts for your own,' and he gits on the other and rides off. I s'pose now, you'd mount yer horses and ride after him, and make him give ye the other horse, or at least let you keep it till yer craps was all in."

"No; we ain't so ornery mean as all that, preacher."

"Well, thar, can't ye let the Lord's day alone?"

A blank look at the preacher and at each other; then Sam spoke out: "You've treed us, preacher. John, I'm right glad you didn't bring that gun."

Perfume from Living Plants.

Capt. Smee has discovered a method of gathering the scent of flowers as the plant is growing. He takes a glass funnel and heats the thin end over a spirit lamp. He then draws out the stem to a fine point. This accomplished, the funnel is filled with ice and placed on a retort stand, the pointed end being placed in a small glass bottle, without touching it. After this, the stand and the funnel are placed in a greenhouse, among the flowers whose odors it is desired to collect. Gradually the vapor rises from the flowers, and, in meeting the colder surface of the funnel, condenses into drops on the outside of the glass. From the point of condensation it trickles down until it drops into the bottle. In a surprisingly short time a large amount of perfume is collected, and it is claimed that 90 per cent. of the contents of the bottle is perfume; the rest is water. Strange to say, this essence of the flower needs to be adulterated with spirits of wine. Otherwise it would become sour and useless.—American Cultivator.

Substitute for Coal.

In the future we may be importing masut instead of exporting coal. Masut is a by-product in the distillation of raw petroleum. It is also manufactured from a cheap, brown coal found in Saxony. There has been, until recently, great trouble in finding a furnace suitable for burning it. It is now blown by steam into a special furnace, on the principle of the Lucigen light, and used without difficulty. It is 40 or 50 per cent. cheaper than coal, and is 20 per cent. better as a heat raiser. Steam can be got up quicker and kept at a higher pressure and more work be done by the machinery. From a naval point of view these are vitally important facts. No sign of a ship under full steam will be shown in the sky, for masut is a smokeless fuel. Russia and Italy are using it in their navies, and Germany has lately made some valuable experiments. At Kiel, Wilhelmshaven and Dansig are tanks from which it can be pumped into ships. Its specific gravity being so much less than that of coal, a ship's buoyancy is greatly increased when the bunkers are filled with it. Heavier armor or cargoes can be carried. The heating capacity being greater, the ship can travel faster or farther. It is yet to be learned what improvements the Germans have introduced into their furnaces and what are the disadvantages of masut.—Chicago Inter Ocean

GRANDMOTHER AT 34.

Mrs. Sarah Davidson Wife at 13 and Mother a Year Later.

Living at 351 East 72d street, New York, is a woman whose appearance dispels forever the idea that gray hair and other tokens of advanced age are inseparable from the proud state of grandmotherhood. Handsome and happy, 34 years old and easily mistaken for 25, she is the proud grandma of a lovely girl baby born ten days ago. Mrs. Britz, mother of the baby, is just 20, having been born when Mrs. Davidson was 14 years old, just twelve months after her marriage. Altogether the three generations of the gentler sex have nothing to complain of on the score of youth or good looks, and a happy trio they make. There is a loving war between Grandma Davidson and Mamma Britz as to which shall hold Baby Beatrice the greater number of hours in the day, and thereby discover all sorts of remarkable infantile charms.

Mrs. Sarah Davidson, the very youthful grandmother, lives in a pretty flat with her husband and four children—two boys and two girls. At first glance one would hardly take her to be over 25, there is such an air of cheerfulness and vitality and magnetism about her. When she smiles there is a parting of full red lips and a flash of perfect white teeth. Merry brown eyes give one an impression of an amiable temper.

Immigration Figures.

The highest immigration record, excluding the arrivals of aliens not so classed, is that of 1882, when the prodigious number of 788,992 came, following the previous year's 669 431, till then unprecedented. In 1883 there was a heavy falling off to 603,322, and the decrease went on until 334,203 was reached in 1886. Then the tide again turned, and with some variations another climax was reached in 1892, when the figures were 623,084, the third highest mark, and not far behind that of 1881. But then began another ebb, with 502,917 in 1893, followed by 314,467, then 279,498, then by 343,267, and now this year by an astonishing reduction to 230,832, as shown by a special bulletin of the Treasury Department.

It Has Cost Millions.

The most expensive book ever published in the world is the official history of the war of the rebellion, which is now being issued by the United States Government at a cost up to date of $2,300,000. Of this amount nearly one half has been paid for printing and binding, the remainder to be accounted for in salaries, rent, stationery and miscellaneous expenses, including the purchase of records from private individuals. In all probability it will take three years to complete the work, and an appropriation of $500,000 has been asked, making a total cost of nearly $3,000,000. The work will consist of 112 volumes.

Child Sent by Post.

A novel parcel for delivery by express post was recently handed in at a Birmingham postoffice. A workingman who had been out of town with his 3-year-old child, arrived at Birmingham in time to reach his place of business but not in sufficient time to take his child home. He therefore walked into the nearest postoffice and tendered the youngster as an express parcel. The authorities, under the rule regulating the delivery of live animals, accepted the child and delivered it at a charge of ninepence.—St. James' Gazette.

Divorce on Queer Grounds.

A novel application for divorce was filed at Denison, Texas. E. E. Baker states that his wife is addicted to inordinate drinking of buttermilk; that it makes him sick, and has preyed upon his mind to such an extent that he is on the verge of insanity, and it is further alleged that she snores so loud that it is impossible to live in the same house with her. It is alleged that Mrs. Baker consumes a gallon of buttermilk at the three meals and on retiring at night.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

KLONDIKE THORNS.

Entangling Vines Which Torture Weary Wayfarers.

H. Juneau, of Dodge City, Kas., who, with his brother, Joseph Juneau, founded the town of Juneau, Alaska, now counted as the leading citizen of the famous territory, has an interesting story to tell of the dark side of life on the Upper Yukon. Mr. Juneau spent several years in Alaska, and helped lay out the streets of the town which now bears his name.

In speaking of his early experience in Alaska, Mr. Juneau said:

"I helped lay out the town in 1881, and have been there several times since. We first named the place Harrisburg, but the people changed the name after a year or two. I have found the country full of disappointments, and I don't want to paint the picture too bright. Enough has not been said of the dark side.

"It is no place for men of weak constitution. The hardships to be encountered require the strongest hearts and sinews, as well.

"I have seen nothing published of the fact that a large portion of the country is covered with a moss and vine which contains sharp thorns, like porcupine quills, with saw edges. These will penetrate leather boots, and when once in the flesh nothing but a knife will remove them. These are worse than the mosquito pest.

"Along the sea coast Alaska presents a grand and picturesque view for miles in extent, from an ocean steamer. It is a good idea to get acquainted with Alaska and enjoy its scenery. It is a grand country to visit, and its scenery surpasses any mountain scenery in the world. Travel on water can be provided for in comfort, and be enjoyed without great risk or danger.

"Alaska is a country on edge. It is so mountainous. Basins are mainly filled with ice. The weather is always hard in great extremes. When there is no ice there is moss and devil's club, the latter a vine that winds about everything it can clutch. Persons walking become entwined in a network of moss and devil's club, and passage is extremely difficult and 'torturous,' as well as tortuous."—Detroit Free Press.

The Head Waitress.

The head waitress is beginning to rival the proverbial theological student in the dining-rooms of New England hotels. She occasionally appears in New Jersey. In a noted hostelry in the Berkshire hills the long dining-room acknowledges the benignant sway of the head waitress. Clothed entirely in black, with only a line of white at throat and wrists, her costume is differentiated from the uniform of her troop of assistants. All the other waitresses are in white duck or pique, stiffly starched (no flimsy organdies or Victorian lawns being used).

Along the long wall of the dining-room is a row of well-separated high stools. There is one by each table, and on this the waitress is perched when not attending to her table. It looks odd at first to see them perched up high when not on duty, but hotel guests are not always punctual at coming to meals, and the arrangement is thoroughly humane. The height of the seat and its position prevent what would appear as a breach of etiquette did the waitress take one of the table chairs. The fashion introduced is a sensible innovation.—Philadelphia Record.

The King's Mistake.

Evidently the King of Siam is still a good deal of a barbarian. If he had profited as much by European instruction as we have been told, he never would have given such an absurd excuse as he has for deferring his visit to the United States. It would take, he says, six months at least to get an intelligent idea of America and Americans, and, as he has only a few weeks more to spare from affairs of state, he is going to wait until he has more leisure! This will disgrace Chulalongkorn all over Europe, and ruin his laboriously acquired popularity. Any British, French or German traveler would have told him that from three to six weeks here would enable a man of ordinary intelligence to know us inside and out and set down the conclusion of the whole matter in a big book. Haven't they done it time and again, and aren't they men of ordinary, very ordinary, intelligence?—New York Times.

Travels Like a Real Horse.

People are still at work inventing queer devices. A Detroit man has invented and patented a mechanical horse which he designed to be propelled by a pedal chain arrangement. This extends back to the carriage, which the horse draws after it, covering the ground with a lifelike motion of the legs. The gait is said to be very natural and true to life.

A MACHINE STEED.

Honest Sweden.

In Sweden a crime is an event; theft particularly is very rare. Honesty is the fundamental quality of the race, is naturally recognized and officially counted upon. In this regard the Stockholmers show a confident carelessness which is always a surprise to strangers and causes them some uneasiness. In the theaters and concert halls there are large cloak rooms, where hats and furs are left without the smallest safeguard; the performance over, each one again takes possession of his effects, and an accident never occurs. The inhabitants are accustomed to expect a reciprocal probity in the transactions of every-day life. Upon most of the tramways in Stockholm conductors have been dispensed with. The passenger himself deposits his ten ore in a little till placed at the end of the vehicle, behind the driver. It is patriarchal—and economical.—Parisian.

Might Have Been Worse.

Wake Up.

The Man for the Place.

"There will be a clerkship vacant in the third division of the department of which I have the honor to be the chief," said the appointing power.

"I have the man who is ideally fitted for the place," said the senatorial influence.

"Are you certain?"

"Quite certain. He must be the man, because he wants the job and he isn't fit for a position in business."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Eagle Captures a Dog.

While one of J. Pierpont Morgan's pet dogs was at play at his summer residence, it was pounced upon by a large eagle. The bird fastened its talons in the dog's back and, notwithstanding its struggles, carried it away.

Miss Morgan's bull pup also met a similar fate, but it was rescued by Supt. Armstrong, who shot and killed the eagle just as it was about to make its escape with the dog.—New York Journal.

The New Food Drink.

Half the "coffee" you drink isn't coffee anyway; but even if it were Mocha and Java, the new food-drink, Grain-O, is better. There is nothing in it to hurt, while in coffee there is. The better the coffee—the less adulteration—the more injurious. Grain-O is made from pure grains, has the rich color of good coffee, sets nicely on the most delicate stomach, is fine for children, is nourishing, and keeps nobody awake nights. Drink as much as you please at a late dinner or supper and you don't get up in the morning saying, "Oh, my head, my head!" Try it a week or two and you won't go back to the old beverage. And then the cost—four cups of Grain-O at the price of one cup of coffee. Ask your grocer for a package. Two sizes—15c. and 25c.

INSPECTS STREET WORK.

Mrs. Paul the First Woman to Be Given Such an Appointment.

Mrs. A. E. Paul is the first woman in the world to obtain the appointment of inspector of street cleaning in a great city. She is one of eleven inspectors who see that Chicago's streets are kept clean, and her district is the important one bounded by the river, Adams street, 5th avenue and the lake. At present she is commander of seventeen men, all Italians. During the working day she drives about in her district seeing that the men do their work properly.

Mrs. Paul is stout, middle-aged, and determined. She draws $1,200 a year from the city, and pays for her own horse and carriage. She has made a study of street cleaning, and especially New York's system, and says she would require seventy-five men to keep her district in the same condition as New York streets are kept.

Emperor Wilhelm's Wealth.

There are 1,500 people upon the Emperor's list of employes, including 350 female servants, who are engaged in looking after the twenty-two royal palaces and castles that belong to the crown. Their wages are small. The women receive not more than $12 a month and the men servants, who number over 500, from $15 to $25 a month. Most of the palaces and castles are in a sad state of decay. The Emperor himself seldom uses more than three or four of them. The rest are occupied by his relations and dependents, who number a hundred or more, and are nearly all supported from the royal purse. His private fortune is estimated at $25,000,000, the greater part of which is represented by landed estates. He has forty-eight farms, fourteen forests, eight vineyards and owns the royal porcelain factory near Berlin, but his revenues from this property do not amount to more than $1,000,000 a year. The income from several of the estates goes directly to his brothers and sisters. Prince Leopold, a second cousin, is much richer than the Emperor. His wealth was inherited from his grandfather, Prince Carl, a brother of the old Emperor William, who was a miser and a keen business man and amassed an enormous fortune.

In addition to this income the Kaiser draws full pay and allowances for all the titles he assumes, both civil and military. He can add to his income at any time by creating himself a duke or a baron or by appointing himself general of an army corps or colonel of a regiment. He is already the colonel of several German regiments, and holds honorary commissions in the armies of England, Austria, Russia and Belgium. He is also an admiral of the German fleet and has just been made an admiral in the Russian navy, for which he draws full pay and allowances.—Berlin letter to Chicago Record.

ADVICE FOR THE THIN GIRL.

GIRLS with slender proportions are usually picked out by their more heavily weighted friends as persons to whom lots of advice about increasing their avoirdupois must be given. Probably a little information on this subject will be valuable. The candidate for added flesh should get all the sleep possible—from nine to ten hours. In addition, a nap in the middle of the day will help. While napping no stays, tight shoes or bands must be worn. If one cannot sleep one should lie down in a darkened room at least thirty minutes instead. In the mornings a cold plunge, or at least a cold sponge, must be taken, dashing the water on the shoulders, neck and collarbone, drying with a Turkish towel and avoiding heavy clothing. A thin woman should avoid cumbersome wraps, heavy-weight dress goods and linings. She should not tire herself bicycling, and she should have plenty of fresh air. Diet deserves a consideration. For some drinking malt liquors is a great help, but many cannot stand it. A diet with an eye to acquiring flesh should consist of liquids—milk, water, but not coffee and tea; no hot breads, plenty of butter and cheese and good cocoa. The very thin woman should have five meals a day, should eat marmalade and plenty of warm milk and cream. Indeed, if warm milk is drunk before retiring it is in itself almost a sure cure for thinness. Above all, eat slowly and never exercise until a half hour after meals.

Bustles Here Again.

When the Czar of Russia and the President of France embraced at Cronstadt roads they didn't dream that their affectionate greeting would change the shape of the feminine form all over the civilized world. But so it was, for no sooner were the significant tidings flashed over the wires than the clever Parisian fashion-makers went to work to establish the vogue of the Russion blouse! Now the Russian blouse, as all the world knows, is a baggy, puffy, sloppy looking garment, hiding all curves of the human form divine and giving a general air of limpness to its wearer. This effect on the figure must be remedied somehow and bustles and hip pads seem to be the only counteracting influence. So they are selling rapidly. Made of hair or wire and ranging in length from six inches to the length of the dress skirt, they are supposed to give the proper "set" to the skirt, while the pads for the hips accentuate the smallness of the waist, and so give the desired hour-glass effect which is deemed necessary to emphasize the beauty of the fashionable Russian blouse.

SETS THE SKIRT.

HIP BUSTLE.

An Ideal Hostess.

She must never look bored.

She must make you feel perfectly at home.

She must know how to get congenial people together.

She must never let any one be slighted or overlooked.

She must be perfectly unselfish about her own pleasures.

She must know how to keep conversation always going.

She must make you feel individually that you are the favored guest.

She must see everything, and yet possess the art of seeming to see nothing.

She must know when to ask the amateur musician to display his or her talents.

She must remember that nothing is so tiresome, so surely death to all enjoyment, as the feeling that one is being entertained.

Feather Boas.

Feather boas are still very fashionable; they must never meet under the chin, as they shorten the neck; they should be invisibly fastened on each side to frame the face and protect the back of the neck and ears, which is really all that is needed. Neck ruffles are popular also in three shades of rose or lavender chiffon, silk, muslin or ribbons, edged with velvet or gold braid. These ruched collarettes are prettier for very young girls than the feather boas.

Paris Skirts.

In Paris skirts are made with five and six gores respectively. The latter, measuring about four and a half yards round, is the most popular. Horsehair interlining is de rigeur and, to give additional "spring" to these skirts, French modistes stitch the horsehair in with each seam, and while perfectly flat and tight about hips and back the newest skirts are more buoyant and irrepressible than ever at the hem.

Restoring the Complexion.

If the complexion has been neglected or injured by the use of poisonous cosmetics or soaps, and it is desired to restore it to its former healthful condition, it must be done by administering the proper food and nourishment to the hungry pores and relaxed muscles. Is it not reasonable that what can be done for the body can also be done in another and more delicate way for the face? Women can feel assured that by a systematic, intelligent and persistent physical culture of their skin and complexion the hollows in the cheeks, at the temples, under the eyes and about the chin, also the advent of the much-dread crowsfeet, can easily be postponed many years.

Killed a Huge Bear.

Miss Hattie M. Richards, daughter of a dry goods merchant who lives at 130 West 86th street, New York, killed one of the biggest bears ever slain in the Dead River region of Maine. Mr. Richards left New York with his family to spend six weeks in his handsome camp at Chain of Ponds, on the elegantic fish and game preserves, which consist of 250 square miles of the choicest hunting ground in Maine. Miss Richards carried a rifle that had been made expressly for her. She is familiar with the use of firearms, and has often brought down deer, but this was the first time she had had a chance to tackle a bear. Suddenly there was a loud cracking of the underbush, and looking in that direction she saw a huge black bear coming toward her. Bruin trotted along in blissful ignorance of the presence of the young woman with rifle raised waiting for him. When he had approached to within 200 feet of her she fired. The bullet struck the bear in the neck and made a bad wound, which caused the animal to grow very savage. It made a rush for the girl, but when it was about seventy feet away Miss Richards' rifle cracked again and the bullet hit the bear behind the ear and killed it. The bear was an old fellow and weighed more than 400 pounds. Guides said it was the largest killed in the Dead River region in years.

Vocations of French Women.

French statistics show that there are now 2,150 women in France who earn their living as authors or by writing for newspapers, while there are only 700 painters and sculptors of that sex. A Watch in Repair.

They were sipping chocolate at the Bellevue and talking of watches.

"I have carried my watch for ten years," said the senior member of the party, "and it has never cost me a penny for repairs."

"Mercy!" exclaimed another one, "how did you manage it?"

"I took care of it. You know men are always making disagreeable remarks about women's watches, and when my husband gave me mine he said it would probably be out of order most of the time. And I just made up my mind to show him that there was one woman in the world who knew how to take care of a watch."

"But have you never lost it or had it stolen?"

"Never; I dropped it several times at first, but it did not show any marks."

"But do the works never get out of order?"

"The what?"

"The works inside. Have you never broken the mainspring?"

"I never look inside."

"But how do you wind it?"

"I don't wind it. That's how I take care of it and keep it nice."

They all stared for a moment. Then they said: "Oh, you clever thing!" and adjourned sine die.

Shoe-Horn and Rubber Overshoe

Every mother knows how hard it is to put on a child's rubbers over his heavy shoes, and many a nurse will testify to a bent thumb nail and an abraded finger received during this troublesome performance. One mother discovered by accident that by the use of a shoe-horn the fractious rubber became amenable to treatment. She slips the shoe-horn into the back of the rubber while the child presses his foot down, and lo! the overshoe is on, sure and firm, and the mother's temper and fingers unharmed. It is a trick that is worth the trying.

Etiquette has nothing to do with the good form displayed by a bloomer girl.

Florida's Hyacinth Fleet.

The steamer Crescent City was hauled out of the ways the other morning at the Merrill-Stevens shipyard. The steamer is receiving a general overhauling and will be placed on her regular run again when that is over, says the Jacksonville Times-Union.

A gang of men is busily employed scraping the iron hull of the steamer. A curious discovery was made when the steamer was being hauled out of the river, when it was noticed that when the bed or carriage on which the steamer rested came out of the water it was literally clogged and massed with water hyacinths in more than abundant profusion.

Capt. F. Henson of the Crescent City stated that the speed of the steamer was rated at twelve to fourteen miles per hour, but that of late this speed has been reduced to six miles and sometimes to five miles per hour. This great difference in the rate of speed caused the owners to believe that the bottom of the ship was very foul, and for this reason she was hauled out on the ways.

The few barnacles on the hull had formed a nucleus to which the fine roots of the hyacinth could fasten themselves. In this manner the entire hull had become clogged with hyacinths, which, by suction, as the steamer passed through acres of the pest, got under the steamer and were fastened to the hull. Several workmen were immediately put to work with pitchforks to clear the mass of slimy hyacinths from the hull and from the bed of the marine railway.

A CHILD'S RECOVERY

FROM PARALYSIS AND SIX YEARS OF CONVULSIONS.

Little Fannie Adams of Umatilla Cured of a Dreadful Malady—A Cure of Unusual Interest—A Reporter Investigates.

From the Lake Region, Eustis, Fla.

For some time past the Lake Region has been receiving reports from Umatilla, Fla., of an almost miraculous cure that had been effected in the case of Fannie Adams, a daughter of A. J. Adams, of that place, and last Saturday a representative of this paper made a trip to Umatilla for the purpose of determining the authenticity of the same.

The family live a short distance from the village, where it was found that the people were cognizant of the cure which had been effected, and were rejoicing with the family in their new-found happiness. The father, A. J. Adams, is a hard-working honest farmer from East Tennessee, and the family came to Florida four years ago in the hope that a change of climate would be of benefit to their afflicted child. Much of their earnings have gone for doctors' bills, whose services proved unavailing. The representative was greeted by Mrs. Adams, from whom he gained the story of her great trial.

Fannie, the youngest child, was born in East Tennessee, and was seven years old on the third day of February, 1897. When ten months old she was stricken with paralysis, which affected the entire left side. This stroke of paralysis was followed by convulsions, and from the time little Fannie was ten months old until February, 1897, there was not a single day or a night that she did not have spasms of the most distressing nature. Not a single convulsion, but always three or four, and sometimes as high as ten in one day.

The family was all broken down with care, and Mrs. Adams states that for one year she did not go into her kitchen to superintend her household work. All the fingers of the right hand of the little girl are enlarged and misshapen, caused by her biting them during the fearful suffering. The case baffled the skill of the best physicians, and they were frank to say that they could not determine the cause, or prescribe a remedy to aid the afflicted child.

But what a change now in that household; for little Fannie has recently been released from her six years of agony, which brings the light of happiness to the faces of the parents.

In January, this year, Mrs. Adams, who had purchased some of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People for her fourteen-year-old daughter, determined to try their effect upon little Fannie. After three or four doses she noted an improvement and then told the father what she had done. He at once went to the village and bought another box, and up to this time six boxes have been used. The first pills, Mrs. Adams states, were given in January, the latter part, and certainly not earlier than the fifteenth or twentieth, and the child had her last convulsion on February 3d, nearly three months ago. Her general condition has improved in every way, and it was not a month after the first pills were taken when she began to walk without assistance.

The pills were bought at the drug store of Dr. Shelton, in Umatilla. In answer to the question, did he, to his personal knowledge, know that the remedy had benefited Fannie Adams, as was stated by her parents, the doctor said that he was a regular practicing physician, and as such was loth to recommend any proprietary medicine, but still he was ready to do justice to all men, and he did know that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People had benefited Fannie Adams, and also volunteered the information that he knew of other children in the village who had been benefited by their use.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

TRYING ORDEALS FOR WOMEN.

Mrs. Pinkham Tells How Women May Avoid Painful Examinations.

To a modest, sensitive, high-strung young woman, especially an unmarried woman, there is no more trying or painful ordeal than the "examinations," which are now so common in hospitals and private practice.

An examination by speculum, or otherwise, is sometimes a positive necessity in certain stages of many diseases peculiar to women, so at least it is declared by the profession. This would not be the case if patients heeded their symptoms in time.

If a young girl's blood is watery, her skin pale and waxy looking, her lips colorless, bowels torpid, digestion poor, her ears and temples throb and she is subject to headache, begin at once to build up her system with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Do not allow her to undergo a physical examination.

Here is a letter from a young lady who requests that her name should not be used, but gives her initials and street number so that any inquiry addressed to her will be received. She says:

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—It affords me great pleasure to be able to say a few words in regard to the merits of your Vegetable Compound. I was tempted to try it after seeing the effects of it upon my mother, and now I feel like a new person. I am a stenographer and was troubled with falling of the womb and female weakness in general. I continued to work until I was so weak I could no longer walk, and the last day I was forced to stop and rest.

"I was then so ill that I was compelled to stay in bed, and so nervous that I could not hold anything in my hands. The least noise or surprise would cause my heart to beat so loudly, and I would become so weak that I could hardly stand. I suffered for almost a year. It is different now. I can go about my work with pleasure, while before, work was a drudge.

"Trusting that my words of praise may help some other afflicted person, and be of benefit to womankind in general, I remain, Yours in gratitude, L. H., 444 S. East St., Indianapolis, Ind."

"The More You Say, the Less People Remember." One Word With You, SAPOLIO

His name is Williams. It was as conductor on the Denver cable line that I knew him. He was always complaining of some trouble or other with his stomach and bowels. He seemed to be either bilious or constipated all the time. In describing his condition he used the expression "out of whack." I remember it particularly because I had never heard it before but have often heard it since. Finally somebody recommended him to use Ripans Tabules and he told me that never in his life did anything do him so much good. Said he felt like a new man. He told me that his wife used them too; but what she took them for I don't remember.

A new style packet containing TEN RIPANS TABULES in a paper carton (without glass) is now for sale at some drug stores—FOR FIVE CENTS. This low-priced sort is intended for the poor and the economical. One dozen of the five-cent cartons (120 tabules) can be had by mail by sending forty-eight cents to the RIPANS CHEMICAL COMPANY, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York—or a single carton (TEN TABULES) will be sent for five cents.

COURT.

Thursday's Daily.

Wednesday, yesterday, work was continued on the damage case from Garrett and was taken up again, this Thursday, morning. It is a jury case.

The jury in the Garrett damage case went over to inspect the building.

But there was considerable other work done yesterday. The Ft. Wayne case of Paul and Huffman, vs Indiana Machine Co. et al., was brought up again before Judge Roby, and between him and the parties an understanding of the case was brought about and he allowed the plaintiffs a judgment of $76,928 against defendants. But there was a cross claim on which he allowed defendants $4,098.10. It will be seen that the suit involved a large sum of money.

James Conway, the tramp who was arrested at Garrett after the six others had been captured, and put in jail on the same charge, that of breaking into cars and stealing out goods. It was believed, however, that he was not in the gang, and he had put in a plea of not guilty. But being called into court he thought he would be better off to plead guilty, which he did, and was fined $50 and given three months in jail.

John Brown was fined $50 and costs for keeping a room in which was gaming.

Friday's Daily.

This, Friday morning, the Garrett damage case was settled. The jury, after looking over the building at Garrett, came back, and went into their room to discuss it. At about ten in the evening, they had agreed. So, when they were called into court this morning, the Judge read the verdict, which was in favor of the defendant. That is that Riccius, the man who put up the new building against the plaintiff's building, should pay no damages. This settles a case that has been fought pretty hard.

On looking over the docket, we find some other matters of interest.

Harry Martin's case is set for next term of court.

The two cases brought by Lenora Luttman against Frances and Libbie Luttman have been dismissed by the plaintiff.

Myers & Mountz get judgment of $190 on account against Bricker.

The case of O. B. Olson vs J. M. Waterman, the defendant defaulted and the jury gave Olson $66 28.

The case of Fisher vs Rosenberry goes to Steuben county on a change of venue.

In the case Burnham and others vs Rollins, plaintiff gets a judgment of $261.

There had been a petition for divorce between Seth Wood and his wife Rebecca, but it appearing that they had been reconciled and were now living together, leave was given to withdraw the petition at his cost.

The two attachment cases against C. D. Kelley went against him. One was brought by Jefferson Beard, and he got judgment for $664 and an order for the sale of property attached. The other was brought by Alfred Kelley, who got $356.80 and an order to sell the property.

The Union Central Life Insurance Co., got a judgment for $1900 against Jerry A. Barber, and an order to foreclose and sell.

Sarah A. was divorced from Wm. A. Smurr. Also, Mary from Frank Jones, she getting $150 alimony.

Anna B. Wolf having no parents, was adopted legally by Clarence and Mary Wolf. Bertha Long was adopted by Albert Engelbrecht,

The Thomas Chandler estate, by Wm. H. Leas, administrator, got a judgment of $58 against John Beight, and foreclosure ordered.

John Frederick Osbun was adopted by J. F. and Frances Beckner.

Geo. Shoner got a judgment of $133 against Ruhl et al., and an order of foreclosure and sale.

Geo. Morell of Waterloo was brought into court to-day on charge of rape. Mrs Palmerton, the complainant failed to make out a case against him, and he was discharged.

THAT SNAK SHOW.

A snake show traveling over the wilds of Ohio is having a hard time. At Fostoria, the cage in which the reptiles were kept, caught fire from the lamp and the snakes escaped. A few had burned to death, but about sixty were recaptured and put into boxes and set in the hotel office. In the night as the hotel night clerk was called into the office, he found a part of them crawling about the floor. He secured them again at some risk. In another town the wagon on which the cage is carried, was pushed over by the crowd and the cage broken. Again the things got away and several were not recaptured. The farmers there are expecting trouble.

GARRETT.

Gus Beber is now a fixed employe of the B. & O., and we are glad to note is doing well. He has to a great extent regained his health, that had been poor for many years, the result of hard service in the army.

John Treesh of Auburn, who has been so long engaged here in putting down cement walks, is just drawing his work to a close. He will be all done before bad weather sets in.

Speaking of cement walks reminds us that Garrett never entered on a course of improvements, that added so much to the looks of the town, or the comfort and convenience of its people. Several business blocks have been given city airs by the wide, new cement walks in their front. We hope the proprietors may be amply repaid in improved business, for the outlay they have made. The old plank sidewalks that have rattled so long, and tripped up so many heels, and were becoming unsightly, have about all disappeared. And there is none to mourn for them—not one.

W. H. Leas, a Waterloo attorney, was here two or three days assisting Coroner Hughes, in investigating the unfortunate case of Miss Zigler, who died recently. It is claimed her death was caused by a criminal operation, and two well known physicians, Dr. Strouse and Dr. Bone, are accused of it. We are told, they have been put under bonds. Just what will be developed by the post mortem, we cannot now say. But there is likely to grow out of it, more or less legal trouble. Hence, we suppose, came the necessity of having Mr. Leas to act as secretary at the post mortem, and assist in having the testimony in proper shape.

Our citizens were somewhat surprised and greatly interested to see the entire jury come over to inspect the brick building over which the lawsuit had taken place, and of which they had been hearing evidence pro and con for two days and a half. They evidently did not believe either side and came to get the testimony of their own eyes. It was a good plan: they looked the building carefully over, went into the cellar of the new building, that is claimed to be the cause of the injury to the old one, climbed up on the roof and examined that, looked at the floors that seem to have sunk, in fact made a careful examination of all the defects and injuries. We look now for a fair verdict.

W. J. Frederick is at present out of town on business.

Sam Teeters, the jolly hardware merchant keeps up business at the old stand. Good goods and reasonable prices will make anyone popular. And that is how he does it

What is Scott's Emulsion?

It is a strengthening food and tonic, remarkable in its flesh-forming properties. It contains Cod-Liver Oil emulsified or partially digested, combined with the well-known and highly prized Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda, so that their potency is materially increased.

What Will It Do?

It will arrest loss of flesh and restore to a normal condition the infant, the child and the adult. It will enrich the blood of the anemic; will stop the cough, heal the irritation of the throat and lungs, and cure incipient consumption. We make this statement because the experience of twenty-five years has proven it in tens of thousands of cases. Be sure you get SCOTT'S Emulsion.

TO THE ENDS OF THE EARTH.

Mark Twain, after two years of careful preparation and hard work, has just completed the story of his famous trip around the word. It is entitled "Following the Equator." Mark Twain is our first of American humorists. His previous books had an enormous sale and their titles have become household words. For this book he went to the ends of the earth to find new things to make us laugh over. He has declined to become a public pensioner by favor of a great newspaper, naturally preferring to pay his unfortunate business debts, without outside aid, from the profit which he hopes to realize from his new book. The work is undoubtedly the greatest effort of his literary career, and is especially strong in descriptive qualities. He continues, as in his earlier works, to get in a lot of good stories, droll anecdotes, good observations, etc. The book is profusely illustrated with original pictures and sketches by noted American artists, particularly Dan. Beard, A. B. Frost, Peter Newell, and others whose great talents, realistic and imaginative, are best adapted to put into picture the humor and pathos of Mark Twain. This is without doubt one of the most remarkable publication of the age and is issued by the The Jones Brothers Publishing Co, Cincinnati, Ohio.

A STATEMENT.

I wish to make a correction in regard to a false and slanderous statement that has been put in circulation at Hicksville and vicinity in regard to me

I held a note of $10 made by Eugene Robinson and payable to Malinda Snyder and John A. Snyder, my mother and myself. This note was sold to John Blosser of Hicksville, Ohio, and I endorsed it with my name and my mother's. I have for many years signed her name in such cases, as she cannot write, and this, in this case was proper and legal. Now, I learn, that Samuel Rodocker of Hicksville says this is a forgery, and has ordered the payment stopped. Now, I say, this statement of Rodocker's is false and slanderous and calculated to misrepresent me and injure me. I am ready and willing to come to Hicksville at any time to meet this charge.

JOHN A. SNYDER.

A HOWLING SUCCESS

Whenever properly introduced Dr. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin as a cure for constipation, has met with a phenomenal sale. Many druggists cannot say enough in praise of its merits, as well as its great popularity with the people. In 10c trial size and also in 50 and $1.00 sizes, of F. E. Davenport.

THE COMING STORM

Hicks predicts that from the 25th to the 29th of October will fall the most generrl and heavy disturbances of the month. He says: "A very marked low barometer will move out of the west early in the period, causing warm easterly and southerly winds. Heavy storms of rain and wind, attended by lightning and thunder to the south will visit many sections within sixty hours of 6 o'clock p. m., on the 26th. No one need be surprised to find these storms turning to sleet and snow in the northern parts of the country."

A Valuable Prescription.

Editor Morrison of Worthington, Ind. "Sun" says: "You have a valuable prescription in Electric Bitters, and I can cheerfully recommend it for constipation and sick headache, and as a general system tonic it has no equal." Mrs. Annie Stehle, 2625 Cottage Grove Ave. Chicago was all run down, could not eat nor digest food, had backache which never left her, and felt tired and weary, but six bottles of Electric Bitters restored her health and renewed her strength. Price 50 cents and $1.00. Get a bottle at Robbins & McCord's. 6

NO PAY—NO CURE

That is the way all druggists sell Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic for Chills and Malaria. It is simply Iron and Quinine in a tasteless form Children love it. Adults prefer it to bitter, nauseating Tonics. Price 50c. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

NOT LIES

The Dispatch says its "exchanges are already coming in loaded with the COURIER'S lies." We assure them the COURIER has told no lies. The Dispatch itself has not shown we are wrong. What are the "lies" referred to?

1. The COURIER said it would do a given job of work for the county for $43.35. That is no lie. We are still ready to do it.

2. The COURIER said the Dispatch has been given that very job at $110. That is no lie.

3. The COURIER said the Press had made a bid for the same work, of $123. That is no lie.

4. The COURIER said Burford got for that job last year $114.39. That is no lie. It is on record.

5. And lastly. The COURIER still insists that the job this year is substantially the same as last year. We know of no good reason why the treasurer should make any change that would add to the expense. But whether he has made such a change or not, cuts no figure, because it is on the job as now changed by the treasurer and let to the Dispatch that the COURIER'S bid is made.

We would have dropped the matter, and let the Dispatch and the county officers settle among themselves whether a thing like this can be allowed, but the continued abuse of the Dispatch about "the COURIER'S lies," tempts us to open the case thus briefly again. The COURIER has not lied. It has told the truth and has given proof of all it says.

And when the Dispatch calls the exposing of little games like this, "a piece of the COURIER'S rascality" we invite them to show how such exposure of wrong doing can possibly be "rascality." No attempt has been made to disprove what the COURIER published from the record.

The Dispatch complains that "Burford's agent is hanging around the court house basking in the sunshine of his friends:", But this is a reflection on the republican officials at the court house, everyone of whom is a republican except the auditor and surveyor. How's this?

ONE BRAVE LAD IN GREECE.

There was a red-headed, freckled peasant boy, in dirty petticoats, who guided Bass and myself to the trenches. He was one of the few peasants who had not run away, and as he had driven sheep over every foot of the hills, he elected to guide the soldiers through those places where they were best protected from the bullets of the enemy. He did this all day, and was always, whether coming or going, under a heavy fire; but he enjoyed that fact, and he seemed to regard the battle only as a delightful change in the quiet routine of his life, as one of our own country boys at home would regard the coming of the spring circus, or the burning of a neighbors barn. He ran dancing ahead of us, pointing to where a ledge of rock offered a natural shelter, or showing us a steep gully where the bullets could not fall. When they came very near him he would jump high in the air, not because he was startled, but out of pure animal joy in the excitemen of it, and he would frown importantly and shake his red curls at us, as though to say: "I told you to be careful. Now you see. Don't let that happen again." We met him many times during the two days, escorting different companies of soldiers from one point to another as though they were visitors to his estate When a shell broke he would pick up a piece and present it to the officer in charge, as though it were a flower he had plucked from his own garden, and which he wanted his guest to carry away with him as a souvenir of his visit. Some one asked the boy if his father and mother knew where he was, and he replied with amusment that they had run away and deserted him, and that he had remained because he wished to look at a Turkish army. He was a much more plucky boy that the overrated Casabianca, who may have stood on the burning deck whence all but him had fled because it was with him a choice of being either burned or drowned. This boy stuck to the burning deck when it was possible for him at any time to have walked away and left it burning. But he staid on; he was amused, and because he was able to help the soldiers from the city in safety across his native heath.—From "With the Greek Soldiers," by RICHARD HARDING DAVIS, in HARPER'S MAGAZINE for November.

FULL OF TRUTH

The following from the Churubusco Truth will apply to Auburn, as well: Any young man who walks the streets in company with a respectable young lady, and at the same time puffs the poisonous fumes of the deadly cigarette in her face, is really to be pitied, as is also the young lady. The young man may not realize at the time that the eyes of hundreds of our citizens are upon him, but they are, and pangs of both sorrow and disgust go out toward the youth who is slowly but surely stunting a life that might otherwise be a blessing to the community in which he lives. In such cases, we think it no more than right for every father and mother everywhere to sign a petition and present it to all cigarette dealers in town praying that they abstain from selling the poisonous cigarette to such young men as those who daily come under their observation on our streets with the little coffin nail between their lips.

FRANK B. DAVENPORT, JAMES R. RIGY,
CAPT. N. L. HANSEN, CHAS. REICHARDT, E. T. MILLIGAN

To those desiring to secure a share in the wealth of the wonderful Gold Fields of Alaska and the Klondike, the Merchant's Alaska Mining Company offers an unequaled opportunity.

WHILE all cannot go to Alaska, there are many who realize the opportunities that have been opened up there, and would make an investment if they could be assured that their money would be honestly handled, and that they would receive their proper share of the profits.

The MERCHANT'S ALASKA MINING COMPANY offers such an investment. It is a reliable, honest enterprise, directed by responsible men of business standing and character. It has associated with it mutually the firm of Atkins & Milligan, Mining Engineers and Operators, whose long experience and success in the mining business is a guarantee of the investments of its funds in the most renumerative manner, and whose reputation and business standing among mining circles is second to none. Their thorough acquaintance with the Northwest Mining Regions enables them to grasp opportunities others would overlook, and keep out of those ventures their experience has shown to be unsafe. The engineers and prospectors who will go to Alaska for the Company will be men of reputation for honesty and capability.

What the Company Will Do.

The lines upon which this Company will operate are novel in many particulars, and particularly adapted to the conditions in Alaska, and are sure to acquire for the Company large interests and reap immense profits for the stockholders.

First.

It will prospect and locate mines in mining claims through agents and prospectors, and by grubstaking reliable miners to stake and operate claims on shares.

Second:

It will develop, operate, buy and sell mines and mining property.

Third:

It will acquire interests in claims already staked out and partly developed, whose owners are out of supplies and money, and who are unable to proceed with work, but who have good claims; by advancing money, supplies and labor to such owners in consideration of an interest in their property.

Fourth:

It will conduct a general mining and mercantile business in Alaska, British Columbia, Northwest Territory, the United States and elsewhere in accordance with the terms of this charters, as opportunities may present.

The Company is now the owner of the "CELTIC" Mineral Claim located in the famous Big Bend District in the rich Kootenay Country, British Columbia. Late reports from this property give promise of rich developments. The camp in which it is located is a thriving one, rapidly building up. The assay on this property shows an average of from $10 to $15 per ton in gold. Every stockholder in this Company becomes on receipt of his stock a part owner in this property in addition to the interests he will acquire in every investment of the company in Alaska. This property will not be developed at present, all the effo ts of the Company being directed towards Alaska, the land of such wonderful opportunities.

A limited amount of the stock of the company is for sale at Fifty Cents per share. The stock at this figure is very low, and should advance in price at an early date. Subscriptions should be made at once to secure it at that figure. The Directors reserve the right to advance the price of stock or withdraw the same from the market without notice

Among the people who went from this place to hear Bryan at Defiance, were Geo. Baxter, C. C. Shaffer, Will Durk, Andy Wagner, Surveyor Krontz and J. A. Barns. Bryan came in on the regular noon train over the Wabash from Montpelier, where he had spoken at 10 o'clock. He had gone there on the morning Wabash train, which also ran a special to that place from Butler. The crowd at Montpelier was estimated at 20,000. When he came back through here there was quite a company waiting at the Wabash Main street station, but no one got to shake hands with him till he reached the Junction. There he found several hundred and they shook his hand till he was tired. His car was run off onto the "Y" and after the regular B. & O. train went east, an engine hooked on and brought him to Defiance At St. Joe, Hicksville Mark Center and Sherwood, large crowds were waiting to see him go by and when he could he got out and said a few words. At each of the places named many got on the regular train and went to help swell the crowd at Defiance. But all the morning the whole country had been filled with teams headed for the city. At Defiance, Bryan was taken in a carriage decorated with flags and red-white and blue, and followed by other carriages containing members of the press, the city officers, committees and then a mile or two of carriages and all moved off down town followed by throngs on foot. They drove down into the heart of the city, then back to the Soldiers' Monument at the school grounds near where the B. & O. crosses the Auglaize river. At the east end of these grounds, a large stand was erected. When he began to speak the whole area was packed filling in across the streets and up on the school house steps, the windows of the school house, and its roof being also full of eager spectators. Bryan's voice, at first was somewhat husky, but he soon got all right and for over an hour the audience listened to him and cheered, shouted and laughed. His talk was mostly to republicans for he admitted he wanted to convert them in order to get even with Mark Hanna and McKinley who had come over into Nebraska five years ago to try and defeat him, Bryan, when he was running for congress. And they had again this year, he said, been sending speakers into Nebraska. And if republicans had a right to interfere in Nebraska's elections, democrats had the same right to interfere in Ohio's elections. He also addressed a great deal of his talk to the farmers. He made fun of the idea that republican success last year had raised, as some claimed the price of wheat, or that Mark Hanna had done it. If that were true who raised the price of sugar and who lowered the price of hay and clover seed? He gave Mark Hanna, McKinley and Mr. Dingley such a lambasting as they probably never had before. He was wildly cheered all through. After the speech he w s driven back to his car and taken to Van Wert where he spoke in the evening, but made several speeches on the way. He speaks four to six times a day, ending Saturday at Cincinnati. The election is next Tuesday, that being "the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November." The election of a governor does not seem to cut much figure in Ohio just now, although it is barely possible the democratic candidate may win. The great fight is on Mark Hanna who wants to elect enough members of the legislature to send him back to the U. S. Senate. The democrats hate him and republicans fairly worship him. So the fight is hot In Defiance we saw but one picture of Mark Hanna; there were a few of the democratic candidate for governor, but there were thousands of pictures of Bryan, evidently left over from last year. Those who think Bryan's popularity is dying out, are liable to find themselves greatly mistaken. We saw no signs of it at Defiance.

SUICIDE AT GARRETT.

SPECIAL TO THE DAILY COURIER.

GARRETT, Oct. 28:—Charles Zeek, a brother of John Zeek committed suicide here yesterday by taking poison. He had lost his job with the railroad and evidently became discouraged. He began drinking heavily and probably this made his mental condition worse. Yesterday he procured thirteen grains of morphine and took it at about 11 a. m. All the afternoon two physicians worked over him to save him but in vain. He died at about 5 p. m.

Another death of a Garrett citizen has just been reported. Jacob Rose, who was in the employ of the Great Northern Railway was killed in an accident at Melrose, Minn., yesterday, while in the discharge of his duty. His remains will be sent back here, reaching Chicago to-morrow, Friday. He was a son of Geo. Rose, formerly a B. & O. conductor, but now in Longcliff Asylum at Logansport.

HOFFMAN--HAMILTON.

Thursday's Daily.

At eight o'clock last evening at the beautiful rooms of Rev. T. M. and Mrs. Guild, occurred the marriage ceremony of two of Auburn's most popular young people, Mr. Oscar Hoffman and Miss Mae Hamilton, the Rev. T. M. Guild officiating. The wedding was a very quiet one, only the following ladies witnessing the ceremony: Miss Flora Hoffman, Miss Belle DePew, Miss Libbie Waltz, and Miss Mary Baxter.

Mr. and Mrs. Hoffman are among Auburn's most highly respected young people. They are both earnest workers in the M. E. church and Epworth League of which both are members.

They were entertained at dinner today, by the groom's sister Miss Flora Hoffman, including the other ladies who witnessed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Hoffman will make their home with the groom's father on South Main street, where they will be at home to their friends. They have our best wishes for their future happiness.

OREGON CHRISTIAN MARTYRS

"Eleven years of the united life of Dr. and Mrs. Whitman had passed," writes George Ludington Weed of Dr. Whitman's patriotic achievement in saving Oregon to the United States, in the November issue of the Ladies Home Journal. "In all his labors she had been an inspiration and a support, sometimes the only one. But the life of romantic beginning was to have a tragic ending. Whatever the causes of that ending, direct or remote, or whatever their relative force, the result was one of the saddest in American history. In it Dr. and Mrs. Whitman must ever be recognized as the Christian patriot martyrs of Oregon. The fatal day was November 29, 1857, just half a century ago this month. The full tale of its horrors need not here be told, though the incidents are at hand. The partly-lifted curtain reveals enough—Dr. Whitman's fall by the tomahawk at the age of forty-five, and Mrs. Whitman's by the rifle at the age of thirty-nine. There was a shallow grave invaded by wolves, and then a deeper one, which until now has been without a monument. Twelve others of the household, butchered with them, share their grave. But the memory of the long-forgotten hero is being revived. A bronze statue is being erected near the spot in the region of his triumph and martyrdom. As in pal e car I was hurried through it, where his lone wagon had tediously sought the way, he seemed everywhere present, and each mountain a monument recording his deeds.

The Oregon saved from falling into the possession of the English by Dr. Whitman's heroic efforts means the Washington, Oregon and Idaho of today, a territory of two hundred and seventy-one thousand square miles, equal to New England, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and three Connecticuts."

FIRST IN SEVEN YEARS

Ft. Gaines, Georgia, has just had a wedding, the first in seven years, although it is a town nearly as large as Auburn. It tickled the people so they shut up all stores and quit business for the day. All went to the wedding and fairly smothered the young couple with valuable presents. Then they held a convention and nominated the groom for mayor and will run no other candidate.

HENRY GEORGE DEAD.

Henry George, the candidate for mayor of Greater New York, on the "United Democracy" and "Single Tax" parties, died in that city of apoplexy at 5:15 Friday morning. It is supposed he had overtaxed his strength in the hot campaign he has been making. Some days he spoke a dozen times in as many different places in the city. His son, Henry George jr. has been nominated to take his place on the ticket.

Without A Rival.

As a positive cure for sprains, bruises, and pains of all kinds, Salvation Oil has no equal. Mrs. Frank Juif, 518 Gratiot Ave., Detroit, Mich., writes: "I used Salvation Oil in my family and can say it has no rival as a liniment; it certainly cures pains. I sprained my ankle and it cured me and since then I have always used it for any pains and bruises." Salvation Oil is sold for only 25 cents. No other remedy will do the work as promptly.

THE COON WAS SCARED.

Cromwell News.

An amusing incident is related in connection with the chase of bloodhounds for the assassins of Adam Hoffman near brimfield. Two fellows had been seen very early in the morning near a creek where the trail of the culprits was lost. Thinking a clew might be gained the hounds were put on their tracks and soon brought up at the bank of a little lake where a party of two white men and a negro were camping and fishing. The negro was dozing by the fire when Deputy Sheriff Bowman accosted them with: "Well, gentleman, I suppose you know what we're here for?" They declared their ignorance of the motive of the visit, when the negro roused up in a fright and exclaimed: "Lo'd a massa, I'se dun gwine to pay fo' dat co'n; I didn't 'ted to steal it, jus' got feed fo' ous hoss outen dat field 'tendin' to pay fo' it dis mawnin'." The colored gentleman was informed that they were not pursuing corn thieves, but were after murderers. The negro fainted dead away and nearly fell in the fire.

WHOLE TRAIN WRECKED.

The Lake Erie passenger train which runs into the Lake Shore depot at Fort Wayne was wrecked at a little after ten o'clock last night.

The entire train was wrecked, and the engine and baggage car were turned up side down at the foot of a twenty foot embankment. The smoking car rolled over on her side, with the front end at the bottom of the bank, and the last coach was thrown from the track, and balanced on the edge of the steep declivity.

No one was hurt except the engineer although the escape of the other passengers was a little short of miraculous The derailing switch was open, and the engine dashed through and shot over the bank, rolling down to the bottom, and lying with her upper part buried in the ground and the wheels in the air. The baggage car followed suit, and turned completely over. The smoker went after the baggage car, and her forward end went into the mud in the ditch, the car lying sideways up the bank, with the wheels in air. The last coach left the rails, and turn slightly sidewaays, one end hanging over either side of the embankment. The train was a complete wreck, and the strangest part of the wreck is the escape of the passengers.

Engineer Kelly was thrown against the boiler head, and the escaping steam and water poured over his hands, legs, face and breast, blistering and burning him badly. His head was also severely crushed, and he was bruised about the shoulders and lower part of the body. His injuries will not prove fatal.

HOLD-UP NO. 2.

John Stewart, a farmer living one mile north of Brimfield, on the Bowman farm, was stopped Wednesday night on his way home from Walcottville, where he had been with a load of grain, and his money demanded by three robbers, but he gave whip to his team and escaped. Mr. Stewart resides near the residence of the late Adam Hoffman, who was murdered a few days ago, and Wednesday he was engaged by Mr. Hosler, the administrator of the Hoffman estate, to haul a load of oats from the Hoffman farm to Wolcottville. A message was sent to Mr. Myers at Huntertown, the owner of the bloodhounds, asking him to bring his dogs at once. He arrived at Kendallville about midnight, and changed terms and continued on his way to Brimfield. The hounds were put upon the tracks about 1:30 Thursday morning and followed the trail in various meanderings through fields and woods to the Lake Shore railroad tracks, a short distance east of Brim field, where, it is conjectured, the scoundrers took passage on a west bound freight train that passed there about 2:30 or later that morning.

Many rumors are afloat and many theories are advanced but the general impression is that the parties know Mr. Stewart and perhaps saw him going to Wolcottville, with the produce which they may have conjectured was wheat, and that he would be liable to have the proceeds arising from the sale of it in his pocket. In other words the opinion obtainsthat it is local talent and that if they took the freight train, as indicated by the hounds, it was to confuse those in search and disarm suspicion. It was a bold affair, notwithstanding no money changed hands, and demands all attention that can possibly be given it.

Hunters Mob Game Warden.

Eight dozen prairie chickens were seized from the Northern Pacific Express Company at West Superior, Wis. They were going to the Union Cold Storage Company of Chicago from Detroit, Minn. Game Warden Fullerton of Minnesota, went to West Superior on the train with the shipment and got it on a search warrant before it could be transferred to the Chicago train. When he attempted to seize the birds at the point of shipment in Minnesota, he was attacked by the pot hunters in the darkness of the depot platform. They cut him badly with knives and succeeded in making the shipment and their escape. Fullerton thinks he knows them, and after confiscating the game returned to make several arrests in connection with the affair.

Divorces Invalid.

Judge John R. Thomas of the United States Court at Vinita, I. T., has made an important and far-reaching ruling. Judge Thomas held that the publication of warning notices to non-resident defendants in divorce proceedings were null and void, and that actual service must be had on such defendants. The decision, if sustained in the higher court, to which an appeal will be taken, will set aside scores of marriages contracted by parties who have obtained decrees of divorce from the courts on the default of non-resident defendants.

To Search for Andree.

Dr. Otto Nordenskiold, a well-known Antarctic explorer, will superintend an expedition to ascertain whether any trace of Prof. Andree and his balloon can be found near Prince Charles promintory. A telegram from the Island of Vardoe says that Capt. Sverdrup, of Dr. Nansen's exploring ship The Fram, will start immediately with an expedition for Prince Charles promintory to look for Andree's balloon.

Attempt to Wreck and Rob a Train.

LULL IN RETAIL BUSINESS.

Dun Reports a Quiet Week in Trade Centers—Decline in Cotton.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says: "After the heaviest buying ever known in many branches during September and the first half of October it was both natural and desirable that a more quiet period should give time for testing the size and temper of retail trade and for distributing part of the enormous quantities bought. In textile goods the rush of orders went far beyond all distributive demand in August, and represented great replenishment of stocks, and the similar rush for goods has been correspondingly great in other lines during the past two months. The iron industry waits because possible production for the year has been practically ordered, while neither buyers nor sellers regard contracts at current prices for next year's business quite safe. Anthracite coal is sold at $4.15 in New York harbor, or 20 cents below the circular, and conservative estimates make the year's output 40,500,000 tons. The only noteworthy feature in minor metals is a sensational collapse in lead of 30 points, with sales of 3,000 tons. The severe decline in cotton to 6.12 cents from 8.25 cents Aug. 30 is due to widespread confidence in large estimates in yield. A natural consequence is the fall in print cloths to the lowest point in the history of the market, 2.37 cents, and cotton goods generally are easy with limited sales of staples. All woolen goods are firm, but there is no new business of note for spring outside of dress goods. Sales of wool have sharply decreased again at Boston, amounting to only 3,043,000 pounds, against over 13,000,000 pounds the last week in September, and the week there was the dullest since Jan. 7. The produce market acted with as little apparent reason as usual. Although Atlantic exports of wheat were 3,576,607 bushels, flour included, and for three weeks of October 10,309,908 bushels, against 7,742,214 last year, with Western receipts not 500,000 bushels larger, the price advanced 2½ cents. Corn, with smaller receipts and exports, barely a quarter of last year, declined a small fraction. Failures for the week were 224 in the United States, against 274 last year, and 36 in Canada, against 60 last year."

TWENTY-EIGHT LIVES ARE LOST.

Terrible Disaster on the New York Central Railway Near Garrison's, N. Y.

A disastrous railroad accident occurred on the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad, a short distance below Garrison's station. The train was going at a good rate of speed when it passed Garrison's. It was a mile and a half below when the accident occurred. Conductor Parish says the track seemed to fall out from under the train, the train seemed to shoot into the air, and the next minute it appeared to fall into the river. Into the slimy waters of the Hudson the cars plunged, dragging through the water the helpless passengers. The total number of known dead is nineteen; the estimated number is twenty-eight.

SOUTH'S BOOM CONTINUES.

Further Encouraging Reports from Manufacturers and Dealers.

The industrial situation in the South shows many encouraging features and the Chattanooga Tradesman's Southern correspondents among prominent manufacturers and dealers report a feeling of confidence and continued satisfaction as to the volume of trade. The iron and steel production is heavy, and the mills have orders on hand to keep them busy until the first of the year. The lumber and textile industries are active, and coal elevators report an increasing demand for their product.

A Daring Robbery.

The State Bank of Blairsburg was robbed by three masked men. One of the robbers is lying at the Hotel McNee in that town with two bullet wounds in his body, one in his chest and one in the abdomen. The two other men escaped. The men gained entrance to the bank through the front door of the building, battering it in with sledge hammers. While two were at work in the bank the third was stationed outside. A hole was drilled through the top of the outside safe, and to make their work sure they inserted dynamite enough to blow open a dozen safes. The great iron doors were hurled twenty feet, the safe was wrecked and the entire building was damaged. The plate-glass windows were shattered. The noise of the explosion brought half the people of Blairsburg from their beds. James Coners, an employe at the Blairsburg creamery, was the first citizen to arrive. When he saw the havoc that had been wrought he uttered a yell and retreated. It was this cry frightened the burglars. They had returned to the building through which they had access from a back window and had prepared another charge of dynamite for the time-locks on the interior of the big safe. This they did not explode. They hastily left the bank, and as they were passing the corner of the building the third man, who gives his name as Edward Gillicon, rushed around the same corner. Twice the fleeing burglars shat at him, each shot taking effect. A volley was fired by the bandits at the crowd which had rapidly gathered, but owing to the darkness their shots did no harm. The two men escaped, taking with them cash and valuable paper amounting to about $6,000. No one in the crowd was armed and immediate pursuit was not made.

Two Found Dead in a Well.

Little girls at Derby, Kas., while on their way to Sunday school, found the dead bodies of Frank Moon and Jane Wells in a well on Moon's farm near that town. Mrs. Wells obtained a divorce vorce from her husband at the last term of the District Court. After she went to act as housekeeper for Mr. Moon, the latter's wife having left him a short time before. It is believed their food had been poisoned, and that after they had died the murderer had dragged the bodies to the well and thrown them in.

Opened for Settlement.

Fort Randall military reservation has been opened to intending homesteaders. The scene at Champaign, when the land office was opened for business, was a lively one. A long line stretched far out on the prairie. Many of the settlers who made entry for lands have been squatters for years. Their lands contain many improvements. Fort Randall reservation contains more than 100,000 acres. The reservation is partly in South Dakota, partly in Nebraska.

Over $90,000 of alleged fraudulent warrants on the United States Treasury on the account of the Creek Indian nation in Indian Territory have been discovered by Government authorities. The alleged fraud was perpetrated in connection with the payment of the Creek Indian nation debts, and only the barest details have reached Washington. One of the persons implicated has made a confession.

Ohio Physicians Must Register.

The Supreme Court sustained the law creating the State board of medical examination and registration.

Opinions of Two Men.

Tomas Estrada Palma, the Cuban delegate to the United States in New York, when asked his opinion of the Cuban reforms proposed by the Spanish ministry, said: "As the representative of the Cuban provisional government I am in a position to state most emphatically that the Cubans in arms will enter into no compromise with Spain. Cubans are fighting for absolute independence and they will entertain no peace proposals from the Spanish Government based on anything but absolute independence. The Cuban patriots are firmly determined to carry on the struggle until their purpose is accomplished. They will listen to no proposition acknowledging Spanish authority over Cuba. I am speaking for men who are fully resolved to give up their lives, if need be, for their country's freedom." A mass meeting of Cubans will be held in New York soon to voice opposition to the Spanish proposals and declare for independence. Dr. Jose Congosto, Spanish consul at Philadelphia, who has just been appointed secretary general of Cuba, says: "A good doctor, you know, when called in to take charge of a case of which another doctor has made a failure, ignores his predecessor's mode of treatment and adopts one of his own. The governing factor in my policy shall be liberality and fairness toward every one. Another change which I will make will be in the treatment of accredited representatives of American newspapers. All the information I possess which can be made public will be at their disposal. The reforms to be instituted are going to be genuine in every feature and the policy of harshness that has hitherto prevailed in the government of the island will be swept away without delay."

UNCLE SAM WANTS HASTE.

Big Contract Is Given the Carpenter Steel Works.

The Carpenter steel works, at Reading, Pa., has received a very large order from the Government for armor-piercing projectiles. It is an unusual contract, not only in the large amount of projectiles ordered and the caliber, but on account of the comparatively brief period within which deliveries shall be begun and be completed, indicating the determination of the administration to have as little delay as possible in dispelling the feeling of insecurity which has been caused by the lack of war material in case of an emergency such as that growing out of the Chilean imbroglio several years ago.

Gold on the Anchor.

The steam whaler Thrasher and bark Charles W. Morgan have arrived at San Francisco from the Arctic. The Thrasher has on board 4,000 pounds of whalebone and 350 barrels of oil. The Morgan took three whales and has nearly 300 barrels of oil. Mate J. J. Thatcher, of the Thrasher, says: "When we took in our anchor at the north head of St. Lawrence Bay we found the palm of the bill plated with gold. We dragged some and the gold worked into the pores of the iron."

Deserts from the Baltimore.

Since the cruiser Baltimore has been anchored in the harbor at San Francisco preparatory to going to Honolulu her commander has reported to the police the almost daily desertion of three or four of the crew. Already twenty have succeeded in escaping and unless a stricter watch is kept it is believed that another draft of men will have to be sent from the East to fill her complement. One night seven men succeeded in getting ashore by swimming and in small boats.

Whaling Fleet in Danger.

News received at San Francisco from the whaling fleet is discouraging. Nearly all the vessels have been caught in the ice and some of them may not last through the winter. Not since the winter of 1884, when the fleet was caught in the ice off Herald Island, has such wholesale disaster threatened. Fourteen steamers, barks and schooners are known to be in the pack, and only five of them are supposed to have more than two months' supplies aboard.

DEATH OF HENRY GEORGE.

Noted Apostle of Single Tax Succumbs to Apoplexy.

Henry George, the apostle of single tax, died suddenly at 5 o'clock Friday morning in his room at the Union Square Hotel, New York City. Apoplexy was the cause. Mr. George made four speeches Thursday night in his campaign as candidate for Mayor of Greater New York, and was very fatigued when he retired. It is believed the sudden attack that ended his life was brought on by the unusually severe strain occasioned by his speech-making.

Henry George was the mayoralty candidate of the silver Democrats of Greater New York. He had made up to the night before his death a red hot campaign, in which he promised, if elected, to do his best to send Richard Croker to the penitentiary. To his denunciations of Croker he added denunciations of Senator Thomas C. Platt. He had entered the contest with great earnestness, and his campaign speeches throughout were marked with great fervor and earnestness. His exhaustive labors are thought to have led directly to his death.

Henry George was born in Philadelphia on Sept. 2, 1839, and as a boy went to California. He drifted into journalism in San Francisco and attained some celebrity as a writer on political theories. In 1879 he published Progress and Poverty, which acquired a world-wide reputation. In it he gave the result of his investigations among the poor of the great cities and his theories for reform. About the same time he first expressed his plan of taxing property on a single value—that is, taxing the land itself and not the improvements thereon. This was the origin of the single tax doctrine.

In 1880 he removed to New York. The following year he published a volume on Ireland and England. His publications of various theories on political economy made him one of the best known men in the country. In 1886 he was the candidate of the laboring element for Mayor of New York, but was defeated by Abram S. Hewitt by 22,000 votes. He led Theodore Roosevelt, the Republican nominee, by 8,000 votes. Ever since then Mr. George has been more or less identified with political movements.

WORK FOR THE GOVERNOR.

Washington's State Treasurer Arranges a Big Job for the Executive.

Gov. Rogers of Washington has proclaimed his intention of investigating State Treasurer Young's accounts. He has announced that he, in company with one of the Supreme Court judges, will count all the money in the treasury.

In order that the Governor may have as much enjoyment as possible out of his self-appointed job, Mr. Young has changed every piece of gold and paper currency in the treasury to its equivalent in silver cartwheel dollars. This will enable the Governor and his assistant to bend their backs, lame their wrists and consume a good deal of valuable time in counting 120 tons of silver dollars. Moreover, Treasurer Young will not permit either the Governor or the judge to enter the treasury without giving bonds.

The Comic Side of The News

Blanco says he will end the Cuban war in seven months. Weyler was going to do it in six.

Among recent incorporations in New York is "The Motherhood Company, Limited." Very.

Notwithstanding the reports from London, Salisbury probably will neither resign nor blow out the gas.

There is a rumor afloat that the Yerkes telescope is the finest one in the world; scientists ought to look into that.

"The Last Fly of Summer" is the title of a poem printed recently in a Maine paper. It is a very spectacular production.

The writer of an article in a current review who says that "there is no excitement in modern military life" evidently had not heard recently from Fort Sheridan.

A young woman in Brunswick, N. J., has just fallen heir to $25,000,000. The dispatches do not state whether she is beautiful or not, but she certainly has a magnificent figure.

We suggest that Gen. Weyler's hand baggage be searched before he leaves Cuba. Unless Spain adopts that precaution he will probably take his famous trocha away from the island.

Luetgert says "the suspense was terrible." The suspense might have been worse.

Of course a great many families have skeletons in the closets, but comparatively few have sesamoids in a vat.

It is to be hoped that during all this extended investigation into bones, chemicals, and morality the Leutgert jury will not overlook the minor issue: Is the defendant guilty of murder?

The medical profession itself should take up in earnest the cry for reform in the method of obtaining expert testimony in court. The exhibition in the Luetgert case at Chicago was a disgrace to the craft.

PULSE OF THE PRESS

The Luetgert Trial.

The Luetgert jury wisely refused to establish a precedent for hanging men on expert testimony.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

The Luetgert trial should be a warning lest its laxity and irregularities are followed in other cases until the administration of justice in the United States shall fall into utter contempt.—Boston Transcript.

There has never been a more conspicuous and disgusting exhibition of judicial unfitness and professional triviality in the United States than the Luetgert trial, and that is saying a great deal.—Indianapolis Journal.

The failure of the jury in the Luetgert murder case to find a verdict is not surprising to anybody in this part of the country. There is actually matter for surprise that an acquittal was not entered.—New Orleans Picayune.

The result is only a repetition of the experience that the courts in all countries, and particularly in the United States, have had where expert testimony is introduced to establish the prosecution or support the defense.—Philadelphia Times.

At present whatever may be the instinctive feeling regarding the guilt or innocence of the big sausage maker, impartial judgment can hardly be otherwise than that his guilt was not proven beyond the shadow of a reasonable doubt.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

In the looseness of proceeding, the lack of intelligent and strict direction of the work and the haphazard method of securing expert testimony, the Luetgert trial gave peculiar emphasis to the faults of practice in criminal trials.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The result of the Luetgert trial is what was generally expected. In a case of this kind men hesitate a long while before sending one of their fellows to the gallows on purely circumstantial evidence supported wholly by expert testimony that the layman cannot understand.—St. Louis Republic.

The three dissenting jurors are not without justification for their action. In the absence of positive proof that Mrs. Luetgert was really killed, it seems to us unnecessary to advance any discreditable theory of their pertinacious refusal to condemn Luetgert to the gallows.—Rochester (N. Y.) Herald.

The police and the attorneys for the State seemed to have left no stone unturned in the securing of evidence, and no word unsaid that might add to the presentation of the case built upon that evidence. The prosecution of Luetgert was carried on with fierce and unusual ardor from first to last.—Detroit Free Press.

The purpose of the Chicago police to force a conviction recalled their ways in the anarchist trials. The espionage of the jury and the intensely prejudiced and one-sided character of the reports sent out, as well as the accounts of most of the Chicago papers, were simply horrible, considering a man's life was at stake.—Pittsburg Post.

There has been no visible endeavor to ascertain the truth. It has been a struggle to vindicate the police idea—an unmistakable conspiracy to enforce a preconceived proposition. Instead of trying to find out whether the accused was guilty, the authorities of Chicago have made it a matter of pride and of esprit de corps to impress their views upon the court. It has not been a trial, an investigation. It has been a persecution.—Washington Post.

PULLMAN'S WILL.

Palace Car Magnate Left Many Bequests to Charitable Institutions.

The will of the late George M. Pullman was filed in the probate court at Chicago the other day. Norman B. Ream and Robert T. Lincoln are named as executors, his wife not being appointed because of his wish to relieve her of the responsibilities of the position. The total value is shown by the petition for a letter of testamentary to be over $7,000,000. Of this amount, $6,800,000 is in personal property and $800,000 in realty. The bulk of the estate goes to the two daughters, Mrs. Frank O. Lowden of Chicago and Mrs. Frank Carolan of San Francisco, who received $1,000,000 each, and also a residuary estate. To his widow he left the homestead on Prairie avenue. She is also to receive $50,000 for the first year and thereafter during her life the income of $1,250,000.

"Castle Rest," on one of the Thousand Islands in the St. Lawrence river, is given to his daughter Florence (Mrs. Lowden), with the furniture, for life.

The eighth provision is as follows: "Inasmuch as neither of my sons has developed such a sense of responsibility as in my judgment is requisite to the wise use of large properties and considerable sums of money, I am painfully compelled, as I have explicitly stated to them, to limit my testamentary provisions for their benefit to trusts producing only such income as I have deemed reasonable for their support." Accordingly the bonds and other securities set aside yield each an annual income of $3,000."

To Royal Henry Pullman, John M. Pullman, Helen Pullman West and Emma Pullman Fluhrer, brothers and sisters of the deceased, is bequeathed the sum of $50,000 apiece. Thirteen Chicago charitable institutions receive $10,000. The sum of $200,000 is given for the erection of a manual training school in Pullman, which is also endowed with $1,200,000. Five of the old employes are given $5,000 each. The household servants get from $250 to $500 apiece. There are numerous other bequests to relatives ranging from $500 to $25,000.

GROVER, JR., IS BORN.

Fine Boy Comes to Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland at Princeton.

To Grover Cleveland came at noon Thursday a boy. He was born at Princeton, N. J., in the white mansion under the oaks in the room where the colonial mantel displays its pretty thin columnettes of an exquisite ancient art. The infant heir has blue eyes, hair that is like a mist and lungs that make his cries resound till his sister Marion rolls her eyes in amazement. He is strong and weighs twelve pounds. There is little else to say, since in him the father and the mother have their fondest wish realized.

Ruth Cleveland was born in New York, Oct. 3, 1891, two years after her father's first administration came to an end. She speaks German as well as English. Esther was born at the White House. She is the first child born there. She came into the world in October, 1893, and last year she said very solemnly to a little girl whom she met on the White House stairs: "Your father is a policeman. Oh, oh, I wish mine was." Marion was born at Gray Gables, July 7, 1895. All are healthy, bright, interesting children. Their little brother should be happy.

Telegrams of congratulation were received without number. Among the first to proffer congratulations by wire were Joseph Jefferson, E. C. Benedict, Secretary Thurber and J. G. Carlisle.

INDIANA INCIDENTS TERSELY TOLD.

She Thinks She Likes Her First Husband Better than Her Second—Found Her Son After Eighteen Years—Big Oil Strikes Near Peru.

The Husband Came Back.

Several years ago Walter Jameson left Evansville because he was out of work and hard up. His wife remained behind. After waiting for five years after last hearing from him, Mrs. Jameson concluded her husband was dead. She then married George Babcock. A few days ago Jameson returned there to see his wife and he found her in a predicament. He is now a rich man and still loves her. She prefers Jameson to Babcock. An effort will be made to get a legal separation through the courts, there having been no intent on the part of the woman to commit bigamy.

Finds Her Long-Lost Son.

Eighteen years ago, when James Fear died, he left a young wife and a 6-months-old son in destitute circumstances. Being unable to properly care for her baby, Mrs. Fear placed him in the orphans' home at Elwood and then went to California to reside. Several years later she married quite a wealthy man and then sent back for the son. The boy in the meantime, however, had been adopted by a rich bachelor, who had taken him to England, and the mother was unable to find him, although the search for him was never abandoned. Not long since, while in Chicago, she met on a principal thoroughfare a young man who bore a striking resemblance to herself and whom she at once believed was her son. She addressed him and after some explanation found that her surmises were correct.

Big Oil Strikes.

The development of the oil field in Cass and Miami counties has created a craze for speculation among all classes. Less than three months ago Dick Strouse of Peru organized a company and drilled a well which proved a "gusher," and now every little village of consequence in the two counties has its own company, and money at command to drill for oil. Merchants, clerks, farmers and laborers who never before ventured their money in speculation have yielded to the oil craze. At present Peru is the most conspicuous point in the field. Nearly 200 wells have been drilled, and only five or six are yielding less than fifty barrels a day.

Three Killed at a Crossing.

At a dangerous blind crossing between Oaklandon and Lawrence three men were instantly killed. They had been to a logging camp, and were on their way home when struck by a Big Four train.

All Over the State.

At Limestone, James Neven was struck on the head with a beer bottle hurled by Noah George. He will die.

At Greencastle, Carl Huffman, aged 14, had both of his legs cut off while jumping on a Big Four train. His injuries are fatal.

Mrs. Lizzie Harding, who shot and killed Miss Mary Rosenbaum at Jeffersonville, was indicted for murder in the first degree.

The American Wire Nail Company announces that it will increase the capacity of its plants in Anderson by adding twenty-five more nail machines at once. They now have a capacity of about 2,600 kegs of nails a day and employ seven hundred men.

Masked men forced an entrance into John Wright's home in Munroe County, dragged him from his bed and administered a severe whipping with switches, the alleged grievance being that he did not support his family. Wright is 70 years old and quite feeble.

A robbery occurred the other night at the home of James Hamilton, who lives north of LaGrange. A large fodder stack and a barn were set on fire, and while Hamilton and his neighbors were fighting the flames the house was ransacked. Hamilton sustained a heavy loss.

William P. Miller, once a lieutenant in the Twenty-fifth Iowa Infantry, and chaplain of Post No. 350, G. A. R., at Ridgeville, has been absent from his home since Oct. 11. On the 8th he sent a trunk by express to his daughter, who resides at Council Bluffs, Iowa, and on the morning of the 11th he got his pension check on the Des Moines agency out of the Ridgeville postoffice and started to Winchester, where he left his horse and buggy, telling the liveryman that he would be back in a day or two, and, going to the Farmers and Merchants' Bank, had his pension check (for $51) cashed, since when nothing can be learned of his whereabouts.

The Fitzsimmons vaudeville company filled an engagement in Marion the other night, and after the performance Robert Fitzsimmons was initiated into the local lodge of Elks.

Thieves entered Mrs. Joshua Billings' house, near Aaron, and stole $600 in gold which she kept in a shot sack locked in her trunk.

Mrs. Mary Fields, 73 years of age, died of paralysis at her home in Hancock County, and was buried. Her daughter visited the cemetery and became suspicious from the appearance of the grave that it had been disturbed. She caused the earth to be removed, and when the box containing the coffin was reached it was found to have been split open and the body taken out, nothing being left by the ghouls but one of the slippers worn by the corpse. All the medical colleges were searched, but the body was not found.

A REMARKABLE CASE.

It Was That of a Governor's Wife Charged with Forgery.

At Glenville, W. Va., recently the jury disagreed as to the guilt of Governor Atkinson's wife, who was charged with fabricating her deceased husband's name to an important legal document. It is not likely that the case will be tried again, and in the event of the fair defendant's conviction her liege lord and master surely would grant her unconditional pardon ere she had passed the fraction of a second in penal servitude.

GOV. ATKINSON.

Mrs. Atkinson was thrice married, and each time it was to her benefit. As a poor and obscure girl she first married Dr. Ed Davis, a man of prominent family, in 1875. Dr. Davis drank lye for whisky in the dark one night and died. In 1883 the widow married Judge Gideon Draper Camden, a member of the famous family that numbers Senators, governors and millionaires in its list of notables. She was then 38, handsome, vivacious and lively—just the sort of a woman to attract a millionaire widower of 75, and that he was attracted, and that the widow was not without business sense, is proven by a marriage contract that gave her $100,000 for marrying him and caring for him in his old age; also by the will, which gave her all his estate except a few $500 legacies he left to his children and grandchildren.

At 52, when Mrs. Camden married Gov. Atkinson, last summer, she was still well preserved and retained much of her youthful spirit and vigor. She and the Governor had known each other for years and had always been good friends. After the Governor's period of mourning for his wife, who died in 1894, it was noticed that he was often at Clarksburg, Mrs. Camden's home, and that she often entertained him, not only there, but when they might chance to be in Washington, where Mrs. Camden maintained an elaborate establishment on U street.

The forgeries Mrs. Atkinson was charged with having committed related to the property left by Judge Camden. It is known that during his life Mrs. Atkinson signed his name, with his assent, to papers; but the prosecution charged that after his death Mrs. Atkinson continued signing his name, and thereby acquired property that she had no right to.

OUR OLDEST BLOCK HOUSE.

It Stands on Wiscasset Harbor, Maine, and Was Garrisoned in 1812.

The oldest block house in the United States stands at the entrance to Wiscasset Harbor, Maine, where it was erected before the war of 1812. It stands on the southern end of Folly Island and commands the entrance to the harbor, for whose defense it was intended. In 1812 it was garrisoned, and although a big British man-of-war came up the river leading into the harbor, she did not deem it wise to pass this block house. It is built of massive oak timber, square hewn, and the sides of the structure are very thick. It is pierced with port holes, having heavy doors. It was also garrisoned in the late civil war. The citizens of Edgecomb and Wiscasset keep it in repair, although it belongs to Uncle Sam.

Bamboo as a Building Material.

The great strength of bamboo poles is not at all understood by the majority of persons. It is stated on excellent authority that two bamboo poles, each of them one and seven-tenths inches in diameter, when placed side by side, will support a grand piano slung between them by ropes, and that they will neither sag or break under the burden. Bamboo will form poles sixty-five to seventy feet long and from eight to ten inches in diameter. A derrick, twenty-six feet high, made of four-inch bamboo poles, raised two iron girders weighing together four hundred and twenty-four pounds. The wonderful lightness of this material in proportion to its strength has excited comment of late, and new uses are constantly being made of it. Scaffoldings of bamboo have the advantage of lightness and strength. It is predicted that this material will come into general use for such purposes.

Nature of Some Electric Belts.

An examination was made of some electric belts sold by a street faker at Ottawa, Canada. It was found that beneath a strip of gauze was a layer of dry mustard. When the wearer perspired a little the mustard was moistened and set up a burning sensation, and the deluded victim believed a current of electricity was passing through him.

What a happy world this would be if a man could only believe all he says.

MORNING AND NIGHT.

A little space of pleasure—
A little space of pain,
And then the solemn darkness,
And then—the light again!

A little song and story
In sunlight and in rain;
A little gleam of glory
And then—the dark again!

And so it goes: The darkness,
And then the gleam of light;
And so, life is good morning,
With sad thoughts of good night!

The Miser's Secret.

Old Miser Furgis was dying. In a large, bare, desolate room he lay, staring wildly at the dull walls and dingy ceiling. No one entered his room unless requested, save his wife, who clung faithfully to his side. His children—for whom he had never exhibited any great show of affection, and whom he seemed to look upon as so much property to be made the most of—stole cautiously to the room occasionally and peered in.

Miser Furgis, as he was known throughout the country, had lived in the old rambling house, in which he was dying, for thirty years. During the time he had cultivated the fertile acres that lay about it. He had worked like a slave and forced his children to work, lived like the poorest laborer, that he might hoard his hard-earned gold. Now he was dying, and he alone knew where it was buried.

One morning, after having lain unconscious for days, he opened his eyes and turned them searchingly about the room until they rested on his wife. As they lingered finally on her there was a tender light in them that told of love.

"Lucy," he began in a faint, hollow voice, "I feel that I can't live much longer. I am dying, and before I go I want to tell you a secret—ask you you and the children to forgive me for the cold, hard life I have caused you to live. You will forgive me—when you know all. Call the children—I—am going fast."

The family gathered hurriedly about the bed. The miser asked to be lifted to a sitting position, and continued:

"Children, when you know the secret that I am about to disclose you will forgive my seeming unnatural—" he stopped and writhed in agony as some great pain took hold of him. Trembling violently, he sank back among the pillows. Then with a mighty effort he gasped: "You'll find it all—on—on—"

After another spell he tried again to speak.

"Don't—sell—the—farm."

His features relaxed; there was a tremor, and the miser was dead.

The miser was scarcely beneath the sod before his children began the search for his hoarded gold. Now that he was gone, and had sought in his last hour to make reparation, they thought of him kindly. They forgot his asperities as they thought of the treasure he had left them. Now it was all theirs. It never occurred to them that the prize might elude their most careful and persistent search.

So confident were they of success, and so pleasant was the contemplation of their fortune, that Albert, the youngest, sat down with pencil and paper to figure out the amount their father had accumulated in the last thirty years.

His calculation was something like this: The farm averaged an income of at least $5,000 a year for the last five years. The next five the average would be $1,000. The next ten $1,500, and to his own knowledge the profits the last ten years had been $3,000. Fifty thousand dollars would be a fair estimate.

"O"—that was the only clew. The second story of the building was carefully gone over; then the attics, but nothing but cobwebs and accumulated dust and rubbish was found. Then the the grounds were gone over again, each time more slowly and carefully, special search being made on every eminence. But it was always with the same disappointing results.

Years passed, and the miser's gold lay secure in its hiding place. They who sought it continued hopeful, and with the exception of short intervals of rest, they had kept diligently at work.

The farm during this time had been left to take care of itself and produce whatever crop it saw fit; consequently the fertile acres were covered with a dense growth of weeds and briars. The stock had been sold off, a few at a time, until only a small number of broken-spirited horses remained with which to cultivate the patches necessity forced them to till.

As the years continued to slip away, Mrs. Furgis died. Soon Albert followed her, and the two remaining children were left alone in the large, decaying house. Harold and his sister continued to work the patches about the house, and year after year mortgage a few acres of land for money to pay taxes, not daring to sell or rent, for fear their treasure would fall in other hands than their own. Through the long years of foolish and profitless search it never occurred to them, or, if it did, was not acted on, that in the farm they had a fruitful and unfailing source of revenue.

One day early in June as Harold sat on the moss-grown stoop, gazing dreamily out on the luxuriant and tangled undergrowth, a peddler crossed the stile and labored slowly beneath a pack along the paved walk.

"Would you like to purchase a divining rod?" he asked, placing his pack on the ground. He held out a polished metal rod that flashed brightly in the sun.

"What is it for?" asked Harold, taking the rod in his hand and examining it closely.

"To find minerals; hidden treasure—gold and silver."

"How is it used?" he asked, striving to retain his curiosity.

The peddler carefully explained the manner of operating it, and again emphasized its occult power of divination.

"Have you sold many?" asked Harold.

"Not near here," returned the trader; "have just reached this section."

"Name your lowest figure for the entire lot," said Harold impatiently, "and promise not to sell any more in this county, and I'll buy them."

A bargain was struck. The peddler walked off, laughing in his sleeve over the fine sale, and Harold hurried with his purchase to his sister. Their flagging hopes and energies became again buoyant.

At all hours they could be seen, rods in hand, walking with careful step and bowed head around the plantation.

It was a strange, weird picture to see the lithe, slender woman and the tall, gaunt form of her brother as they pushed their way through the tangled bracken, their eyes rivited on the ground at their feet. Spectre-like they traversed the summit of the mound and hill, stalking through field and pasture, and crept in the silence and shadows of the woodland. It was a sad sight to see the twain at nightfall, exhausted with their ceaseless tramp, sit down sullen, dejected and disappointed to their niggerly meal in the gloom of the old house.

Intercourse with their neighbors had almost ceased, and they were startled one evening when they found themselves face to face with one of their father's old friends. The presence of any person in the house seemed almost an apparition. The visit was prompted by a kindly feeling of interest, and their visitor protested mildly but earnestly against their course. He urged them to stop their folly, refill the houses with tenants and again cultivate their farms. Herold listened respectfully, thanked his visitor for the show of good will, but asserted positively his intention of keeping up the search.

Not many days after the visit just recorded Harold, while prospecting on the top of a hill, was sure his rod gave indications of a mineral deposit. All a-tremble he tried the spot a second time. Yes, he was sure, the rod dipped to the earth. He marked the place and crept stealthily away. Seeking his sister he told her that the treasure was found. At night fall they would go forth and bring it home.

Armed with pick and shovel, they stole warily out through the darkness, casting furtive glances about them to make sure they were not watched. At last they stood above the preciuos spot. Harold pushed aside the dead leaves and grass, and began to dig away the mellow earth. Deeper and wider grew the evcavation; fainter and fainter throbbed their hopes; lower and lower waned the moon, until the delvers stood pale and faint in the gray of morn.

That evening Harold and his sister sat moodily in the room in which their father had died. They had always avoided the room, and now they wondered at their presence in it. Some strange fascination was upon them. They were growing morbidly superstitious of late. A candle sputtered on a table between them, illuminating feebly the darkness. The white covering of the bed on which the miser died loomed faintly in the shadows and looked not unlike a crouching ghost about to spring from the gloom. Harold gazed intently at the blurred drapery until the whole scene flashed on him again; he could see his father's face distorted in death agony and hear the whispered words drop from his lips. He sprang to his feet, exclaiming harshly, "On, on!" Then turning to his startled sister he asked:

"Hettie, can't you think what father would have said after 'on'? See if you can't; put your head to work. This is the point at which we should have started long ago."

After thinking, with knit brow, in silence for a spell, he began: "On, on top—On, on, on—On, upon the— On top of the— On, on what, sister? On the top of the what? We ought to guess what would come next. Oh, on"—he looked searchingly about the room—"on the—the clock," he cried, springing to his feet as his eyes stared into the face of an old, silent cuckoo clock in the corner. "It's there, Hettie; don't you remember how father stared at the clock when he was dying? Yes, we'll find some clew on the clock. I have a presentiment that our disappointing quest is at an end," he continued, nervously mounting a chair. His sister stood at his side, holding aloft the flickering candle. Harold was feeling in the dust and cobwebs when the old clock gave a groan, the cuckoo came to the door and repeated its hollow note; there was a harsh screeching, and the dilapidated timepiece tumbled in a heap. There was a shriek; the candle fell sputtering to the floor, and the two ran like guilty things from the room. They stood in the empty hall for a moment, panting with fright and peering furtively into the dark; then hastened to their apartments.

Morning was stealing gray and shadowy through the quiet old building when Harold stole down the stairway to where lay scattered the wreck of the old clock. He searched amid the debris, and brought to light a bit of yellow, time-stained paper. He brushed the dust from it and read, in a cramped handwriting, the words, "To my wife."

At last. There was no hurry now. Harold was perfectly calm as he pushed the paper in his pocket and stepped to the stairway to call his sister. She came down presently, her heart all a-flutter with agitation.

"Harold, have you found it?" she asked, huskily.

He bowed his head, and the glow of triumphant satisfaction on his face was pitiful. He led his sister gently along the hall to the old rotting stoop. Here they sat down in the crimsom glow of sunrise and Harold opened the paper an read:

"DEAR WIFE—In trying to atone for one sin I have been guilty of another—perhaps a greater. But, when you know all, I am sure you will forgive me. I will be brief. When a child I was left an orphan. A wealthy and childless couple adopted me. I was reared in luxury, and when I was old enough I was sent off to college. While there made the acquaintance of some dissipated young men, and soon learned to drink and gamble. It was not long until I was deeply involved in debt—debts of honor, as they were called. I was ashamed to ask my foster-father for the large sums I needed, but being threatened with exposure I promised to satisfy my creditors on my return from my vacation, if they would wait.

"Banks were not as common then as now, and I had learned that my father kept his money in an iron box in the study. His keys he always carried with him. The night before I was to return to school I stole to his room and secured them. I had intended to take only a su[illegible] sum to pay my debts, but wh[illegible] chest with its treasure lay open before my eyes a wicked impulse overmatched me, and I decided that it all should be mine. I packed the money in my portmanteau, locked the box, fastened the study door, returned the keys to my father's pocket, and, returning to my room, waited impatiently the coming of day. It chanced the following morning, it being a busy season, that a servant could not be spared to drive me over to the railroad. I was to go over alone and the team sent for later.

"There was a swollen stream on my route, and as I drove in sight a scheme occurred to me that I had not thought of. I stopped the buggy at the water's edge, and, lifting my grips to the roadside, cast the reins over the dashboard, and then gave the horse a cutting lash. They plunged with a bound into the muddy water. I watched them until they reached the further shore, and then concealed myself in the woods. They would think me drowned and mourn me as dead.

"That night I walked to a distant station and took a train for the West. After years of wandering, ever stung with remorse, I came to this place and opened my farm. I resolved to make what restitution was possible, the larger part of my ill-gotten wealth by this time having been squandered. So scant was the living that I took from my farm I soon became known as Miser Furgis. I was glad, for it made me more secure in my purpose and my concealment. I sent the proceeds of each year's crop to the widow of my foster-father, for he had died soon after my flight. I have, at last, returned every dollar of the stolen money, and the farm, free from incumbrance, is yours. This is my story. I need not speak of the remorse, the fear, the suppressed love that I have felt all the sad years. Forgive me, and think of me as your loving husband, J. H. Furgis."

The paper fell fluttering to the steps. A breath of air caught and whirled it out over the tangled weeds. Harold gazed for a moment toward the sunrise that flared red above the treetops, then his head sank to his knees and a groan burst from his lips. His sister was weeping silently, her head on his arm. Motionless, silent they sat for miuntes, then Hettie, looking up through her tears, said softly: "Brother, I never dreamed that it would be like this."

There was no answer. He rose and staggered into the shadow of the doorway.

For weeks there was not a sign of life about the old ruins. But one bright morning Harold came forth a new man, and went energetically to work. Now the tenant houses are occupied, the farm "blossoms as the rose," and a handsome modern structure crowns the eminence.

Harold and Hettie found where their treasure lay hid.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

How Worry Affects the Brain.

Modern science has brought to light nothing more curiously interesting than the fact that worry will kill. More remarkable still, it has been able to determine, from recent discoveries, just how worry does kill.

It is believed by many scientists who have followed most carefully the growth of the science of brain diseases that scores of deaths that are set down to other causes are due to worry, and that alone. The theory is a simple one—so simple that any one can readily understand it. Briefly put, it amounts to this: Worry injures beyond repair certain cells of the brain, and the brain being the nutritive centre of the body, the other organs become gradually injured, and when some disease of these organs, or a combination of them, arises, death finally ensues.

Thus does worry kill. Insidiously like many another disease, it creeps upon the brain in the form of a single constant, never-lost idea, and, as the dropping of water over a period of years will wear a groove in a stone, so does worry gradually, imperceptibly, but no less surely, destroy the brain cells that lead all the rest—that are, so to speak, the commanding officers of mental power, health and motion.

Worry, to make the theory still stronger, is an irritant at certain points, which produces little harm if it comes at intervals or irregularly. Occasional worrying of the system the brain can cope with, but the iteration and reiteration of one idea of a disquieting sort the cells of the brain are not proof against. It is as if the skull were laid bare and the surface of the brain struck lightly with a hammer every few seconds, with mechanical precision, with never a sign of let-up or the failure of a stroke.

Just in this way does the annoying idea, the maddening thought that will not be done away with, strike or fall upon certain nerve cells, never ceasing and week by week diminishing the vitality of these delicate organisms that are so minute that they can only be seen under the microscope.—Pharmaceutical Products.

A Model Railway For Practice.

An education model railway, copying accurately the working details of the London & Northwestern railway, has been built in London for Mr. Percy H. Leigh, of Worsley, Manchester, who intends mounting it on trestles in a specially built hall in his home. The main line has a double track 90 feet long, with sidings of 50 feet, also double. The track is of six-inch guage with double-headed steel rails, cast iron chairs, and a couple of turn tables; and the sidings are fitted with suitable switches, points, locking bars, signals, etc. The signal boxes have 14, 8 and 6 levers respectively. There are two stations, with the usual waiting rooms, ticket offices, etc; a foot bridge for passengers, and a bridge for carrying a road over the line; and even a cutting and a tunnel. The rolling stock, made to scale, consists of a passenger and freight train, each with the different styles of cars now in use. Brakes, buffers, couplings, grease boxes, etc., are all exact models, and even bolts, springs, etc., are perfectly represented, while the curves of the road have the outer rails at the correct elevations, with extra rails where they would be considered necessary. The locomotive, a modern four-coupled engine with a leading bogie, has reversing gear, whistle, water guage, etc., precisely as in the original.

The Crystal Palace at Sydenham, England, will hold 100,000 people.

DR. HOUGHTON TO RETIRE.

Pastor of a Famous Church to Give Way to His Nephew.

Few religious edifices in the country are better known than "the little church around the corner," technically called the Church of the Transfiguration, located on East Twenty-ninth street, between Fifth and Madison avenues, New York. For forty-seven years Rev. Dr. George H. Houghton has been rector, and now, old age and faithful service giving him full title to rest, he is about to retire. His favorite nephew, bearing the same name as himself, and at present pastor of Trinity Episcopal

REV. DR. HOUGHTON.

Church, Hoboken, will succeed him. The little church around the corner is especially associated with actors and actresses, for it is there that the members of that profession have been married and it is from there that they have been buried. It all came about in this way: Joseph Holland, an English actor and the father of Joseph and E. M. Holland, actors of the present generation, died twenty-six years ago in New York City, and Joseph Jefferson took charge of the funeral arrangements. He went, accompanied by a son of the dead actor, to a church that then stood at Madison avenue and Twenty-eighth street, and asked the pastor to conduct the services.

"THE LITTLE CHURCH AROUND THE CORNER."

"No," said the minister. "I can't have an actor's funeral in my church. My congregation would not like it. But there is a little church around the corner where they do such things."

Mr. Jefferson was amazed. Then he exclaimed, "God bless the little church around the corner!" and from that church the funeral of Joseph Holland was held. The "little church around the corner" it has been ever since, and to every actor there is a veritable magic in the name.

OLDEST LIVING TWINS.

Eighty-two Years of Age and Remarkable in Many Other Respects.

Harrison County, Missouri, claims to be the home of the oldest living twins. They are Col. H. O. Nevill, of Ridgeway, and Col. J. M. Nevill, of Blythesdale, and are remarkable in more ways than in being twins. They were born in Barron County, Kentucky, June 25, 1815, and are, therefore, 82 years old. They married sisters, Rhoda and Lily

J. M. NEVILL. H. O. NEVILL.

Ann Brooks, both of whom are deceased. In 1850 they moved to Harrison County, Missouri, settling upon farms near where Blythesdale now stands.

At that time of life they were handsome, distinguished looking men, and so much alike that strangers could not tell one from the other. They have always exerted a marked influence on the affairs of Harrison County. Both have served as judges of the County Court, and both served in the State Legislature, Henry O., from 1854 to 1856, and James M. from 1858 to 1860, and from 1880 to 1882. On the breaking out of the civil war both went into the service of the Union as captains and came out colonels. Each raised a family of seven children, all of them being now living except two, and each has a large number of grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

The old veterans still retain vigorous minds and, considering their age, are far above the average in physical strength and endurance, which fact they ascribe to having inherited splendid constitutions and to having lived temperate lives.

Let Brides Promise to "Obey."

"If a girl shrinks from the word 'obey,' or hesitates to speak it at the altar, it will be better that she shall never approach the hour of her marriage," writes Edward W. Bok in the Ladies' Home Journal, in reply to inquiries from two girls if they should insist upon the word "obey" being omitted from their marriage ceremony. "Either she is doubtful of her own love or distrusts the heart of her lover. And in either case her marriage will be a sin in the eyes of God. Where marriage is a union of true love—and marriage should be naught but that—the question of 'obey' is not thought of; it does not enter the mind of the girl. One thought alone is uppermost and supreme: the union of two loving hearts, each filled with the thought of the other—both to be united in one complete whole. That is marriage, and that alone. Let non-essentials enter it, and the holiest state into which man and woman can enter this side of Heaven becomes a wrong, an irreparable sin.

"Shall these two girls, then, and all other girls with their faces turned toward the altar of marriage during these weeks to come, say, 'obey?' Yes, a thousand times yes. And as they say it to the men of their hearts, so will the men, in turn, promise to love them as wives, 'even as Christ loved the Church' which unites them, 'and gave Himself for it.' No woman has ever found it difficult to obey the husband who loves her as only a true man can love one woman in a universe. She does not find the little word coming up in her married life to make her regret its utterance. On the contrary, she never thinks of it, except to be thankful that she did not shrink from it. The state of matrimony is not a state of demand on the part of the husband, nor of obedience on the part of the wife. It is a perfect state that lifts two people higher, a state where love is masterful and supreme."

Pushing One Thing.

"A shoemaker makes a good shoe because he makes nothing else," says Emerson, and the idea may be taken up with advantage in almost any line of business. A merchant tailor in a town of 60,000 population made some cassocks for a few local priests. Now he is advertising himself in the Catholic papers and by circulars to the clergy of that church as a "cassock-maker," and sends hundreds of these garments all over the United States, and is kept busy the year round. At home he is simply a merchant tailor, doing a good business, while his out-of-town customers know him only as a man whose particular business is making cassocks, and who, making a specialty of this feature, is enabled to supply a better cassock and at a lower price than they can get elsewhere.—Printers' Ink.

GLUES DOWN HIS GIFT.

Pastes a Dollar on the Collection Plate Every Sunday.

Virgil Richard Jaeger is the name of an eccentric, mild-mannered old man, who in the last two years has caused a great deal of trouble to the authorities of Trinity chapel, West 25th street, New York. Every Sunday in the period named he has appeared in his seat at morning service and has pasted a dollar bill in the middle of the wooden collection plate. He sits in the front row, and his offering is the first to be taken up. He has the bill ready. The under side is covered with a resinous substance which adheres like glue and has the odor of turpentine. He deposits the bill flat, gives it a parting pat to fasten it firmly, and fixes his eyes upon the Caen stone reredos. The mucilage is always fresh.

PASTES A DOLLAR ON THE PLATE.

Mr. Jaeger, who is a printer and about 60 years old, is tall and slender. He comes to church every Sunday morning attired in a long coat, with white necktie, silk hat, kid gloves and an air of gentle solemnity. He takes his place in a calm and dignified manner. He reads the responses, shows a passing interest in the hymns, and after the sermon he draws that bill from beneath the folds of his coat, apparently, and deposits it with patient care. For a long time the church people were unable to learn where he kept the glue with which he stuck the bill. At length it was discovered that the "stickum" was concealed in his hat, which also held a tiny brush used in laying on the stuff. The old gentleman is evidently a harmless member of the large army of cranks.

LOST IN PLAY, WON IN LOVE.

One Romantic International Wedding Which Turned Out Happily.

When Miss Florence Garner, of New York, married Sir William Gordon Cumming, the central figure (and in the opinion of many the victim) of the Tranby Croft baccarat scandal, her friends were almost unanimous in the belief that she had thrown away her happiness. Subsequent events have proved that she was right and they wrong. No happier couple lives in Europe than Sir William and Lady Cumming, who pass most of their time on the Scottish estate which has for centuries belonged to the family of the former. When yet a child Miss Garner was left an orphan, her father, Commodore Garner, of the New York Yacht Club, her mother and several other society people having drowned off Staten Island by the capsizing of a yacht. This was in 1876. Florence grew up a bright and pretty girl, and about seven years ago, while traveling in Europe, met Sir William Gordon Cumming. Sir William was at the height of his popularity. He was the bosom friend of the Prince of Wales and was considered in London to be rather "the mold of form."

LADY GORDON CUMMING AND HER CHILDREN.

He proposed to Miss Garner and was accepted. Then came the Tranby Croft episode and the virtual conviction of Sir William of cheating at cards. Feeling himself a disgraced man, he wrote to Miss Garner, who was then at Pau, in the Pyrenees, releasing her from her engagement. Her reply was to hurry to London, declare her belief in the innocence of Sir William and marry him.

informed. The fort and watch tower in this instance are near Marianao and the garrison of Spanish soldiers is a strong and sturdy one. The fort itself is built simply of planks and has the appearance of a structure which would not offer much resistance to a determined body of men. The watch tower top resembles part of a Chinese pagoda and any sudden move on that part of the garrison stationed there is liable to be followed by a tumble to the ground, as no railing protects the sentry. These forts are to be found all through Cuba.

Toothsome Sandwiches of Peanuts.

Peanut sandwiches are usually made from grated peanuts. Have the peanuts thoroughly roasted, and grate them on an ordinary grater. Cut the end from a square loaf of bread, butter the loaf, then cut off thin slices, and so continue until you have the desired quantity. Spread over a thick layer of the grated peanuts. Put two slices together, trim off the crusts and cut the slices into fancy shapes—either rounds, crescents, triangles or squares. Or you may buy for these a peanut butter.—Ladies' Home Journal.

IT'S A BOY.

Born Thurday to the Wife of the Ex-President.

At noon yesterday in the white mansion at Princeton, came a baby boy to Grover and Mrs. Cleveland.

The infant heir has blue eyes, hair that is like a mist and lungs that make his cries resound till his sister Marion rolls her eyes in amazement. He is strong and the nurse whispers, although she knows very well that it is not a very dignified thing to say, that he weighs twelve pounds.

There is little else to say, since in him the father and mother have in him their fondest wish realized. Mrs. Cleveland, in preparing the swaddling clothes, had bought only pink ribbons and shaken her head with charming confidence when her friends had offered blue ribbons, that are for girl babies always.

The family now consists of four: Ruth was born Oct. 3, '91; Esther was born in the White house, Oct. '93; Marion was born July 7, '95, and at last a boy Grover Jr. Oct. 28 '97.

EXPENSIVE QUAIL.

Butler Record

Last Saturday a flock of quails lit in T. J. Knisely's yard and Ora Knisely, Clark Brown and Chas. Capp shot some of them with a target rifle. It is said that Will Morgan reported it to Frank Brink, the deputy prosecutor, at least the boys were arrested and it cost Knisely over $8.00 and the others $2.00 a piece to get out of it. The boys did no more than almost any one else would have done, under the circumstances and although we hear considerable joking about them after, we have heard no favorable comments on the prosecution of such an offense. Most people are pleased at the way two of them were able to get out without much expense.

RAILWAY HOLD-UP.

An Auburn Man on the Train, But He Escaped.

THAT was a new experience of Will Kessler when he came near getting held up last night. He was on a train that left St. Louis at eight o'clock and about twenty miles out, three men held up and robbed a man right across the aisle from him, of $28. There was a struggle and some Italians in the car rushed up with drawn revolvers and made the robbers stop. But they jumped off the moving train and escaped with their booty. Will does not know whether they had intended to go through all the passengers or not.

—James Provines made the COURIER his regular business visit Monday. We are glad to hear he is beginning to see his way through the financial trouble he suffered in his experience in the windmill business. He is not the kind of man who would lay down under a reverse of that kind.

COURT.

Today, Monday, was the day set to begin the McIntosh trial. Judge Adair, who is to try the case, came in on the early train from Columbia City, and was ready to begin as soon as the prosecutor reached here on the forenoon train. Judge Best, who is to assist Judge McClellan in the defense reached here Thursday evening from his home at Minneapolis.

They have been arguing law points so far. The new prosecutor, Mr. Rhodes, is now at work, and is assisted in this case by Best & Bratton of Angola. Judge McBride came up from Indianapolis today to press the claim of Miss Nettie Chamberlain to recover money she paid for some of those bad orders. Borst, Dills and Sawvel are expected here Tuesday evening.

Monday's Daily.

There were difficult points to settle on Monday, and it was not till toward evening, that the work of choosing a jury was begun. It appears that the indictment, or rather "information" against Mr. McIntosh included several different charges. One was conspiring with Borst Sawvel, Dills, Coffinberry and the two Fairs, to defraud the county out of $50,000. Another was charging him with having sold Edward Orr an order of $73; another point charged him with selling Miss Nettie Chamberlain, orders amounting to $303, and that the orders sold to both, were among those forged by the above named persons. a part of whom are now serving sentences in Michigan City.

Mr. McIntosh's attorneys contended that the trial must be confined to one of these points, but that they were willing to go to trial on any one of them. The prosecution, however, claimed that all these various counts were in reality only branches of the same offense, and must be kept together.

But at last, the Judge took the matter under advisement and when the court met at 2 Tuesday afternoon, he could decide it, and let them know whether they must use only one point or several.

Toward evening they began to select a jury. A number of extra men had been drawn from various parts of the county and as fast as one was objected off, these new men would be called up. When six o'clock came there were only four of the new men left. They were ordered to report at 1:30 p. m. to day, and then court was adjourned to that hour, as the Judge had to go home on some business that had arisen there. This afternoon they are still working to get a jury.

FOUND HIS WATCH.

It will be remembered that last June, sometime, a tramp stole John Pyle's watch, out east of town. The tramp was arrested and brought to town, but the watch was not found. Had it been found on his person, he would likely have been punished by going to the pen. But in the absence of any evidence, he was let off on a promise to "go west and grow up with the country." But he did not go west. On the contrary, he went east, and was seen by Mr. Apple and others, and it is believed he was looking to find the watch he had thrown away. But he did not get it, for last Friday, Wm. Kruse, who works on the section of the Wabash that passes where the arrest was made, found the watch lying in the grass safe and sound, where the fellow had thrown it nearly five months ago. It is a heavy silver watch that Mr. Pyle had bought of Dave Hodge and as it is a good piece he prizes it highly. All it needed was winding up, and away it went ticking as lively as ever. Mr. Pyle is greatly pleased to recover it, and is grateful to Mr. Kruse for his honesty in turning it over at once to the rightful owner.

HALLOWE'EN PARTIES.

The usual custom of celebratin Halowe'en was observed in Auburn Saturday night. Besides the tricks played by smart boys there were numerous parties.

The Degree of Honor ladies had an interesting time at their hall to which quite a number of guests had been invited. They had the rooms decorated with cabbage leaves and cranberries. A luncheon of coffee and fried cakes was served to all.

As announced some time ago Miss Lizzie Snell had sent out invitations to a masked party. Accordingly a large number of her little friends gathered at the beautiful home of her mother on South Main-st. The evening was spent in playing various games. The masks of many were quite unique. Brad Ralston represented the tramp which was Side Tracked, and played the farce to perfection. Hubert Hartman was dressed as a girl, and so complete was the make up that he was not recognized till the masks were removed. Then the girls suddenly remembered that this girl had been sitting on their laps and they on his. It caused a good deal of merriment. Then a dainty lunch was served which consisted of more than the ordinary. It was prepared by Mrs. Snell and her daughters Mary and Mrs. Draggoo. Those in the party were:

REV. JONES INJURED.

Rev. R. C. Jones pastor of the M. E. church at Leo, met with and accident which will prevent him from lecturing at the Junction Tuesday evening. The particular are as follows says the Fort Wayne Sunday Journal:

The Rev. R. C. Jones, pastor of the Methodist church at Leo, was run over and seriously injured, at the corner of Berry and Harrison streets, yesterday afternoon. He was crossing the street when a young man came by on a bicycle, and he jumped aside to escape being run down. His attention was fastened on the bicyclist, and he failed to see Mr. Charles Pape's buggy approching from the opposite direction, the pole of the carriage striking him in the center of the back, and he rolled under the horses' feet. He was extricated, and carried into the residence of C. C. Cissel, and Dr. Jacob Hetrick was called in. Mr. Jones suffered much pain, and it is feared his injuries will have permanent ill effects. There are symptoms of spinal injuries, due to the blow on the back from the carriage pole. The wrist and arm were badly bruised, and the bones of the wrist were fractured.

AT LOGANSPORT.

While at Logansport yesterday, we enjoyed the hospitality of Obe Cool's family and found them all well, and prospering. They had just moved into an elegant new home, provided with all the modern comforts and conveniences, including natural gas for heating and cooking. Mrs. Cool is well, and Vina speaks affectionately of Auburn and her young friends here. Sidney helps in the factory and is a full grown, tall, business-like young man. Frank is in school and, doing well. We learn from Mr. Cool that the carriage business has been very good this year, especially the last part of the season. But of course it begins to fall off now, as the season draws to a close. At their factory we met John Leasure, who is employed there. He says Mrs. Leasure will begin the practice of medicine again, on Monday, Nov. 1, and that the outlook for business is excellent. W. H. WcQuiston is also there being the bookkeeper. But Mrs. McQuiston is at the Sanitarium near Larwill, where she is receiving treatment. She has not improved very much in health of late, if any, and in hope that she might be helped, she went to Larwill. She has been there about three weeks, and thinks that so far, the treatment has benefited her considerably. He has many friends in Auburn who hope that this may prove lasting.

While passing through Peru yesterday, we noticed near the Wabash track just at the west edge of the city, hundreds of derricks where they are boring for oil, or have bored and got oil. It is an exciting and busy scene. It is surpsising how thickly they are put down. On some parts of the ground they will be put a few feet apart, and two or three are liable to be seen on one town lot. It looks as if it was putting them in so thick that they would exhaust the Trenton rock shortly. But Peru is having a boom, that will certainly last as long as the oil wells keep up their flow.

Wheat along the line looks about as in DeKalb county. Some fields on deep soil look well, some have spots of hard clay showing bare, and other fields were sown so late they are just starting to come up.

AN AUBURN ROMANCE.

Brothers Find the Sister of Whom They Had Not Heard for Sixteen Years

About sixteen years, ago, while living at their home in Lorain county Ohio, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Sheehan adopted as their own, a little babe only ten months old, named Florence Bessie Fishburn. Her parents had both died about the same time, the mother on Saturday and the father the next day, and both were buried in the same grave. The little one of course, took the name of her adopted parents, and has always been known, as she still is, as Bessie Sheehan. Mr. and Mrs. Sheehan agreed to keep her, without any expense to her own people or the estate of her father, and this they have done. She was the youngest of four children the other three being boys, Albert, now in Nevada, and Joseph and Charles, who still live in Lorain county. A number of years ago, Mr. and Mrs. Sheehan moved away from that part of Ohio, and finally came to live in Auburn, the adopted daughter being with them.

Mr. Sheehan, as our people will remember, died about four years ago, and Mrs. Sheehan is now married to Henry Dice, their home being still in the west part of town. The little girl is now almost a woman, being nearly sixteen and till a short time ago, she had supposed that Mr. and Mrs. Sheehan, were her parents. Recently, her adopted mother thought best to let her know the exact relationship and did so. But now comes the strangest part of the story.

The relatives in Lorain county had lost track of Mr. and Mrs. Sheehan, and lately began to make inquiries, not only for the sake of lost sister, but to enable her guardian to settle with her as to her share of the property, when she came of age. After several fruitless attempts, they heard that Sheehan had moved to Auburn, and so wrote to the postmaster here, but received no answer. A week or two ago, the two brothers in Ohio, took their wheels and came to Defiance Co., to see a cousin, James Turney, who resides at Adams Ridge. After spending a few days there, all three concluded to ride over to Auburn on their wheels to see if they could find the lost sister. They reached here last Thursday evening, and soon found where the family lived. They called at the home and asked if such a girl lived there, saying they were her brothers. Mrs. Dice was afraid they were tramps and were taking this way to get into the house, and would not let them in. Then the cousin stepped on the porch and told her he understood that "Florence" lived with them. This showed Mrs. Dice, that they were what they claimed to be, and she called the girl. The cousin introduced her brothers to her and the family, and there was a happy meeting. The girl and her brothers shed tears and were greatly affected. The three men staid nearly a week, going home yesterday, Tuesday. They told her of her people there, and how they had lost track of her till now. A piece of good news was, that her share of the estate, $1300 had been put at interest, and by the time she comes of age, she will have something like $3,000. They asked if she wished to go home and live with them but she would not consent, saying she greatly preferred to line with the people who had reared her. and at the only home she had ever known. Bessie Sheehan, as she is called, is a happier girl for this visit and the brothers are also. There is even completeness of a happy ending and a bright future mixed in with home romance of an Auburn girl. We wish Bessie a continuation of her good fortune. And Mrs. Sheehan, now Mrs. Dice, should have a good word in connection with it, as she has evidently been a good mother to the little orphan.

WEDDED.

A very pretty wedding occurred at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Florence Buchanan last Sabbath, which united their daughter Mattie to Prof. John E. Sturgis, of Grand Rapids, Mich. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Lenhart, of St. Joe. There were a number of valuable presents given by friends who attended and also a number sent by friends in Michigan and Colorado. Those present from Auburn were:—W. B. Brown and wife, Mrs. W E. Rush, Mrs. Frank Rush, H. L. Brown and lady and Frank Ashelman and Miss Gay Simons.

Mr. and Mrs. Sturgis will make Auburn their home.

The Union Paci ic Sold.

The main line of the Union Pacific railroad was sold Monday under a mortgage sale on the claim of the United States for money advanced to build the road. There was but one bid and that was made by the present owners and managers of the road, and and covered the full amount of the government's claim, which was $57,-564,932.76. There is part of another branch to be sold, but the government will likely lose something on this, as their claim covers only about half the length of the line.

—Charles McClellan, B. C. Robbins and Ed. Robbins, returned last evening from their trip down the Wabash road looking for hoop timber. They got off at Roann and looked over the country from there, at various points, and got on the evening train for home from North Manchester. They had their wheels and passed through locations that showed up considerable desirable timber. It is also said that Mr. Greenler talks of moving his Defiance hoop factory away from that place, and may locate at one of the eligible places down the Wabash, and we presume the trip yesterday had in view the examination of places for the proposed new location

—The Times-Herald, a strong gold standard paper, is out in and able article saying we ought to have more gold and silver in circulation. It complains that our 696 millions in gold, is but little used, and of our 635 millions of silver only a part is in circulation. But it don't give any very good plan of getting this money into circulation. And it is one of those papers that believes that raising the rate of tariff taxes is about all we need to make times good. And good times means more money in use by business men and the people at large. We are glad to see the Times-Herald getting even partly awake to the fact that we can use more money than we are using.

OBITUARY.

Sarah Margaret Donaldson, wife of C. C. Walter was born in Wayne, Co., Ohio. Sept. 6, 1839, and died at her home in Auburn Sunday morning, Oct. 24, 1897. aged 58 years, 1 month and 18 days. She had been in failing health for some time, but her death was rather sudden and unexpected by the family. She came to DeKalb Co., in Aug. 1861, to visit relatives where she became acquainted with Cyrus C. Walter of DeKalb Co. Ind., to whom she was married April, 10, 1862. To this union were born 5 children, 4 sons and 1 daughter; C. B., J. H., M. L., wife of F. R. Dills, C. F. and F. E. Walter all of whom survive her and were with her in her last moments. She united with the Christian church at Coburntown, DeKalb Co. Ind. in Oct. 1892, and remained a faithful member until her death. FOUND THE LOAD

Which so Badly Mangled John Clark's Leg.

This forenoon John Clark, who it will be remembered, was accidentally shot through the leg at Hamilton, and who is still confined to his bed, made a discovery which pleases him now, to say the least. He was looking over his overcoat, and near the bottom under the pocket is a hole made by the load from the shotgun after it had passed through his leg. This he was carefully examining and to his surprise found the entire charge of the gun lodged in the lining. The wadding and shot were stuck together with a mass of cloth and blood. While in the boat Mr. Clark was sitting on his overcoat, but one corner projected over the seat and hanging down. As there was nothing solid for it to come up against, and the speed checked by passing through his leg the load lodged in the lining of his overcoat. It also seems queer that the shot was not lost when Mr. Clark was brought home as his overcoat was frequently handled and kept covered over him.

Now that he has found the shot and wadding he will prize it highly as a part of the instrument which wounded him. He is rapidly improving though small pieces of cloth are still being taken from the wound.

The highest velocity ever given to a cannon ball is estimated at 1,626 feet per second, being equal to a mile in 3-2 seconds. The velocity of the earth at the equator, due to its rotation on its axis, is 1,000 miles per hour, or a mile in 3-6 seconds; therefore, if a cannon ball were fired due west, and could maintain its initial velocity, it would beat the sun in its apparent journey round the earth.

The stories of the magnetic mountains which exert an attraction on all vessels coming near them are not without foundation in fact. The island of Bornholm, in the Baltic, may be regarded as a huge magnet. Although the power of attraction is not so great as to draw nails and bolts out of approaching ships, the magnetism works a good deal of damage, in that it deflects the needle of the compass so that it cannot be depended upon. The effect is perceptible at a distance of nine and a half miles.

Fortunes from Fractions.

There have been in recent years several instances of sudden wealth. South Africa and Cripple Creek have produced millionaires over night, and a bicycle and patent medicine promoter in England made $10,000,000 in as many weeks. There are several thousand people who are each worth a million of dollars or more, and there are several more thousand who are on the road to become millionaires. Most of these are persons who are getting their riches on small fractions of a cent. The street railway kings who are rising to millions and tens of millions are fully satisfied with a part of 1 cent of the nickel they collect, because there are so many of them.

The sugar kings have reduced the price and improved the quality of sugar, but as long as they get their fraction on each pound the Americans buy they can make all the way from 20 to 30 per cent. The coal oil monopoly has also reduced the price and improved the product, but its little fraction makes the greatest money-making enterprise in America. The man who invented the patent beer stopper is getting a bigger income than the President of the United States. A cheap headache remedy is allowing its proprietor to spend $100,000 a year, and still lay up another $100,000 for a rainy day. The first thing is to get control of some article of universal use, and the small fraction will do the rest.—Leslie's Weekly.

POSTAGE STAMPS.

Sensational Prices Given for Rare Stamps.

Thousands of people, young and old, now find pleasure and profit in stamp collecting—a pursuit which extends year by year, the price of genuine specimens of early stamps rising continually with the demand. There are now about fifty dealers in stamps in London alone, and the collector may be found everywhere. One dealer (W. J. Palmer, of the Strand) estimates the value of his stock at over £60,000; and last year he sold upward of a hundred thousand stamps, while he examined from five to ten thousand every day. The varied uses to which stamps are put may be judged from the fact that a customer bought 20,000,000 of the commoner sorts for papering walls of houses and public buildings. It is estimated that there are 500,000 stamp collectors in the United States, the C. H. Mekeel Stamp and Publishing Company, of St. Louis, employing alone about 130 persons in the conduct of a very large business. Sensational prices are given for rare stamps. American local varieties bring from £250 to £500; one of Livingston, Ala., has sold for £140. One of the ten specimens of the Brattleboro stamp has sold for £250; the 20-cent St. Louis (1845) for about £500; a pair of post-office, Mauritius, are worth £600 (two have been sold for £870), and a set of the five British Guiana first issue of 1850 will fetch £1,000. An unused Transvaal stamp with error ("Transoral") has sold for £50. One of the most valuable English stamps is the 9-penny straw-colored Queen's head, with hairline of 1862, which is worth £30.

Among valuable collections is that of Ferrari, of Paris, which is said to be worth £250,000. That of the Duke of York is worth between £30,000 and £40,000; Rothschild's about £100,000, and that of the late Czar of Russia £150,000. The collection which Mr. Tapling left to the British Museum was worth £70,000. There are now collections in the Berlin Imperial Museum; also at Amsterdam, Vienna and Dresden.

The Potato's Anniversary.

The present year is the three hundredth anniversary of the planting of the potato in England. When the seed was brought over from America by Sir Walter Raleigh in 1597 it was planted in the garden of Gerard, the botanist, The English people were at first unwilling to eat the new vegetable, thinking that it might contain poison. When the queen set the example by having it continually on her table it became quite a popular article of food, and to show their appreciation of it many dandies of the period carried the potato blossom in their buttonholes. For over two hundred years the potato was restricted to the tables of the higher classes, and it is only within the last century that its use has become general.

The Irish potato is now imported to this country for special uses, and some think that it is the only potato which is suitable for baking in its jacket. In appearance only, however, it differs from our American varieties.—Harper's Round Table.

Bears Five Kinds of Fruit.

At Napa, Cal., in the orchards of Rev. Richard Wylie, there is a peach tree which produces five different kinds of fruit, namely, almonds, plums and three different kinds of peaches. This result was obtained by Mr. Wylie grafting on his peach tree different varieties of stone fruit. A cherry tree belonging to a farmer in Herefordshire, England, yields four different kinds of fruit, owing to his having grafted on the cherry a pear, an apple and a plum. A Naples orange grower grafted a lemon on one of his trees, and now gathers from the same tree both oranges and lemons. The Khatta orange tree, which grows in upper India, produces two different kinds of oranges—first the ordinary smooth-skinned oranges, ripe at the end of the dry season, and then an after-crop of warted oranges, ripe soon after the beginning of the rains.—New York Evening Journal.

Mouse Rode the Wheel.

Just fancy a mouse with the bicycle face. Yet that such a thing is not only impossible, but an actual fact, the following story shows: A woman used to keep her bicycle in a cellar, hung from the ceiling by ropes. One night a mouse ran down the ropes on an exploring expedition, and presently landed on the front wheel. His weight caused it to revolve, and the harder he strove to clamber up to the top of the wheel the faster it went round. In the morning when a servant entered the cellar a gaunt, gray animal, with haggard eyes and despair engraved on every feature, was found still making strenuous efforts to attain its object. The wheel was still spinning, and the cyclometer marked twenty-eight miles. It was probably very little comfort to the little beast that it had made a record—for mice.

She Repeated.

The following is a case to which the word "disillusion" might well be applied. We find the story in an exchange:

Not long ago a servant living in Derbyshire gave notice of her intention to leave, informing her mistress that she was about to be married.

As the time drew near, she addressed her mistress thus:

"Please, mum, have you got a girl yet?"

"No, Bridget; why do you ask?"

"Because if you haven't I should like to stay."

"What? I thought you were going to marry the chimney-sweep!"

"Oh yes, ma'am," replied Bridget, hesitatingly; "but when I saw him with his face washed, I felt I couldn't love him."

The Germans have adopted a new gun for their field artillery. It is of nickel steel, and fires a shrapnel shell five miles. It can shoot fifteen shells a minute.

Politics of the Day

GENERAL PROSPERITY.

During all the flurry over the high price of wheat, and amid all the Republican shouting over the return of prosperity, no word was uttered about the condition of cotton, and cotton used to be king.

General prosperity is what the people want, and general prosperity is what the Republican orators promised the people during the last Presidential campaign. After McKinley's election there was a more or less patient period of waiting for the return of prosperity. For six months the people waited and then for six months, through the aid of famine in India and short crops abroad, wheat went to a dollar a bushel, and the Republican press went crazy over the "return of prosperity."

But wheat has dropped and cotton has never risen. Recently this great staple of the South reached the lowest price on record in London, six and a third cents per pound. There is something wrong with the prosperity that affects but one of the great agricultural products of the United States. The planters of the South are anxious to know why Hanna and McKinley and Dingley do not send a little of their vaunted prosperity below Mason and Dixon's line. They consider such neglect rank favoritism.

But the farmers of the North are beginning to inquire when the great Republican party will send them good prices for corn and oats. These products linger at a beggarly price, and even wheat at 75 cents a bushel on the farm cannot convince the agriculturists that the promises of the spellbinders are being redeemed.

The explanation of the whole matter is that the appreciating price of gold, the money which measures the value of all products, makes a constantly depreciating price for those products. Corn and oats and cotton and everything but wheat are suffering from this injustice this year, just as they have suffered in other years, and wheat has escaped the infliction because of special conditions existing abroad over which the Republican party had not and could not have the slightest control.—Chicago Dispatch.

Taxing the Plain People.

The widespread injury inflicted by the Dingley tariff in the single instance of the sugar trust steal is not yet fully appreciated by the people.

England is the great center of the fruit-canning industry, because there is no government-protected sugar trust there. In the United States taxes are levied on sugar, glass and tin, the result being that millions of bushels of fruit, grown by the farmers of this country, lie rotting on the ground, while the people of the United States eat imported preserves, jams and jellies, and send the money to pay for them across the sea to England.

The sugar interest in the United States needs no protection, and every cent of tax levied to foster this trust comes out of the pockets of the people. In discussing this phase of the question Byron W. Holt, an expert in regard to tariff, says: "When you invest a dollar for sugar you pay about 55 cents for sugar and 45 cents for tariff.

"At present, out of this tax of 45 cents the government is getting about 20 cents, the refiners' monopoly 20 cents, and the sugar growers and wholesale grocers the remaining 5 cents. Next year, when refined is made from raw sugar upon which present duties have been paid, the government will get about 25 cents and the sugar trust 15 of the 45 cents."

The result of all this is that the sugar trust secures a bonus of $30,000,000, which is just that much added to the burden of taxes placed upon the people, and out of which they secure not the slightest benefit. Republican legislation inflicts the greatest injury upon the masses, and, recognizing this fact, the people should exercise their power and sweep the Republican party out of existence.

Logic of the Gold Clique.

Republicans rejoice over the discovery of gold in the Klondike, and talk about the vast benefit the increase in the currency from ten to fifteen million dollars a year will produce.

These astute logicians fail to recognize the fact that in making these statements they admit in full the contentions of bimetallists. If, in a small degree, prosperity is brought about by this insignificant increase in the supply of money, would not the benefits be proportionately enlarged by the restoration of some five billion dollars' worth of silver to its just estate as standard money?

Again, the Republicans have gone wild over the temporary restoration of wheat to the price of a dollar a bushel—a restoration brought about by special and sporadic causes which have already, in a certain degree, ceased to operate. If dollar wheat, for a few months of the year 1897, is such a good thing, why would it not be a still better thing to have dollar wheat every year?

Bimetallists argue the necessity of enlarging the supply of primary money. Gold monometallists admit the wisdom of this claim when they rejoice over the Klondike discoveries.

Bimetallists claim that there can be no general prosperity on a falling market, and urge a reform that will bring about a rise in the price of agricultural products. The gold clique has accepted the truth of this proposition in its exploitations of dollar wheat. Truly, the logic of a gold monometallist is fearfully and wonderfully made.

Tom Needles Displacing a Good Man.

Tom Needles, whose sole occupation during the life of the present generation of Illinoisans has been either to hold office or stir up political agitation when he and his party have been swept out of place and power by the besom of reform, has just obtained a position on the Dawes commission made vacant by the enforced resignation of Montgomery, a stalwart Democrat of Alabama. Needles will carry to the important work no experience or special information on the important questions involved in the final settlement of Indian Territory affairs. The work of the commission will thus be hampered and its conclusions further postponed. And all because President McKinley wanted to satisfy the demands for office of a very clamorous Illinois claimant.—St. Louis Republic.

Silver in India.

The strongest gold advocates in England are not prepared to say that the mints of India should remain closed against silver.

There is, however, a determined opposition to any concessions on the part of the British Government to the demands of those desirous of securing international bimetallism. The United States will do well to note the attitude of England and to take a hint for guidance. Great Britain asks no odds of America, and will do nothing by way of courtesy. If gold is considered good for England and silver good for India, then England will maintain her gold standard and India will resume the coinage of silver. This country should manifest an equally independent spirit. International bimetallism can never be secured by pleading. Its adoption must be made a necessity.

While London newspapers are attacking the Government for paltering with the bimetallic commission, the Standard confesses that the scarcity of currency in India since the mints closed has been a serious matter, but it says that a small committee of business men might be appointed to settle the question without reference to the wishes of America or other silver mine owners.

"If silver," says the Standard, "is the best currency for India, let her have it; but no rash decision ought to be taken without ample discussion."

With like confidence the people of the United States should say: "If bimetallism is the best thing for this country, let us have it." The time for trucklling to the money powers of Europe has passed. The battle should be fought to a finish here at home. The hosts of the gold clique should be vanquished and the money of the Constitution restored to its rightful place in the currency.

Gage's Plan of Currency Reform.

In the scheme for the rearrangement of the currency attributed to Secretary Gage there is one feature of prominence which may well cause surprise. This is the proposed issue of $200,000,000 new bonds, not for the purpose of refunding, but to be sold for cash in aid of the treasury reserve. If the Government really needs the money on account of the dismal failure of the new tariff to bring in revenue to anyone except the millionaire monopolists of the trusts, it must have it, and the only way Mr. Gage can get it is to sell bonds. But does it not smack of humbug to call this "currency reform?"—Boston Press.

Officious Ex-President Harrison.

While ex-President Harrison was in this city exhorting Republicans to vote for Platt's candidate they were having an exciting municipal election in his own city of Indianapolis, and a Democratic Mayor was elected. If Gen. Harrosin will call at the headquarters of the Citizens' Union, 39 East 23d street, he will be told that it is the duty of good citizens to vote at their local elections. What business has he to meddle in our politics when the affairs of his home city so urgently demand his attention?—New York Times.

No Pensions to Civil Servants.

Frugality is not frequently characteristic of the public employe; that will be admitted. There is too large an element of spoilsmen and politicians among them. A civil pension list would encourage the continuance of extravagant habits among such employes, habits that unfit them for their duties from day to day, even leading to premature old age. There are too many prodigals in Washington. The Government is not obliged to increase or encourage the class, but rather to discourage it.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Trade Diverted by High Tariff.

Recently public attention has been turned toward the Argentine Republic. In the matter of shipping cattle to England and Germany the little republic is becoming a serious competitor of this country, and the English are aiding her all they can to build up commercial prosperity. But in spite of this the United States continue to discourage trade and to put impediments in the way of commercial intercourse with the Argentine.—Indianapolis News.

Return for Campaign Contributions.

The tariff on steel rails is $7.20 a ton. American manufacturers are selling rails to Japan for $20 a ton, but are charging Americans $27.50 for them. The $7.50 represents the principal reason why American railway building is not equal to that of Japan, and it also represents the amount per ton contributed to Mr. Hanna's campaign fund by the rolling-mill magnate.—Omaha World-Herald.

Chief Reason for Annexaeion.

Ex-Hawaiian Minister Thurston failed to include in his reasons why Hawaii should be annexed the dominating one that New England holders of the securities representing Hawaii's $3,000,000 national indebtedness want Uncle Sam to assume that debt.—St. Louis Republic.

Jobs Wanted for Republicans.

Some of the Republican organs manifest much hostility to the admission of New Mexico and Arizona into the Union as States. But these same organs are filled with zeal for the annexation of Hawaii, with its swarms of Asiatics and leprous natives.—Quincy Herald.

Saving at the Spigot.

TAILOR-MADE GOWNS.

RADICALLY CHANGED FOR THIS WINTER'S WEAR.

Copper Red Is a New Color that Will Be Much Affected—Blouse Jackets and Tight Fits Are About Equally in Favor.

New York Fashion Notes.

New York correspondence:

JUST as we are congratulating ourselves that there are so few radical changes in winter fashions, we discover that tailor-mades are an exception—that in them is a revolution. The jackets and skirts of several seasons past that seemed so pretty and so to-be-always-in-style are all gone by. The tan browns that have been our standby are all gone by, too, and the tailor simplicity we have all sworn by has received a black eye. To take color as the first mark to distinguish the new garment, it should be stated that copper red, all shades of gray, a dull fawn that goes equally well with brown and with gray, black and green are the most affected colors. Copper red is the newest and most pronounced, while gray rules in the quiet taste that for years has gone in for browns and dark green. Then as to materials, smooth-faced cloths are the rule, though camel's hair is again offered, rough-surfaced checks are in vogue, and a solid weave giving canvas effect is much worn.

As to cut, the blouse jacket is in great favor, and nearly all of the striking tailor bodies—those that are known at first sight as new—are of this order. Quieter taste and a desire for something that shall be assuredly durable lead generally toward the tight fit. It is in this cut, too, that the more striking shades are most commonly employed, though the subdued shades get there also. The bodice of the initial illustration was in the stylish copper red broadcloth, trimmed with black braid and belted with the goods, and the accompanying skirt reddish cloth checked with black. In the first large picture the left hand rig was dark gray ladies' cloth trimmed with mink and fine black braid; next it was a black camel's hair, lined with fine black braid and edged with Persian lamb; the third model was carried out in green whipcord, and was lined with braid in a pretty modification of military effect, the braid interlacing on the sleeves; and the last of the row was fawn canvas, tucked throughout and edged with plain wide braid. So many changes are rung on this one effect that a blouse need never be commonplace or "just like all the rest." The front blouse may or may not start from under the arms, and there may be a lot of pleats, folds and bagginess all along the front of the belt, or the looseness may be in almost shield flatness. The contour of the bust is suggested, though not followed, and a properly made blouse by no means conceals a magnificent figure, while it will mercifully soften the ugliness of a bad one.

Light-weight shirt waists in soft silk or fronts are worn under many of the blouse jacket bodices to tailor gowns, and it is difficult to tell whether the upper garment is an outside jacket or the bodice itself. The wearer herself is likely to become mixed, because the same bodice may be worn either way.

A majority of tailor bodices fasten at the side whether they blouse or not, though that is by no means a characteristic of the new styles. If the blouse fashion is not followed, then the tight hussar bodice is the rule, and that may fasten on both sides in jaunty double-breasted and frogged effect. But tight bodices of severe finish are in greater favor, and it may be because women of fine figures, who like this cut, wish to leave their tailor molding almost unrelieved. Four bodices of this type are a-row in the third sketch, all plain as tailor standards now are, but varying in severity. The first was rough blue cloth ornamented only with stitching, the second was light gray broadcloth self-trimmed with bias folds, and last come two that had a little braid garniture, the first in gray cheviot and the other in red broadcloth. Bodices of this classification are plentiful enough to warrant anyone going in for them, and women who fear that the blouse idea is soon to be overdone deem them safer. But in newness and stylishness there is just as much in the blouse's favor as comparison of these two group suggests.

Skirts are so much narrower now, so lacking in folds, that we are not inclined to fuss over the added length. A tailor skirt should give the effect of dragging slightly, the foot pushing from under it in front. Many different kinds of finish are offered in place of braid or velvet for the hem, and most of the popular ones are in the form of a plush-like roll that is almost a little brush. Such a "braid" when in place gives a rich finish to the foot of the skirt, and at the same time almost defies wear. Then it so effectually lifts the skirt itself from contact with the ground, that even though the skirt seems long it is not as liable to injury from that fact as was the skirt of some time ago, which, though short, still touched at the curb and wore out along the edge in spite of oft changed braid. Certainly the long skirt is the more becoming to the average woman, and the fall from waist to hem of smooth-faced cloth in long folds, or rather in a graceful sweep, for there are no folds now, is always beautiful.

Positively tailor skirts must be lined with silk. The very brightest colors are used, flame scarlet and bright orange being the newest, while gray is equally new as a quiet shade. Hem ruffles are appearing again, and many of these are finished at the edge with spiral braid.

With so much in tailor styles that is elaborate the line between the work of the tailor and that of the dressmaker is not so plain as it once was, yet it really is as sharp as ever. It is decreed positively that any cloth gown, no matter how heavily braided or strapped, how elaborately lined, or how complicated may be the effect of cut, may be called a tailor gown if only no trace of any material but cloth appears, except, of course, the braiding, and—well, the collar may be faced with velvet or silk if it is done man-fashion. But if the cloth gown show yoke, belt or folded collar of silk or velvet, if the cloth be cut out to show the silk lining beneath, if there be the least trace of lace or ribbon, be it no more than just at the collar, then the gown is not tailor-made.

Rich Gypsies.

Many of the English gypsies who wander to and fro in our land have considerable means. During the winter they live in cities, but with the coming of summer the old wild love of the open country, with the sky for a covering, comes over them, and they go back to their camps and to the people of their race. They are great horse traders and the women are successful fortune tellers. Both men and women are pleasant and talkative. They speak English readily, although for their own conversation they use nothing but the Romany tongue. All of them have two names, the gypsy name and the corresponding name in English. Lee and Stanley are common names among them, and you are pretty safe in addressing any English gypsy by one or the other.

Hereditary Desire to Steal.

There are persons who seriously regard kleptomania as a disease, and bolster up their theory by plausible reasoning. A writer in the Progressive Review gives the following explanation of his ideas upon the subject: "Some near ancestor, possibly a father, who has pandered to an undisciplined extent to the collecting instinct, using all the weapons with which modern commercialism has assured him, knowing no scruples, heeding no voice of conscience, however small or still, and eventually becoming rich, transmits to his descendant, a woman of weak will, the overmastering desire to acquire. She, unable to exercise her instinct in the same grooves, not even realizing her bent, becomes a kleptomaniac. The propensity for deception so proved in the former, but exercised in the accepted modes, is present also in the latter, and takes the form of petty larceny." This is ingenious if false, and if true, but convenient for the transgressor in any case.

NOTES ABOUT SCHOOLS AND THEIR MANAGEMENT.

A New Educational Idea—Compulsory Pension Association in California—Hazing to Be Stopped at Stanford University—Educational Notes.

Gill School System.

A somewhat novel experiment was tried in New York City during the month of July and a part of August. Mr. Wilson L. Gill is the inventor of a plan, called the "Gill School City," which organizes the schools into a perfect miniature municipality, governed exactly like large cities, with a Mayor, Aldermen, police, street cleaning and health departments. The vacation school, which is situated in the heart of the thickly populated east side of New York, numbers about 1,200 children and is divided into "boroughs" like those which will comprise Greater New York. Each borough is represented in the city council. The officers are elected as provided for in the Greater New York charter. The street cleaning department has drawn up laws which oblige children to keep the school building and yard in order, and not to deface any school property. Other departments of the school municipality are carried on in the same practical manner. Children hold office and are promoted or deposed according to merit. The three judges, consisting of two boys and a girl, recently impaneled a jury to try a police captain accused of improper conduct; the verdict "guilty" was returned and the captain, much to his chagrin, was deposed.

Mr. Gill, satisfied with the success of the experiment, hopes to spread the plan throughout all the principal cities of the Union. He expects that in New York it will be made a permanency in two or three schools this fall; and the Hoffman School of Philadelphia, it is said, has definitely decided to introduce it immediately.

The idea of the founder is that the system of absolute monarchy enforced in our schools to-day is an injustice both to the teachers and to the pupils. In the experiment tried the children have shown themselves capable of self-government; their pride in school order has been most gratifying. Mayor Strong of New York and the heads of departments have given the school city their cordial sympathy and co-operation, believing that children should early be trained to take part in municipal affairs.—Public Opinion.

Proposes to Stop Hazing.

President Jordon proposes to stop hazing at Stanford University, also to weed out dissolute and idle students, and at the same time to prevent poor boys from overworking themselves and ruining their health. If he can do this he will prove himself a model president. He claims a certain advantage in the matter, as he can appeal to a court elected by students themselves. He has told them distinctly that it is a part of their duty to eliminate unworthy persons from the university classes; and that they should request the withdrawal of any students whose influence is undesirable; and even although not found guilty of specific acts of dishonor, if they are dissipated, profligate, tricky, or foul of tongue, he would have them removed. He makes the suggestion that students guilty of hazing, if sophomores, be dropped into the freshman class, and if freshmen, that they be allowed to finish the course still sooner.

Compulsory Pension Association.

The Legislature of California has passed a law organizing a compulsory pension association to include all teachers in San Francisco. Each teacher in the city will be obliged to contribute one dollar a month, and these monthly contributions will be increased by a fine for absence. One-twentieth of the month's salary is deducted for each day's absence. Twenty-five per cent. of all receipts is to be placed in a reserve fund till the total receipts amount to $50,000. After thirty years' service teachers may retire with a guaranteed annuity of $600. Teachers who have already served the city several years may count these years as part of the necessary thirty, by paying twelve dollars for each year of their service. Teachers who may become disabled before they have taught thirty years may receive such a portion of the annuity as their term of service bears to thirty years.

Notes on Education.

The new compulsory educational law is working admirably at Indianapolis, Ind. It has added already from 25,000 to 30,000 pupils to the public schools.

The Bradley Polytechnic Institute, founded by the generosity of Mrs. Lydia Bradley at Peoria, Ill., was formally dedicated to the cause of education by the most impressive ceremonies the city has ever seen.

Pathetic Incident.

An exchange prints a pretty and pathetic story said to have been related by Prof. Gallaudet, the well-known instructor of deaf mutes.

The professor has a favorite pupil—a little deaf mute boy, exceptionally bright. Mr. Gallaudet asked him if he knew the story of George Washington and the cherry tree. With his nimble fingers the little one said he did, and proceeded to repeat it.

The noiseless gesticulations continued until the boy had informed the professor of the elder Washington's discovery of the mutilated tree and of his quest for the mutilator.

"When George's father asked him who hacked his favorite cherry tree," signaled the voiceless child, "George put his hatchet in his left hand——"

"Stop," interrupted the professor. "Where do you get your authority for saying he took the hatchet in his left hand?"

"Why," responded the boy, "he needed his right hand to tell his father that he cut the tree."

From Bad to Worse.

An English gentleman was walking with a friend in Unter den Linden, in Berlin, and in the course of a discussion on the Kaiser's conduct committed a grievous error of Majestats-Beleidigung.

"The Emperor's a —— fool!" he exclaimed, whereupon an English-speaking police officer tapped him on the shoulder and said:

"You must come mid me to ze police station."

"What for?" asked the Englishman.

"Mein herr did call ze Kaiser a —— fool," replied the man.

"No, no," urged the cute Briton; "it was the Russian Emperor I was speaking about."

"Dat vill not vash," went on the constable; "dere is no Emperor a —— fool except the German Emperor."

The Nervous Americans.

Americans are a fearfully nervous people. It takes less provocation to send the average American into a nervous spasm than any other person on earth. If there is a nation which should let stimulants alone we are the nation. Yet—to say nothing of liquor, as to which we are no worse than others—we are insatiable coffee drinkers. Yes, and the practice helps fill our hospitals and penitentiaries. Why not drop coffee and drink Grain-O instead? The latter does not act on the nerves, while it does nourish, warm, soothe, cheer and build up the body. It gives you what you need and does no harm. Prepared from pure grain. Try it and you won't go back to coffee. The whole family can drink Grain-O, at night, too, if you like—then sleep soundly. Ask your grocer for a package; 15c. or 25c. each.

How Italy's Queen Shops.

The queen of Italy is much enjoying her stay at Gressony, in the Italian Alps, where, dressed in peasant costume, she climbs, despite her weight and size, in good earnest, says London Figaro. Her majesty is very popular in the mountain villages and whenever she enters one is variably received with flowers and enthusiastic signs of devotion.

There is very little doubt that the tendency to embonpoint which so distresses Queen Margherita is due to her fondness for Italian cookery with its oil, spices and pastry. She is especially fond of cakes fried in oil; spaghetti, together with cheese and olives and fritto, a compound of artichokes, chickens' livers, calves' brains and cocks' combs. When there are no foreigners present at the royal board the national cookery is always in the ascendant.

When in Rome Queen Margherita's mode of sporting is, for a sovereign, delightfully unconventional. She rises early and summoning some favorite lady-in-waiting issues quietly from the courtyard of the Quirinal and makes her way to the Corso. She will then enter those shops that enjoy her patronage, survey rapidly the treasures held out before her, point out those which appear to her desirable and leave as swiftly as she entered.

Still Believed It.

Many strange superstitions are connected with sweeping the house. In Suffolk, people say that if after sweeping the room the broom is accidentally left in the corner strangers will visit the house in the course of the day; while others affirm in the Northern counties that to sweep dust out of the house by the front door is equivalent to sweeping away the good fortune and happiness of the family.

To Make an Egg Reveal Its Age.

To ascertain the freshness of an egg, without breaking, hold it before a strong light and look directly through the shell. If the yolk appears round and the white surrounding it clear, the chances are that the egg is fresh. Or you may drop it into water: if the egg sinks quickly and remains at the bottom it is in all probability fresh, but if it stands on end it is doubtful, and quite bad if it floats. The shell of a fresh egg looks dull, while that of a stale one is glossy.—Mrs. S. T. Rorer in November Ladies' Home Journal.

A NECKLACE OF PEARLS

Is a beautiful possession. If a woman owns one, and if a single pearl drops off the string, she makes haste to find and restore it.

Good health is a more valuable possession than a necklace of the most beautiful pearls, yet one by one the jewels of health slip away, and women seem indifferent until it is almost too late, and they cannot be restored.

To die before you are really old is to suffer premature death, and that is a sin. It is a sin because it is the result of repeated violations of nature's laws.

Pain, lassitude and weariness, inability to sleep, dreadful dreams, starting violently from sleep, are all symptoms of nerve trouble.

You cannot have nerve trouble and keep your health. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the womb, the ovaries and the bladder are affected. They are not vital organs, hence they give out soonest.

Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, by building up the nerves and restoring woman's organism to its natural state, relieves all these troublesome uterine symptoms. In confirmation of this we, by permission, refer to the following women, all of whom speak from experience: MISS CELIA VAN HORN, 1912 Sharswood St., Philadelphia, Pa.; MISS GRACE COLLORD, 1434 Eastern Ave., Cincinnati, O.; MRS. NEWELL, 50 Ryerson St., Brooklyn, N. Y.; MRS. ISABEL OBERG, 220 Chestnut St., Woburn, Mass., MRS. A. H. COLE, New Rochelle, N. Y., and many others

MADE THE BURGLARS FLEE.

As trophies of her recent desperate encounter with a burglar, Miss Ellen Zorn, of New Buffalo, Mich., treasures a sandbag and a set of false whiskers. The marauder got away, but Miss Zorn has photographed on her mind a good picture of the fellow, and hopes to see the original ere long. She is the daughter of John Zorn, a well-to-do and respected German citizen who resides a short distance outside of New Buffalo. Miss Zorn is 24 years old, of slight build and full of courage. She was sleeping alone in the lower part of the house, when she was awakened by a noise upstairs. She quickly arose, and on opening the door of the room from whence the noise seemed to come ran plump into the arms of a big, black-bearded man. The fellow aimed a blow at her with a sandbag, but she dodged and closed with him. Her first grab, woman-like, perhaps, was for his beard, which came away in her hand. The man struck at her repeatedly, but she escaped serious injury. Meantime she had seized his throat in one hand and the sandbag with the other, choking him so he could hardly breathe. Then he dropped the sandbag, which she seized and proceeded to use vigorously on the unwelcome visitor. Upon this he jumped from a window and escaped.

MISS ELLEN ZORN.

No Opening for Women.

Mrs. Emily Crawford, the well-known Paris correspondent of the London Daily News, says that there is no opening at all for women journalists in Paris. "The manners of the country," she says, "are entirely against it. The French press is at present in the hands of a rough, pushing, scrambling set of men, who guard their own rights most jealously against any intrusion of women. If a girl tried to force her way into a Paris newspaper office she would meet with scant courtesy and would be looked upon as an interloper who deserved no mercy."

This Is the Way.

The woman who is wondering how she shall "do" her hair to be in the latest mode can look at this and be satisfied. It is a style just brought out in London, and while it requires a deft hand it is really very easy to accomplish, and the novel way in which the twists are arranged are at once pleasing and becoming. This year there has been an effort to make women wear their hair on top of their heads, but it has not been exactly successful. It is impossible to adjust a hat at a correct angle with an elaborate high coiffure, and in these busy days a woman who is embroidering by her fireside one minute, scampering down to the grocery next, receiving callers one hour and out on the golf field the hour after has no time to dress her hair every hour of the day to suit conditions—she wants a style which is at once pretty and which permits of a hat if necessary.

THE NEW TWIST.

Secret of Beauty.

Probably one of the great secrets of how to be beautiful lies in thoroughly realizing what type nature intended you to be, and then straining every nerve to be as perfect as possible in that particular line. It takes all kinds of people to make up a world and there is no more certain way of courting failure than trying to wrap yourself down or stretch yourself up to something utterly antagonistic to your nature. The Dutch-doll style of woman, with a tip-tilted nose and pink cheeks, may be perfectly conscious that hers is not the highest form of beauty; but woe betide her if she try to make it so by the ostrich-like proceeding of clothing herself in Grecian drapery and wearing a classical fillet in her hair.

Petticoats of Plaid.

Each year more care is bestowed upon the petticoat of silk. This season the most fetching thing in petticoats is the one of plaid silk. The shops are showing most attractive and elaborately made garments of this order. One shown in a leading Broadway dry goods house the other day was of green and black plaid, the bottom having a deep flounce done in knife-pleating cut into points and set up over another pleated flounce of black taffeta. Silk petticoats can be had now in all the fashionable plaids and their cost is in keeping with their elegance.

Has Twelve Dressmakers.

It is well known that the German Empress is an ideal housekeeper, as well as an ideal wife and mother. Her dread of waste goes so far that the suits of her elder children are cut down to fit the younger boys, and her own court dresses are altered again and again, so as not to be recognized when they are worn at any court functions. Yet it is also reported that an army of twelve dressmakers is always at work for the Empress, and that it is increased to over thirty whenever the Empress is about to start on a journey. New gowns would, after all, be less expensive, since the great Berlin artist in dresses who makes the court costumes for her majesty charges only about $75 for making a gown of state.

Mother of a Novelist.

There died in Rome recently Louisa Ward, wife of Luther Terry, in her 75th year. This simple announcement suggests nothing unless the reader already knows she was the mother of Marion Crawford. Not only was Mrs. Terry the mother of the well-known novelist, whose father, her first husband, was Thomas Crawford, the sculptor, but she was the sister of Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, who is now the only surviving daughter of a wealthy New York banker named Ward. When Mrs. Terry and her two sisters were young girls at home they were known to their admirers as the three graces. They were not only beautiful but clever and cultivated.

Ugly on the Wheel.

As a rule American women are prepared to blindly follow French styles, but most of them hope the day is far distant when they are likely to see their daughters and themselves arrayed in the unsightly plaited bicycle bloomers to be seen daily on the Paris boulevards. They accentuate all the ungraceful lines and the prettiest women look ugly in them. The riders in Paris bend forward at a sharper angle than they do here and this alone renders them ungraceful. It is a matter of wonder that French women are so unattractive on the wheel, as feminine France has always stood for charm and style.

For the Nursery.

The newest convenience for the baby's boudoir is a big-bowled, long-handled spoon of yellow wood. The bowl is a painting of a scene from the land of faries or nursery ditties. The classic cow performing her aerial feat, Simple Simon, Little Boy Blue, Little Nan Etticoat and other familiar personages ornament the bowl, whose curling edges make a frame for the gay little figures. All along the handle of the spoon are placed brass hooks, and when it is fastened to the wall by a larger and more solid hook placed at the back it makes an ornamental and very useful little rack for the children's clothes.

The Smelling Salts Expression.

The constant use of smelling salts is said by physicians to ruin the beauty of women addicted to the habit.

To Remove Tan and Freckles.

Soap will not remove tan nor freckles, says the Ladies' Home Journal. Bathe the face in warm water and dry very carefully with a soft towel. Do not use soap on the face unless absolutely necessary. Never use face powder of any sort—it spoils the skin, by closing the pores. If your child suffers from sunburn, moisten the face at night with cucumber juice. Cut a cucumber lengthwise and rub it on the face, allowing the juice to remain until it dries off; or use a mild solution of baking soda.

New Skirts.

There are several varieties of new skirts—one kind is plain in shape, but much fuller in the back than those which have been worn. Trimming is put on either at the hem or over the hips. Tailor gowns have barrel-hoop rows of silk braid from the waistband to a little below the hips, similar rows appearing at the hem. Designs of many kinds, key border patterns, V's and such are formed with inch-wide silk braid on many of the winter skirts.

Woman in a Well.

A Tennessee woman while alone at home went to the old-fashioned well to draw water and fell to the bottom of the well. The water was nearly as deep as her height, but she stood upon the bucket and waited for help, from 8 a. m. till late in the afternoon, in the cold water. A negro came over on an errand, and, hearing her screams, secured a rope and drew her out.

Bernhardt's Hair.

Sarah Bernhardt's hair is naturally of a dark brown and is far from luxuriant. It is, however, stiff and crinkly and now that it is bleached a reddish-gold is picturesque and pretty; this golden aureole, which frames the great actress' face, is exceedingly becoming, and she did well to refuse to accept the indifferent color conferred on her by nature.

Keep Accounts.

Keeping household accounts is an affair, if not a necessity, still of the greatest wisdom, says an exchange. In comparison with the small amount of time and labor which the doing so employs the satisfaction of knowing at the end accounts which will show at once where expenses can be lessened is entitled to respectful consideration.

Wears Masculine Garb.

Mme. Dieulafoy, the famous traveler and archaeologist, is one of the two or three women to whom the French Government has granted permission to wear masculine garb. She is always as correctly dressed as a London swell, and she and her husband patronize the same tailor.

WILL IT BE A DEACONESS.

Path of Life Chosen by a Daughter of Ex-Senator Ingalls.

Miss Ethel Ingalls has entered upon her duties as a deaconess of the Protestant Episcopal Church. She has entered the house of deaconesses at Philadelphia for a probationary period. Then, if she feels herself spiritually, mentally and physically fit for the life and work of a deaconess and the board of admission approves of her she will enter upon her studies. After two years she may be ordained by the Bishop of Pennsylvania. A deaconess of the Episcopal Church renounces the happiness of married life. "If she were married," the house mother of the deaconesses said naively, "she would have to obey her husband. If she is a deaconess she must give her first obedience to the bishop. The two men might clash."

MISS ETHEL INGALLS.

A deaconess devotes herself to alleviating suffering, to helping those who need help, temporal or spiritual. She comforts the sick in the hospitals, she visits charitable institutions, she tries to obtain work for the unemployed. Sometimes she goes out as a trained nurse, sometimes she furthers college settlement work. In a word, a deaconess is at once a woman and a ministering angel.

A RUNNING FIGHT.

(Ft. Wayne Journal.)

Sheriff Melching returned from Auburn yesterday, having in charge Oca Fusselman and Mark Countryman, who are charged with wholesale chicken stealing. The arrests will be hailed with salvos of delight by farmers all over northeastern Indiana and northwestern Ohio, for it is thought it will put a stop to the raids on hen roosts and poultry houses, which have been going on for two years. The men were captured near Paulding, O., by a posse of farmers, four of whom had followed them over seventy five miles. The chicken dealers showed fight, and one of them escaped by a display of fire arms, and is still at large. One of the prisoners, Mark Countryman, has a bullet wound in his hand, received in the fight.

Mac McCurdy, of Scipio township, started the crusade after the chicken thieves. Monday night at twelve o'clock he was awakened by the furious barking of his dog, and taking his gun, went into the yard to investigate. He heard his chickens cackling as if frightened, and started for the hen house, but before he got close enough three men ran from the coop, with sacks in their hands, and jumping into a wagon, drove off at a furious pace. Mr. McCurdy called his son, who started after the thieves on his bicycle, and followed for several miles in a southeasterly direction, but lost a track of them. Mr. McCurdy also started off, getting his neighbors to help in the search. They were unable to find them but gathered information which showed that the thieves were trying to make a clean sweep of all the poultry in the county. The houses of Wallace Dietsman and Henry Tustison near the state line, were visited, and the hen coops robbed. At the Tustison place they took a flock of turkeys. At this place one of the men had his trousers torn off in a barb wire fence, and the gang went to Tom Allen's house and stole a new pair of trousers. In the meantime the farmers had been aroused, and the posse followed them, on horseback, as far as Hicksville, O., by a circuitous route, and finally overtook them three miles north of Paulding, after a chase of nearly 100 miles. A number of colored farmers, living near Paulding, had been victims of the thieves, and they joined in the chase with avidity. When the pursuers came up with the gang the latter had let all the stolen fowls loose, and chickens and turkeys are plentiful in Paulding county ever since. The men refused to surrender, and the darkies, many of whom were armed, threatened to shoot. Bodecker, one of the thieves, pulled a revolver and started to run, threatening to shoot any one who followed him. Fusselman and Countryman resisted, and a few stray shots flew, one of them striking Countryman on the hand. The men were overpowered and taken to Auburn, and lodged in jail. Sheriff Melching was notified, and, as the last thefts were committed in Allen county, he brought the prisoners here.

For two years hen coops have been robbed in DeKalb, Noble and Allen counties, and it now develops that it was the work of an organized gang. Last winter Jacob Nicola and Harry Kepler were caught in Noble county and sent to the penitentiary, and the men arrested here last night informed Sheriff Melching that if the two convicts had not kept close mouths the whole gang would have been rounded up. Fusselman was a commission merchant at Newville, DeKalb county, and during the past month be sold 2,000 pounds of poultry at Hicksville. His father is a well known and respected stock buyer.

Later: The third man Dan Bodker was caught last night at Farmer, O., and he is now also in jail.

A NEW CHAMPION.

(Hicksville Independent,)

Rev. W. L. Meese, of Auburn, who has been claiming the championship for marrying people, his record being someting over 1,200 couples, will have to take the back seat for Rev. Dr. Baldwin, a Baptist clergyman of Troy, N. Y. Dr. Baldwin has for many years been pastor of a charge in the city of laundries and has for most of the time been the most popular marrying parson in the place. His books show that in the course of his ministerial career he has united 2,716 couples. Dr. Baldwin who is now the oldest preacher in point of service in Troy, first took up his pastoral work there fifty-three years ago. He is now about to retire. The reverend gentleman is said to be a fine looking, patriarchal man of commanding figure.

OLD INDIANA MAP.

(Goshen Times)

In searching for data for history of Indiana an old map of the state, made and printed eighty years ago, was found. Lake Michigan, instead of being in the northwest corner, is placed east of the middle of the northern boundary line, where Elkhart county now is. The map also shows a mountain on the level prairie near Valparaiso. At the time the government only owned a fraction of the land the rest being under the Indian name. Other sections were gradually ceded by the Indian's until the state was admitted in 1816 to the union. Many counties were not formed then and some are much larger. Many names of that time are now not recognized. The map contains much of Indiana's ancient history.

ANOTHER CHAIN

Started.—This Time the Messages Are Words of Praise Gratefully Given by Users of

Dr. WHEELER'S NERVE VITALIZER.

The public remembers that a short time ago a chain of letters was started for some worthy purpose, which reached such a magnitude that the whole world talked of it. A chain of oral messages has been started with also a worthy object, but different, for the reason that each one who participates reaps a benefit. The messages sing the praise of Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer in the treatment of all nervous troubles and diseases resulting from debilitated nerves. Mrs. Geo. Halstead, Toledo, Ohio, has added over fifty links to the chain by telling that many of her afflicted friends what Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer has done for her. These are her words: "Last spring I was all run down, nervous and very sick; due probably to the change of weather. The doctor was called and he treated me for a long time without much benefit. I then concluded to try Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer because I had heard such favorable reports from its use. I commenced to improve at once. I told the doctor what I was using and the beneficial effect, to which he replied, "Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer is a good medicine, keep on using it;" which I did and was soon up and about as well as ever. I have recommended it to over fifty people and results have been entirely satisfactory."

DEAR WHEAT

(Michigan City Dispatch.)

Carl Cline, of Columbus, O., advertised in agricultural papers that he had a new and superior kind of seed wheat know as the "Early Surprise." He would sell it to the readers of his advertisements at $1.40 a bushel. Peter Hack of this county, forwarded his money for eighteen bushels of the "Early Surprise," and last week his order came, costing him, with an extra amount for the bags, $28. Soon after the deal had been consummated Mr. Hack received a notice from the United States authorities at Indianapolis, requesting him to send Cline's correspondence and a sample of the wheat. Mr. Hack discovered that he had bought plain, ordinary wheat and he sold it at prevailing prices. One bag containing two bushels was missing when the order arrived, and Mr. Hack lost $12 in the entire deal.

PAID $21 DOLLARS.

Green Lahnum who was employed by the Greenler Co met with an accident a few weeks ago, and had his foot smashed. He carried a Class C. accident policy in the Columbian Relief Fund Association of Indianapolis, and last evening Mr. Ray a representative of the company was here and paid him $21. He was off duty just eighteen days. Mr. Lahnum has taken the local agency for this company and as he has been paid for two different accidents he knows the company is good and can reccommend it to others. The company also pays weekly sick benefits.

MORE TROUBLE AT GOSHEN.

This time it is the county commissioners of Elkhart county. It appears that a bridge building firm, Brumbaugh & Brumbaugh, have been having all the bridges to make in that county, for a number of years and no other firm was given a chance. Other firms became suspicious and asked the grand jury to investigate. They did so and found that the books of the Brumbaugh Co. showed over $1000 paid to the commissioners during the past year alone, as commissions on bridge contracts awarded to the firm. And the county will sue to get back extra pay allowed the bridge builders.

QUEER TALE OF A HAT.

In the fall of 1884, a couple were married at Wilkesbarre, and the justice who tied the knot made a memorandum of it in the lining of his his high campaign hat, intending in a day or so, to write out the whole certificate and return and file with the proper officer. But that night, the news of Cleveland's election, set the town wild. The justice was an ardent Cleveland man, and in the jubilation that followed, the justice lost his hat, and when he got it back, it was so crumpled and banged that he laid it aside in the garret and it was forgotten. Two years ago, the husband was killed in a Colorado railroad wreck, and as he belonged to the Railway Brotherhood his widow applied for his insurance of $2,000. They demanded to see her marriage cirtificate, but she had none. She came east to get the justice to help her, but he could not, and the widow went back to her western home to get along as best she might. A few weeks ago, the wife of the justice was cleaning house. The old campaign hat was found, and the justice took it up and recalled the famous campaign. Then he saw the writing in the lining, and the forgotten record was recalled. He wrote it out in full and sent it to the widow, and she now has her $2,000.

Just think, there are no less than ten representatives of the unlucky thirteen on one side of them. There are thirteen stars, thirteen letters in the scroll the eagle holds in his beak, thirteen marginal feathers in each wing, thirteen tail feathers, thirteen horizontal bars, thirteen arrow heads in one claw, and thirteen letters in the words quarter dollar. Bring them to us because we are not superstitious about the number of thirteen and will gladly take them on subscription or any one thing.—Ex

NOT ALWAYS UNDERSTOOD

A fact often overlooked, or not always understood, is that women suffer as much from distressing kidney and bladder troubles as the men. The womb is situated back of and very close to the bladder, and for that reason any distress, disease or inconvenience manifested in the kidneys, back, bladder or urinary passage is often, by mistake, attributed to female weakness or womb trouble of some sort.

The error is easily made and may be as easily avoided by setting urine aside for twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling is evidence that your kidneys and bladder need doctoring. If you have pain or dull aching in the back, pass water to frequently, or scanty supply, with smarting or burning, these are also convincing proofs of kidney trouble If you have doctored without benefit, try Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy. The mild and extraordinary effect will surprise you. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures. If you take a medicine you should take the best. At druggists fifty cents and one dollar. You may have a sample bottle and pamphlet, both sent free by mail. Mention AUBURN COURIER and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N.Y. The proprietors of this paper guarantee the genuineness of this offer.

NOVEMBER DEMOREST.

This is a lovely number of this always lovely magazine. It is full of the finest of pictures many of them taken from photos. The stories are equally excellent. The first article in this number is "A Winter in an Oases," which opens up a new field and gives the reader new ideas of life and conditions, as well as of the country and its scenery among the oasis, or fertile spots in the great Saharah Desert in Northern Africa. It is all through, full of fresh interest and surprises and when one has finished reading it, he suddenly feels how little he knew about this strange, but old country till he had read this number of Demorest. Besides articles of this kind there are good ones finely illustrated, on the subject of paintidg on china, on the game of golf, on carrier pigeons, etc. and a number of photos to Julia Marlowe and other noted stars of the stage.

THREE LITTLE COONS

Auburn was visited this morning by three little coons who claimed that their parents had been deprived of their household goods by fire. They made a systematic canvass for clothing and money. One little chap had a revolver and Marshal Potter was soon notified, and in a few minutes later they were all three in the calaboose. Later they were turned loose on a promise that they would leave town.

A GIRL GOVERNOR

Miss Margaret Reev served ten days recently, as governor of Idaho. The governor was absent, and in such cases, the secretary of state does his work. But the secretary had to be out of town ten days, and his assistant, Miss Reev, had to do his work. So she was governor. Several important things came up, and among them, the requisition from another state, to give up a criminal that had escaped into Idaho. She promptly sent him where she was wanted. And now the people there don't care if the goveanor never comes back.

BEAT THE ROMAN GEESE.

Pigeons in the prison loft at Jefferson City, Mo., prevented the escape of a lot of prisoners Thursday night of last week. A special dispatch says:

A flock of pigeons in the garrett of the new cell-house building at the penitentiary suddenly began an unnatural noise early yesterdy morning. Night Guard Gordon, growing suspicious, investigated the cause of the commotion and discovered a convict in the act of lowering himself to the ground with a blanket rope. Three other convicts were found in the garret ready to follow him. Their presence had alarmed the pigeons. The four were returned to their cells. All were serving terms for robbery and are known as daring men.

A REMARKABLE ACCIDENT.

(Hicksville Independent.)

Robert Mastin whose business led him to Antwerp Monday, of a remarkable sight he witnessed there. The Wabash "flyer" and milk wagon got into a sight altercation at the crossing near the depot, and Mr. Mastin says that everybody who saw the collision are of the opinion that the vender of chalk and water got the worst of the deal. The train was going through the poor little town at such a rate that some of the natives thought the suction of the cars would carry half the houses to Fort Wayne, but that didn't bluff the man with the milk wagon. He seemed to be in an awful hurry to get across the railroad, but the engineer on the approaching train never thought to accommodate his friend by stopping a few minutes. He just turned on a little more steam and watched for results. The cowcatcher struck the vehicle in such a manner as to leave the horses on one side of the track and the rear of the wagon on the other. It is not known whether the milk cans have stopped rolling or not, but neither the horses or the driver suffered even the slightest injury. Their escape was indeed a marvelous one, and can only be explained by the fact that most any old thing can happen in Antwerp.

THE GYPSY BAND.

A lot of Gypsies went through here several days ago and for a time made their camping place in the woods just this side of the Junction. One of these wagons was gotten up in fine style and must have cost quite a sum of money. It had a sort of railing around the front part, quite ornamental and on each side of the body was the name, "Emma Gray." These people often put a good deal of expense on these wheeled residences, which are to them what our real residences are to us. They are their home and in these, or taken from place to place, with them, are their entire earthly possessions. They are a strange people to live as they do in a country in which real homes can be had as easily as the ones they have.

IT IS STRANGE

that some people who say they never read patent medicine advertisements will be found lugging home every now and then a bottle of some favorite remedy of theirs. We don't bother you with much reading, but just ask you to try a 10c trial bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin for constipation, indigestion and stomach troubles. 50c and $1 sizes. A F. E. There was a "hot time" at the Buffalo Store for a few minutes last evening, caused by the sudden appearance of a monster rat in the room. Ralph Moody was just leaving the store when the rat ran in through the open door, and of course down the center, followed by Mr. Moody, Tom Hilderbrand, Peter Clapham, Frank Eyanson and Ethan Clark. After a short, sharp conflict the rodent was dispatched by Mr. Moody and carried out by Mr. Clark, but what a sight presented itself when a view was taken of the room. At first glance it seemed vacant, but after a search the lady clerks were discovered in various improbable places. It is stated on good authority that one of them even tried to hide herself in a large red box on the shelf, while another was clinging to the balusters about half way up the stairway. It required almost half an hour to coax them down from their "elevated" positions and even now the word "rats" will cause a general scamper for a place of safety.

It is Thought by Many when the Creator said to woman "in sorrow shalt thou bring forth children," that a curse was pronounced, but the joy felt by every Mother when she first presses to her heart her babe, proves the contrary.

Danger and suffering lurk in the pathway of the Expectant Mother, and should be avoided, that she may reach the hour when the hope of her heart is to be realized, in full vigor and strength.

"Mother's Friend"

so relaxes the system that the natural and necessary ..... change takes place without Nausea..... Headache, Nervous or Gloomy..... Foreboding and at the trying hour makes Child-birth easy, as so many happy mothers have experienced. Nothing but "Mother's Friend" does this. Don't be deceived.

FRANK B. DAVENPORT, JAMES R. RIGY,
CAPT. N. L. HANSEN, CHAS. REICHARDT, E. T. MILLIGAN.

To those desiring to secure a share in the wealth of the wonderful Gold Fields of Alaska and the Klondike, the Merchant's Alaska Mining Company offers an unequaled opportunity.

WHILE all cannot go to Alaska, there are many who realize the opportunities that have been opened up there, and would make an investment if they could be assured that their money would be honestly handled, and that they would receive their proper share of the profits.

The MERCHANT'S ALASKA MINING COMPANY offers such an investment. It is a reliable, honest enterprise, directed by responsible men of business standing and character. It has associated with it mutually the firm of Atkins & Milligan, Mining Engineers and Operators, whose long experience and success in the mining business is a guarantee of the investments of its funds in the most renumerative manner, and whose reputation and business standing among mining circles is second to none. Their thorough acquaintance with the Northwest Mining Regions enables them to grasp opportunities others would overlook, and keep out of those ventures their experience has shown to be unsafe. The engineers and prospectors who will go to Alaska for the Company will be men of reputation for honesty and capability.

What the Company Will Do.

The lines upon which this Company will operate are novel in many particulars, and particularly adapted to the conditions in Alaska, and are sure to acquire for the Company large interests and reap immense profits for the stockholders.

First.

It will prospect and locate mines in mining claims through agents and prospectors, and by grubstaking reliable miners to stake and operate claims on shares.

Second:

It will develop, operate, buy and sell mines and mining property.

Third:

It will acquire interests in claims already staked out and partly developed, whose owners are out of supplies and money, and who are unable to proceed with work, but who have good claims; by advancing money, supplies and labor to such owners in consideration of an interest in their property.

Fourth:

It will conduct a general mining and mercantile business in Alaska, British Columbia, Northwest Territory, the United States and elsewhere in accordance with the terms of this charters, as opportunities may present.

The Company is now the owner of the "CELTIC" Mineral Claim located in the famous Big Bend District in the rich Kootenay Country, British Columbia. Late reports from this property give promise of rich developments. The camp in which it is located is a thriving one, rapidly building up. The assay on this property shows an average of from $10 to $15 per ton in gold. Every stockholder in this Company becomes on receipt of his stock a part owner in this property in addition to the interests he will acquire in every investment of the company in Alaska. This property will not be developed at present, all the effo ts of the Company being directed towards Alaska, the land of such wonderful opportunities.

A limited amout of the stock of the company is for sale at Fifty Cents per share. The stock at this figure is very low, and should advance in price at an early date. Subscriptions should be made at once to secure it at that figure. The Directors reserve the right to advance the price of stock or withdraw the same from the market without notice

THE RECORD STUBS

Show One Amount And the Orders Another.

THAT'S WHAT THEY ARE TALKING ABOUT

Which Can be Seen By Reading the Following Testimony.

About the time we went to press yesterday the jury was made up to suit both parties, and the examination of witness began. The state called Commissioners Hague and Gunsenhouser, and Ex-commissioners G. I. Patterson and J. J. VanAuken, but none of them could help the state out, as they could not say as McIntosh had ever had anything to do with the forging of county orders or knew anything whatever of the matter. Four witnesses were examined, and then they adjorned till this morning, Thursday.

(The court room is partly filled with interested spectators, and there are a large number of witnesses kept out in the witness room.)

The state is represented by Prosecutor Rhodes, Mr. Bratton, D. R. Best, of Angola, and Judge McBride, of Indianapolis. Mr. McIntosh has for his attorneys, Judge McClellan, Judge Best of Minneapolis and Don. A. Garwood.

The jury as finally made up, is Charles H. Bangs, J. K. Stafford, Cyrus Olinger, Joseph Weller, Charles Husselman, Jason Childs, Eugene Carper, James Freeman, Jacob Olinger, Chireslean Welch, Sheldon Crook and Abrain Jennings.

Thursday morning, the first witness called was S. H. Hine, the present treasurer, who brought the book that contains a record of orders kept in his office. He had no particular evidence to give. After him came Miss Showalter, who had helped Mr. Sawvel in the office, when he was treasurer. A number of pages of the record were shown her and she recognized some of them as being in Mr. McIntosh's handwriting and some in Mr. Sawvels. But as this writing was done some years before the time they claim this conspiracy begun, it had little value, except to show that Mr. McIntosh had worked in the office now and then in the absence of Mr. Sawvel. It may also be used to show that she is familiar with the handwriting of McIntosh and Mr. Sawvel. Miss Showalter said she often saw McIntosh in the treasurer's office and in auditor's office, and he worked some in both. Knew nothing of his general business, but understood it was buying county orders. He was on good terms with the treasurer but knows nothing as to whether he was friendly with Borst and Dills. Remembered that McIntosh had sometimes copied from the record of protested orders. Miss Showalter here gave a part of the details of the business transactions and methods of keeping records in the treasurer's office. McIntosh sometimes helped to copy into the record, and similar work while helping the treasurer. She said she helped the treasurer, and McIntosh only worked there when extra help was needed.

Cross examined by Judge Best. She has been working for a time in the office of the Silver Dawn, but is not now. She added to what she already said that McIntosh worked only when extra help was needed, sometimes a week or so. He did anything there was to do. Don't remember when he was last employed. Her testimony was all through more in regard to the general work of the office, and did not in any way incriminate McIntosh

C. P. Hamman called. Worked in treasurer's office beginning spring of '91 for a week: In spring of '92, worked about a month, and that fall about two months. Often saw McIntosh. He sometimes did work in the office. I am fairly acquainted with his handwriting.

Cross examination. He stopped working in '94, the last time being the last week, of taxpaying in April. Miss Showalter and Geo. Probst also helped, and think Saxton and Ralston helped a little, at times when there was too much to do. I was not a regular employe, but an extra helper just as McIntosh and the others named were. I wrote out receipts. I and others sometimes made entries in record of orders.

Warren J. Mason, of Butler called. He had bought orders of McIntosh and some he showed the court were bad ones. No. 303 P. was for poor; 344 P. same, and payable to E. L. Metz; 1130, O was for stationery, and payable to W. Morris & Co; 1135 O, was for ditch, and payable to J. D. Rowley. The orders did not show, the year in which commissioners allowed the bill, although the other dates were filled in the lacking date would be "189—" (It looks a little queer that a business man should buy an order with this date omitted.)

Witness said he had never presented these for payment. He was asked if he knew these orders were valid. This was objected to, and then the defence took him. He admitted that McIntosh did not seek him to sell these orders to him, but that he had gone to ask if McIntosh could furnish him orders.

Mr. Wolfe, a clothing dealer, in Butler sworn. Was asked if he had been allowed an order for clothing for insane. Objected by Judge Best, as this has nothing to do with this case. Overrulled. Wolfe had no orders drawn in his favor for clothing. An order for clothing for insane, was read to him. He also said 1671 O drawn in his favor, he had singned the stub. It seems he had never furnished any goods, but that such an order had been forged and sold. He stated he had no such account against the county for either of the two orders. Did not know the handwriting of the order or stub. There were about half a dozen of these orders made in his favor, and all were for $48 or $49 and a few cents over. He said he never furnished the goods or was asked to do so, nor did he sign any of the stubs.

Nodine called. Did not sign the stub of and order shown him, made to him for work on the road. Had no claim for any such service. It seems this was another order made out of whole cloth.

Henry Stomm called. A blind woman lives with him and is supported by the county. First $8 a month, then $4 a month or $12 each quarter. He was showed an order of $12, 619 M., March 7, '93. The stub was not signed. He said the $12 was paid each time by the trustee. He filed his claim in the auditor's office. I got every time just $12 and no more. (It seems some of his orders had been changed from $12 to $42.) It don't look like my signature on stub. Nothing else was shown by him, and court adjourned to 1:30,

THURSDAY AFTERNOON,

The first thing afternoon was a discussion as to the right to compel a man to produce his private papers for inspection in court. The state head asked for a list of the county orders now owned by McIntosh, as the state wished to use this list to show that McIntosh was in a conspiracy, to defraud the county.

Judge McClellan went over to his office and got the papers in question and gave to Judge Adair, who gave it to Mr. Bratton the attorney for the state and he and his associates examined them. The jury was not in the room during this discussion.

The list of orders was then offered in evidence by the state. The list showed the list of orders he had bought between 1891 and 1896. This discussion lasted for some time.

Bratton explained the original trouble already reported last winter in regard to producing these lists of orders.

It is difficult for an outsider; to understand why this case is not pushed in a different way. The three prisononers here from Michigan City could settle all this in ten minutes and stop the expense. If McIntosh is guilty, they know it, and no one else does. Why call in scores of men who do not? If McIntosh is innocent, as everyone who has studied his case seems to think, then why persecute him longer? We do not believe the grounds for charges against him are stronger than in the case of Hague and Bateman, and that case utterly failed.

After the jury had come in, a long disussion followed on various points in the course of which Judge Best asked to have the case pushed in a more thorough way get at the matter, rather than in this roundabout way, by calling in men who know nothing about it. Judge Adair however, decided that the case was going on properly.

Nettie Chamberlain was sworn. Said she had bought county orders of him Nov. 25 1896. She let him know when she would get her money, and he wrote her as to when he would have orders for her. I found him in the auditor's office, as he had said he would be there. I told him I had the money ready to invest, But he said he had no orders just then. So I would go to bank and deposit my money. But he went into the treasurer's office and talked a moment with a gentleman there, and then came out and said he could get me the orders. He got the orders and I paid him the money. Order 397 P. Among these orders were some of those for ditch work made in favor of Henry Ahrens, and the one to W. H. Andrews & Co. noted in last winter's report in COURIER. It was for $64 for stationery furnished on order of the court. There was also a $68 in favor of Bowen, Merril Co. There were five order in all, offered in evidence. She paid him $489, for principal and interest of these orders.

Cross ex. by McClellan. She came over in response to a letter from McIntosh setting a day when he thought he could get the orders for her. That letter has been destroyed. She did not hear what Mr. McIntosh said to the gentleman. (The gentleman named was Perry Fair, who at that time was running the treasurer's office.) She was shown the letter she had written to McIntosh, when she was seeking to buy orders, and recognized it, or at least a part of it.

G. W. Werntz called, and some more orders issued in Coffinberry's time read to him. Again the date at which the bill was allowed by the commissioners, was not given, but showed "189-" Werntz had got the order and it was payable to him $61. But he cant say how the stub for that order was made to show $91 payable to J. M. Hook. He was asked as to $60 order signed G. W. Werntz. Werntz said he had a claim of $60 against the county all right. And the stub was all right. But order calling for $360 was read, but witness he knew nothing of this. No. 1415 M. bridges of $250 in part pay in Probst bridge. Says it is not his signature. And he then had no claim against the county, and knows nothing of this order. It was in the time when Sawvel was treasurer, and Coffinberry was auditor.

In cross ex. by Judge Best, said he had been in the county 42 years, and had known McIntosh back before the war. Knew he was in the army, and while he was teacher, and Co. Supt. etc. Knew he was sick more or less. I have sold him orders for many years. Got 100 cents most of time but in case or two got 98 cents. McIntosh often advanced money to me. He always dealt square with me and I was always fully satisfied.

W. H. McCrory called. Live in Auburn. Am machinist and worked for myself. My company was known then as the Auburn Iron Works. Order was shown him. I had a claim of $68.97 against the county. Stub shown. He had signed it in blank, as they said they were busy, and the deputy auditor Frank Dills cashed it. He supposes some one had left the money with the auditor to cash orders for such as wanted their orders cashed. It appears this order was changed to $98.97, after McCrory had signed the stub 1 When put this bill on file, I promised Dills I would sell him the order.

Perry Carnahan called. He was shown a ditch order $48.60 signed by his name, but says he knows nothing of it. Had no such claim.

T. A Carter sworn. In 1893, I lived in Auburn in the winter to March. An order was shown him, when it was suddenly discovered he had not been sworn. The stub was shown him. He said the signature was his. Thinks he had a claim against the county then. I did not get this amount shown on stub, $45.75. I think the $20, one is correct. I think another was $5.15 I never signed my name to the order. It had been changed since he signed it. After a question by the defense, Carter went out, but on reaching the hall was recalled by the state. He said he took his orders to Sawvel, and the latter cashed both the $20 and the $6, which were the orders he really drew.

O. C. Himes called. Lives at Cedar Creek. Was shown an order and said the signature on the stub is not his. Several such orders were read, but he says he only had a claim of about $10 against the county, and not of $60 as this order showed. Another time had a claim of $16.69, but an order of $46.89 but it appears that such orders were changed. The money he really got, was usually sent to him by mail from the auditor's office.

Geo. Walker sworn. Stub of order for $2 shown him, He said he did it. Has no claim against the county for the "repair of bridges;" Another stub of $2 and an order for $52. This issued by Auditor Coffinberry and Treasurer Sawvel, and it was paid in '96 by D. W. Fair, treasurer.

John B. Smith called. A stub of $10 order shown him. He said he had never signed it or had anything to do with it. Never worked on a bridge or had any claim against the county. The order called for $110 to J. B. Smith signed by him.

These were in names of Sawyel and Coffinberry and paid by Fair. I know J. M. Smith, but have not authorized any one to sign any stub (Most of these witnesses were not cross examined, as no one claimed the orders brought up, had ever been handled by McIntsh.)

Wm. Masters called. Stub of order shown him for making ditch. He looked at it a great while, but said he did not believe it was his signature. It was dated in Aug. '95. I had an order for bridge work about that time, but I forget the amount. Think it was about $30 but it was not like this, $42 for ditch work. Another stub of $73 for ditches showed him, but he said he had no claims and got no orders in '96 nor in '95. Nothing due me. (much time was spent in going over these things and asking witnesses ts to whether they had ever had such orders or any claims.

Leslie Strong called. Lives in Newville. Stub of $8 shown him. Thinks it was his signature all o. k. for $8. But the order was for $80.

All there orders and stubs were formally submitted to the jury and they passed it around and looked at it. Strong was trustee of Newville from '90 to '95. Was shown the order he had and sold, and asked if it had been changed, He said some one had added a ciphar to the $8, so as to make it show up $80.

Silas Simon sworn. Stub for $4.25 for roads. Not his signature. Had no such claim. Order had been raised to $54.25.

FRIDAY FORENOON.

The first witness called was G. W. Maxwell of Corunna. Says he had not served on the jury in May and June '94. Was shown a stub 878 M. for $6.20 Had no such order. The order showed $66.20 paid to Geo. Maxwell for services as juror, but receipt was not signed by anyone.

James McDowell sworn. Live in Auburn. It was found he was not the man wanted, as the subpœna had called for James "McDonald."

W. H. Fair sworn. He is a brother Ex-Treasurer Fair, but had one time been trustee of Butler township. A stub of order $55 shown him. Said it was his signature, but had no claim of that size for aid to poor. The order he said he never got. May have had some small claims against the county. (December term 1892.

Phil Plum called. Ex Sheriff. Stub of 1261 M, $189.25. He thinks the signature not his. Cannot say whether amount is right, as has lost his book in which he kept them. He had assigned this amount to Mr. McIntosh in April '93. Cross ex. He thinks this account all right, but cannot give details as has forgotton.

James W. Sherwood sworn. Stub for $7, not his. Had a claim of $7 for land taken for road, and I got the $7 from Borst. Order showed $70. The stub is signed "James W. Sherwood by B." by Borst we suppose. The order is given when Coffiberry was Auditor and Borst deputy. Never had that order, Borst said he would pay it, and so I took the money.

James A. Potter sworn. Lives in Auburn. Stub shown him. Don't remember as he had any claim against the county, but signature looks like his. Was shown another, and said he thought the signature was his. $19.80 for poor. The order showed $19.80 also. Another, also correct, was read to him. Both genuine as far as he knows, but the state claims both had been altered.

Samuel Hilkey sworn. Stub shown him $142 July '93. Not my signature. Never had that claim on ditch account, of $42 only.

John Groscop sworn. Knows McIntosh. Sold M. a county order that had not been protested. I got it of Dr. Nusbaum, it was his order, not mine. I received it of Nusbaum to sell it for him. Borst was auditor and that day, McIntosh was in the office also, I went to sell him the order. McIntosh did want to pay any interest, and it had not been protested. I took it back to Nusbaum. Then brought it back and handed it to Borst, who said it was all right. He wrote something on it, and I took it to McIntosh, and he gave me face of it and 50 cents interest. Don't know in whose name the order was. Did not take it to treasurer. McIntosh was at other end of counter 15 feet away when borst wrote on it. Cross ex. Did not know whether it was protested or not, but when I took it back second time to McIntosh I thought it had been protested.

Levi Smith and Wayne Zonker weer called and both denied signing stubs shown them.

COAST DEFENSES

The New York Chamber of Commerce has adopted the following resolutions:

"We, the Chamber of Commerce of the City of New York, being fully impressed with the urgent need of an increase of the Federal artillery force to properly insure the vast amount of property of our city against destruction and levying of contributions that would be visited upon us in case of war with foreign nations, do earnestly request and urge the President and Congress of the United States to take such immediate action as will provide a force of trained artillerymen for the proper manning of our sea coast defenses, and it is believed by us that the sea coast batteries requiring a numerical increase of the army of about 4,000 artillerymen is absolutely necessary to accomplish these purposes."

The Victoria is provisioned for eight months, and will search Daumandsoerr, Advent Bay, Cape Thorsdsen, Prinz Karl Foreland and possbly Danes Island from which point Andree's balooon ascended in July last in his attempt to cross the Arctic regions. On her return trip the Victoria will explore the southwest coast of Daumandsoerren.

Another Assassin.

Rio Janeiro special: A soldier of the Tenth Battalion attempted to shoot President Moraes with a pistol. The President was just landing at the Marine arsenal, after visiting the steamer on which Gen. Marcado Betancourt, Minister of War, then interfered and was himself stabbed. He died soon afterward.

Canadians Looking for Trouble.

Washington special: A new phase of the Bering sea negotiations developed when the State Department was advised that Sir Wilfred Laurier Premier of Canada, and Sir Louis Davis, Minister of Marine and Fisheries in the Laurier Cabinet, would come here to take part in the negotiations. The British Embassy is not advised, and it is understood the British Foreign Office is equally unaware of the fact that the chief officials of Canada would come to Washington to treat in person on the subject.

A Westerner Appointed.

The President selected Frank W. Mendell of New Castle, Wyoming, as Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the appointment will shortly be announced. Mr. Mendell is expected in Washington in a few days and probably will take the office about the middle of the month. He will succeed Judge Emory Best of Georgia.

His Aim Was Bad.

He was arrested and jailed. The parties to the affair have been separated for several months, the woman having applied for a divorce.

The London Times publishes a dispatch from Seoul which says that the Russian Minister has forced the Korean Government to dismiss its English financial adviser and chief of customs to put a Russian in his place.

WHAT SPAIN CANNOT DO.

American Minister Thinks Subjugation of Cuba Impossible.

Spain can do nothing for Cuba but tax it. The Government at Madrid, whether it be conservative or liberal, is powerless to formulate measures that will insure peace and prosperity in the island. This is the candid opinion of Hannis Taylor, who has just returned from Spain, where for the last four years he has been the American minister, conducting the delicate diplomatic negotiations which from time to time have arisen out of the Cuban war. Mr. Taylor has contributed an elaborate review of the present aspects of the Cuban question; and in the light of his experiences and observation, and as a result of his study of this difficult problem, Mr. Taylor expresses the conviction that Spanish statesmanship is perfectly impotent to solve the Cuban problem either promptly or wisely. The deplorable state of things existing in Cuba he characterizes as being not only shocking to humanity, but a special and grievous burden to the people of the United States. American commerce with Cuba—nearly $100,000,000 annually at the outbreak of the war—has been almost wiped out; American investments in the island have been nearly destroyed or rendered unproductive; many American citizens reduced to want, while some of the men have died in Spanish dungeons. But most of all, the question enters as a disturbing factor into our internal political affairs.

ALASKAN SHIPS IN.

Two Ships Arrive at Seattle with Some Gold in Cargo.

The steamer Portland arrived at Seattle from St. Michael's, Alaska, with $125,000 in gold belonging to the North American Transportation and Trading Company. The Portland left St. Michael's Oct. 18, stopping only at Dutch Harbor. It brought down confirmatory news of the release of the river steamers Alice, Merwin and Mare Island, which were caught in the ice in the Behring Sea off the mouth of the Yukon. The ice floes broke about three weeks ago, allowing the steamers to proceed on their way up the river. All the river steamers operating on the Yukon had left St. Michael's and the Portland was the last of the ocean vessels to leave. About 150 white people will winter at St. Michael's. The steamer Excelsior, Captain Higgins, has arrived at San Francisco, fourteen days from St. Michael's and eight and one-half days from Unalaska, the only intermediate port at which she stopped. She brought 8,000 ounces of gold, all belonging to the Alaska Commercial Company. No miners came down on her. The rush to escape from the gold fields exceeds the influx, and the indications are that a large colony will winter at Fort Yukon. It is not expected that much, if any, more gold will come down this season, unless some of the miners succeed in reaching sailing points by land routes from the interior.

SETS FAIR DATES.

American Association Fixes the Time for Western State Fairs.

The American Association of State Fair Managers held a brief meeting in Milwaukee. Dates for fairs governed by the association were fixed at the same dates as this year, with the advance of one day in each week. This leaves the dates as follows: Wisconsin, Sept. 21 to 26; Minnesota, Sept. 7 to 12; Iowa, Sept. 14 to 19; Indiana, Sept. 14 to 19; Nebraska, Sept. 21 to 26; Illinois, Sept. 28 to Oct. 3; Missouri, Oct. 5 to 10; South Dakota, Oct. 12 to 17; New York, Aug. 24 to 29; Ohio, Oct. 31 to Nov. 5; Michigan, Oct. 7 to 12.

Blames the Weather.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says: "The testing of retail trade is in progress, but results are remarkably retarded by long continued mild weather, and also by the fever in Southern districts. Even from that quarter some large orders lately received show better distribution than was yet expected. In spite of unseasonably warm weather, which greatly hinders retail dealings in winter goods at all points east of the plains, the large number of supplementary orders, with urgent pressure for quick delivery, make it clear that the sales in many branches have exceeded the expectation of dealers, so that replenishment of stocks is not yet finished. Meanwhile wholesale trade and orders to manufacturers have been smaller than when the rush was greatest, but have nevertheless been large for this stage, even in a year of general prosperity, for the payments through the principal clearing houses for the week have been 3.9 per cent larger than in the same week of 1892 and for the month 5.1 per cent. Western receipts of wheat are not quite equal to last year's for the week, but have been 27,969,288 bushels for four weeks, against 28,756,644 last year. The fall of cotton to 6 cents for spot and 5.8c for January, making the price the lowest since March 14, 1895, and not half a cent above the lowest for nearly half a century, is partly due to embarrassments caused by the fever, but also indicates the prevailing belief that the quantity to come forward is large. Wool markets have become quiet. Sales have been but 2,710,000 in Boston and at three chief markets 5,231,300, making the aggregate for the month 36,394,000 pounds, against over 66,000,000 pounds in September. The buying of iron and steel products, though smaller than of late, continues to keep works well engaged ahead and induces others to resume operations. Failures for the week have been 219 in the United States, against 270 last year, and 25 in Canada, against 40 last year."

Negro School Damaged.

Someone broke into the Sumner High School (for negroes) in St. Louis through one of the windows, went downstairs and turned on the full water pressure into the boiler. The water shot up through the steam pipes into the radiators and escaped through the valves. It soaked through the flooring and flooded the whole building. School was dismissed until it can be dried out. About $500 worth of damage was done to the plastering. There is no clew to the perpetrators, but it is supposed to have been done by someone in the neighborhood, as a protest was made when the school was built.

Spain Contracts for Cruisers.

The London Chronicle says: "We are informed that the Spanish Government signed contracts last week with an important firm of shipbuilders by which it acquires some cruisers fitted with quick-firing guns, which the firm had nearly completed for another Government, whose consent, presumably, Spain had secured to this arrangement. When the question of pecuniary recompense was raised by the constructors the Spanish Minister of Marine, Admiral Bermejo, represented that in the event of war the Spanish Government could count upon an internal war loan."

Saved by a Wife's Heroism.

But for the heroic act of Mrs. Barnett at Spokane, her husband would be dead now. She threw herself in front of him just as Johnnie Bull, an old-time gambler, shot at him. The bullet went clean through her shoulder.

Wrote an Improper Letter.

J. M. Hobart, who entered a plea of guilty in the United States District Court in St. Louis, was fined $25 by Judge Adams. He wrote a letter containing improper language to Miss E. L. Fritch.

More Light on Spanish Note.

A semi-official note has been circulated in Madrid giving a more exact indication of the contents of the Spanish note in reply to the communication of the United States on the subject of Cuba than has hitherto been published. The first part of the reply is a paraphrase of the latest note of the United States. It concludes with the assurance that Spain is animated by the same friendly feeling as expressed on behalf of the United States. The second part of the reply goes into elaborate details concerning the various filibustering expeditions. Spain, in concluding that portion of her reply to the United States, expresses the hope that this phase of the situation will be changed and that the United States will try to "prevent further violations of international law." Replying to the offer of mediation made by the United States, Spain says she hopes the United States will act "loyally and correctly in helping Spain to pacify Cuba, especially in view of the fact that such an extended form of autonomist government is about to be sincerely granted." The general feeling in Spain's capital is more hopeful of a peaceful outcome of the situation, especially since Marshal Blanco's arrival at Havana, as it is believed his presence will greatly further the solving of the Cuban problem.

PUBLIC LAND STATISTICS.

Marked Decrease in Homestead Entries for the Year.

Commissioner of the General Land Office Binger Hermann has submitted his annual report to the Secretary of the Interior at Washington. Compared with the previous year, it shows a decrease of 3,298 original homestead entries, aggregating 378,625 acres. In the entire disposals of public land there was a falling off of 5,370,406 acres. The area sold for cash reached 419,052 acres and miscellaneous entries aggregated 7,334,554 acres. There were patented or certified with the effect of patenting for the benefit of railroad companies, under Congressional grants, 5,101,969 acres, a decrease of over 10,000,000 acres from the previous year. An approximate estimate of the number of acres of public lands in the several States and Territories at the close of the fiscal year is as follows: Alabama, 532,339; Arizona, 54,400,211; Arkansas, 3,922,042; California, 43,841,044; Colorado, 40,037,204; Florida, 1,797,662; Idaho, 45,962,855; Kansas, 1,046,589; Louisiana, 845,020; Michigan, 322,431; Minnesota, 6,248,809; Mississippi, 441,220; Missouri, 497,764; Montana, 71,432,917; Nebraska, 10,669,353; Nevada, 61,578,586; New Mexico, 56,983,047; North Dakota, 21,385,293; Oklahoma, 8,105,238; Oregon, 35,892,318; South Dakota, 13,250,718; Utah, 44,205,070; Washington, 17,958,536; Wisconsin, 454,107; Wyoming, 49,341,588; Alaska, 369,529,600 acres. The figures above given do not include the vacant land embraced in military timber and Indian reservations, reservoir sites, tracts covered by selection, filings and railroad grants.

LABOR CRISIS IN BRITAIN.

Wage Reduction May See 200,000 Cotton Operatives on Strike.

Instead of improving the labor situation in England is getting worse daily. The engineers' strike is not yet settled, and now comes the announcement of another great war, involving 200,000 cotton operatives. Necessity compels the owners of mills to insist on a 5 per cent reduction in wages, a reduction which, of course, labor leaders resist. The latter propose to curtail production, but the owners won't have this. A cotton operators' strike on top of the engineers' strike would paralyze the greatest trade of the empire. The spinners and weavers will soon decide what they will do.

EXPEDITIONS LAND IN CUBA.

Molina have been defeated at Lomas del Pay, in Mantanza province, by the insurgents under Leader Betancourt. The Spaniards lost twenty-nine killed and seventy-four wounded.

GORMAN IS BEATEN.

Republicans Control the Legislature in Maryland.

According to Associated Press dispatches, an official count of the ballots cast in Maryland leaves no further room for doubt that the Republicans have control of both branches of the Legislature and that a Republican will succeed Arthur P. Gorman in the United States Senate. The Republicans have forty-nine members in the House and the Democrats forty-two. The Republicans also have eighteen Senators to eight for the Democrats, and a majority on joint ballot of seventeen. Among those most prominently mentioned as the probable successor to Senator Gorman are Alexander Shaw, former Congressman John V. L. Findlay, Postmaster General Gary and Congressman Sidney E. Mudd.

SENATOR GORMAN.

The result will make no immediate change in Senator Gorman's plans, as his term does not expire until March 4, 1899. Mr. Gorman will not be troubled by the howling of the traditional wolf of poverty at his door. He probably could draw his check for $3,000,000 without an indorsement. His money was made largely through lucky investments in some coal and iron lands in western Maryland. Mr. Gorman will be missed in the Senate. In one way and another he has been associated with this body at various times since 1852, when he entered it as a page. In January, 1880, he was elected to the United States Senate to succeed William Pinckney White. He took his seat March 4, 1881, and was re-elected in 1886 and in 1892.

COURTS MAY DECIDE.

Ohio Election Will Result in Numerous Contests.

The contest for the control of the Ohio Legislature will likely be carried into the courts. To the official returns of close counties protests have been made. It is proposed now to prevent the issue of certificates of election to certain legislative candidates if the courts will so order. Press dispatches say that if Wood County should finally be put in the Democratic list by the official figures the Legislature would stand 74 Republicans to 71 Democrats. While this is a mathematical majority of 3, it is a constitutional surplus of only 1 to guarantee the re-election of Senator Hanna.

It requires seventy-three votes or a majority of all the 145 members to elect a Senator on joint ballot. With only seventy-four votes in the Legislature the death of a Republican member or a Republican vacancy from any cause would leave the bare majority and if Wood County should elect a Democratic representative there would no doubt be startling developments at once in at least two other counties.

It is estimated that there were 900,000 votes cast, of which the deciding seventy votes is an infinitesimal per cent. The Republican plurality on the State ticket approaches 29,000.

ATE THEIR BOOTS.

Privations of Fugitives from the Famine-Threatened Klondike.

A party of prospectors who went to the gold region last August and after seeing the dangers of arctic winter returned to Vancouver, B. C., tell a pretty hard story of their privations and sufferings.

When the party left Dawson City they had only thirty pounds of provisions, all the citizens' committee of safety would allow to be taken from the general store. The snow had obliterated all traces of the trail, and the fugitives from the famine-threatened city staggered blindly onward for days, their last ounce of food gone.

BREAKFAST ON THE TRAIL.

After fasting three days and dragging out a similar period with an owl as rations for the entire party, they were reduced to the necessity of boiling and eating a piece of rawhide and the tops of their boots. At the river several dog salmon were caught by the Indians.

When they reached Dalton's camp two were mad from hunger. Dalton had gone, but a note on the door said that starving men could enter and take enough to relieve their sufferings. Thus the danger of death was removed.

"To add to the misery of the position," says one of the party, "every day sees the terrible satire enacted of 200 or 300 new arrivals."

CUBANS WILL NOT SURRENDER

Officers in Pinar del Rio Providence Issue a Proclamation.

The following official document has been issued by the Cubans from Pinar del Rio province to the world:

"We will never forget the bloody offenses of the sanguinary Weyler, representing the Spanish nation, his assassination of aged people, women and children, the persecution of our families by the brutal Spanish soldiery and the efforts of the chiefs to exterminate all the elements that compose Cuban society. All these have aggravated our convictions and we declare again that we will not accept anything but absolute independence. We must have a government of our own and an assembly of representatives according to our own constitution. We are sworn to liberty."

INDIANA INCIDENTS.

RECORD OF EVENTS OF THE PAST WEEK.

Old Resident Killed on a Railway Trestle—Rich Oil Strike Near Hartford City—Had His Head Cut Off in a Sawmill.

Killed on a Trestle.

Joseph Knowles, an old citizen and formerly a merchant of Logansport, was struck and instantly killed on the old canal trestle north of town by a Panhandle train. Kills Himself on His Wife's Grave.

John M. Buley, a wealthy farmer residing near New Albany, committed suicide on his wife's grave by shooting himself through the heart. In Lafayette, St. Mary's Catholic Church was pillaged by thieves. Tabernacle receptacles on the altar were broken into with chisels, decorated panels ruined and sacred vessels removed.

At Frankfort, Thomas Good, who was shot in a fight by Robert Lane, a neighbor, is dead. Just before dying Good sent for a magistrate and made affidavit that Lane had shot him without provocation.

He found Mrs. Kinnaman on the floor with nearly every shred of clothing burned from her body. Nothing is known about how her clothing caught fire, but it is thought an explosion of natural gas did it.

William Nelson, a Clinton miner, was fatally injured by the explosion of a keg of powder over which he was smoking.

Agents for commission houses in the cities are hurrying through the lower Wabash valley and the fruit country of southern Illinois buying the apple crop and shipping the fruit to cold-storage houses. The best apples have been bought for an average of 40 cents a bushel up to this time, and other varieties at from 20 to 35 cents, but the farmers are beginning to understand that there is a shortage in the crop, and the agents of the commission houses are not getting the apples as readily as they did.

PACE WAS TOO FAST.

Edward Langtry Drank Himself Into a State of Insanity and Died.

No one familiar with his history was surprised to learn that Edward Langtry, ex-husband of the Jersey Lily, had died in a Chester, [illegible], mad-house.

The troubles between him and Mrs. Langtry and which indirectly led to his death are of long standing. Like so many matrimonial failures the Langtrys' troubles began trivially. After the Quaker Irishman—for Mr. Langtry was the son of a Belfast (Ireland) Quaker—had married Lily, they took up their abode in a London suburb. One night Mr. Langtry met a baronet, just the way young husbands are always doing in novels. His name was Sir George—Sir George Chetwynd, Baronet of Grendon Hall. It was just a casual sort of meeting, but it changed the whole course of the young Irish Quaker's life. He invited the baronet to his home, and the latter and Mrs. Langtry became mutual admirers. The baronet insisted that the Langtrys should accompany him to his country place. They went, and for weeks had an enjoyable time. On her return home Mrs. Langtry became dissatisfied with her surroundings. She wanted a city house, and one was found for her in Belgrave square.

For a woman as young, beautiful and charming as Mrs. Langtry, it was not difficult to enter the charmed Belgrave square circle, and as her dinners were delightful, her house superb and her husband agreeably blind, it was not long before she enjoyed the distinction of being the most talked-of woman in that part of the English capital. Then came the crowning glory, and, incidentally, the start of the pace that killed—Langtry. She met the Prince of Wales.

He had seen a portrait of her by Millais, had admired the color, the pose, the simplicity of charm, and bought it. Millais called it the Jersey Lily, and the prince announced that he would be graciously pleased to meet the original Jersey Lily. From that moment began Mrs. Langtry's fierce period of hobnobbing with royalty.

EDWARD LANGTRY.

Her royal highness, the Princess of Wales, refused to recognize her, and elderly women cut her, but that made no difference, the Prince smiled and invited her and her husband to Marlborough House.

The only cloud on the Lily's horizon then was her husband's income, or rather his lack of it. At the pace she had set it was quite impossible to make ends meet. In an evil hour she offended the Prince of Wales. Her creditors, learning of this, began pressing her. What little money her husband had was soon spent, and the fashionable house in Belgrave square had to be given up. One by one the costly gowns and ball robes went to the pawnbroking philanthropists, and when the last one had gone and starvation had become painfully and vulgarly familiar succor came.

It was through the wife of Labouchere, the journalist. She alone had remained loyal in her friendship, and she begged her husband to do something to relieve the Langtrys' desperate situation.

"She can't work, she can't write, what can she do?" asked "Labby."

"Put her on the stage," said his wife.

"That's a capital idea," exclaimed her husband. "She can't act any more than she can write, but she is beautiful and has created a great deal of scandalous gossip; she will make a hit."

And Labouchere was right. Mrs. Langtry did make a hit. She could not act, but she tried desperately, pitifully hard, and the people went to see her, and the theater was selling standing room from the first night and the prince publicly forgave her by coming to witness her performance. With the return of prosperity and the nobility, the actress had no more use for her husband. She discarded him then and there, and since then her only interest in him has been to get a divorce from him. After many efforts Mrs. Langtry succeeded last May in securing a divorce in California. This the husband did not recognize. While for a score of years he never met his wife he still refused to agree to a legal separation. Death has now, however, set both free.

Edward Langtry was not of a type to be emulated. He left his young and beautiful wife to her own devices when they had been married only two years. While she was whirling in the vortex of London society, he was contentedly yachting and drinking around the coast. He was as indifferent to her as she was to him. The principal thing that can be said in his favor is that he steadfastly ignored the opportunity presented to him at the outset of her career of taking a certain position in society as the husband of the Jersey Lily. For some years back Edward Langtry had displayed unmistakable signs of the life or dissipation he had led. Originally he was good-looking and gentlemanly, but latterly he was bloated almost beyond recognition and the bridge of his nose had been broken by falling when under the influence of liquor.

Cane with a History.

Major M. M. Clotheier, of Whatcom, Wash., has a hickory cane, cut at Plymouth Rock, Mass., in 1621, by Nathaniel Pierce, who came over in the Mayflower. The cane has been passed down to the eldest son or daughter for many generations, and came to Major Clotheier from his grandmother, Sarah Mason, who made the 1,700 pound cheese which was given to President Jefferson.

She—I know I'm cross at times, John; but, if I had my life to live over again, I should marry you just the same. He—I have my doubts about that, my dear.

Friend—Well, Ethel, how do you like married life. Ethel (enthusiastically)—It's simply delightful. We've been married a week, and have had eight quarrels, and I got the best of it every time.

"Mein Fraulein, I love you!" said an impecunious German youth at a Hamburg ball. "Excuse me—yonder is my business manager," replied the young lady, pointing with her fan to her father.

Clara—How under the sun did Edith happen to marry Mr. Awkward? Dora—He was the bane of her life at every ball she attended, and I presume she married him to keep him from wanting to dance with her.

"I wonder," said a young lady, "why Hymen is always represented as carrying a torch?" To which an old bachelor sneeringly responded: "To indicate that he always makes it warm for people who marry."

Women somehow get over childish notions that men never outgrow. Some men celebrate the anniversary of every birthday as long as they live, while women abandon the childish custom almost as soon as they grow up.

The Londoner—Our universal providing houses are so large that a small boy has been known to outgrow the suit he bought in the rear of the shop while walking to the street door. The Chicagoan—Huh! "Madam," said a young lady to her preceptress at boarding school, "Mr. Belifair has come to take me out to drive. May I go, madam?" "You know, miss, that our rules do not allow it, unless you are engaged. Are you engaged to Mr. Belifair?" "N—no; not exactly; but if you let me go, I shall be by the time we get back."

"Do you believe in a third party?" asked old Dimming (referring to the political situation) of his daughter's beau, as all three sat in the parlor. "Well," replied the young man, who had not called to discuss politics, "I wouldn't have thought of asking you to retire; but since you mention it, Mr. Dimmick, I will say that it is the general belief that two are company."

"I don't believe I quite understand your contention," said the judge to the bicyclist; "it seems that the prisoner is a house-mover; that he was moving a small frame house at the time of the trouble; and that you ran into the house. I can't see what offense he has committed." "But, your honor," protested the bicyclist, "I rang my bell when I was half a block away, and he paid no attention to it."—Detroit Journal.

How Spurgeon Learned to Smoke.

It has never been stated yet how and when Mr. Spurgeon learned to smoke. It was while he was an usher in a boys' school at Cambridge, and became the pastor at the little Baptist chapel at Waterbeach. He used to stay with one of the deacons from Saturday to Monday. Admiring the set with which his host enjoyed his clay pipe, a "churchwarden" was promised him the following week, which offer he eagerly accepted. Said the old man: "He smoked his pipe, as he did everything else, thoroughly, then he said: 'I think I have had enough.' 'Yes,' I replied, 'I think you have,' and he thereupon left the inside for the outside of the cottage."

THE BRIGHT DAYS.

The bright days—they are coming, no matter what they say;
Beneath the snows of winter dreams the violet of May,
And sometime—in the future, in the golden years to be,
There'll be blossoms in the desert and the streams'll sing to sea.

The bright days—they are coming; there's a twinkling of the light.
In the storm that sheds its shadows on the starry brow of night.
And some time—in the future, when the clouds have faded far,
The sun will greet the morning and the night will claim a star.

The bright days—they are coming; in the cities, in the dells
There's a whisper of the music from the morning's golden bells.
And sometime—in the future, when the skies are bending blue,
There'll be angels at the windows and they'll kiss their hands to you!

MUSIC AND MATRIMONY.

"I am sure there can be no harm in it, mamma."

Maria's cheek was slightly flushed as she spoke the words, and something that was almost a tear gave a humid softness to her hazel eyes. She was a slight, delicate young girl, slender and willowly in her figure, and with a complexion that was transparently pale, save when some sudden emotion sent the crimsom tide over its surface. Her dress, of deep mourning was plain, and even course in its detail; but there was womanly taste down to the very arrangement of its somber folds.

"Harm? of course there is no harm," sighed Mrs. Cooper, mechanically raising her handkerchief to her eyes. "But who would ever have supposed that Harry Cooper's daughter would be reduced to giving music lessons, and to advertise for pupils in the daily papers? If your poor, dear papa had but lived?"

"But, mamma, only listen!" said Maria, taking up the paper; "it is nothing so very terrible, after all—'Wanted, a few pupils on the piano, at moderate prices. Apply by letter to M. C.,—— street.' You see, mamma, I have only given the initials of my name."

"It is just as degrading!" sighed Mrs. Cooper.

"I do not see any degradation," pleaded Maria, earnestly. "Since it has become necessary for me to earn our daily bread, where is the harm of availing myself of one of the accomplishments on which so much money has been expended? Indeed, mamma, I feel quite proud to think I can make my knowledge of music serviceable."

"Just like you, Maria—you never had the least bit of aristocratic blood in you!" groaned the lady in the widow's cap and bombazine draperies. "You are the very counterpart of your poor, dear father."

Maria, who had been gazing listlessly out of the window, suddenly sprang up at this moment.

"Mercy on us child! what's the matter?"

"It's the postman, mamma—he is coming here! Perhaps my advertisement may have been answered—who knows? This is the second day of its insertion, you know."

She ran lightly down-stairs, and opened the door before the red-armed servantmaid had got fairly across the kitchen threshold.

"M—— C——?" said the postman, inquiringly, as he sorted a note from his neatly-tied packets.

Maria caught the letter, and ran up to her mother's room with it, her eyes sparkling with animation.

"A real, veritable answer, mamma—my first pupil! What do you think now? See, I am to go to Fifth avenue this afternoon at 3 o'clock to give three lessons a week. The writer wishes to know if I consider three dollars a lesson enough. Enough! Why, mamma, I feel rich! Isn't it splendid?"

"Who is it?" languidly questioned the mother.

"The letter is signed C. Harvey—probably some lady who wishes her little girl to attain a knowledge of music, mamma. That is quite encouraging."

Mrs. Cooper, however, only heaved a deep sigh, and stitched industriously away at her sewing, with an ominous shake of her head.

As the hour-hand of the little gilded clock—one of the few relics they had ventured to preserve of more prosperous days—jumped toward the figure three, Maria arranged her pretty hair with even more care than she usually bestowed and donned bonnet and shawl, to set forth on her mission.

"Good-by, mamma."

"Good-by, Maria. I only hope you'll not be disappointed."

It was a little discouraging to Maria to have cold water sprinkled on her buoyant hopes in this sort of way, much as she was accustomed to her mother's shady views of life; but she bit her cherry-red lips violently, and winked back the tears that sprang to her eyes, trying to remember that she was no longer little Miss Cooper, but a dignified music mistress.

She rang the bell at No. — Fifth avenue, a handsome house, with a vestibule paved with mosaic marble.

"I wish to see Mrs. Harvey."

"Mrs. Harvey?" repeated the servant, with a puzzled air.

Maria handed him the letter.

"You see I call on business," she said, quietly. "I presume I am expected?"

The man, a gray-headed, respectable-looking old servitor, glanced from the letter to the young lady and back again, in some astonishment. However, he returned the letter with a bow.

"What name shall I give, ma'am?"

"No name; announce me as the music-teacher, if you please."

She followed the man through a wide hall to a door, which he threw open with the words:

"The music-teacher, sir."

It was a large, handsome room, elegantly decorated with pictures and crimsom window-hangings. At the further end stood a grand piano, closed, however, and on a sofa beyond sat a gentleman of about thirty, reading. He was dark and handsome, with black hair and a bronzed complexion, like that of a man who had spent many years in foreign countries. As Maria entered he rose with rather a perplexed expression of countenance.

"May I inqrire what has procured me this honor."

Maria blushed, stammered, and at length succeeded in faltering out the words:

"I am sorry to interrupt you, sir, but I called to give a music lesson, according to appointment. Will you please introduce me to my pupil?"

"You are——"

"I am the person, sir, who advertised under the initials M. C."

The gentlemen's turn for embarrassment had come now, it seemed, for he colored scarlet up to the very roots of his hair.

"I thought—I understood—that M. C. was a man?"

"No, sir," faltered Maria; "but I assure you I can produce the very best testimonials of my ability to teach music. If you will summon my pupil——"

Mr. Harvey laughed and loked even more embarrassed than before.

"There are misunderstandings all round," he said; "at least, it would seem so. The truth is—I hope it will make no difference, but—well, I may as well speak out at once—I am the pupil."

"You, sir?"

Maria stood dismayed, her soft, hazel eyes fixed wonderingly on the tall six-footer who towered above her, as he stood leaning against the mantelpiece.

"The fact is," said he, speaking rapidly, to cover this embarrassment, "my life has nearly all been spent in India, and now, on my return, I am anxious to acquire some of the accomplishments, which I have always coveted. And— But you are weeping!"

It was too true. The disappointment had been too keen for Maria's self-control, and the tears had begun to drop noiselessly on her bonnet ribbon. She brushed them nervously away.

"It is nothing," she faltered; "only the—the disappointment. We are poor, and had so counted on a music scholar, and—"

Poor little Maria! she fairly broke down here, and hid her face behind her crape veil.

"But I do not see why we should both be disappointed, I in a teacher, and you in a pupil," said the gentleman, earnestly. "Of course, you will not care to come here to give an old bachelor his lessons, but is there any good reason why an old bachelor shouldn't come to your residence? I assure you I'm ready to be convinced that you will make an excellent teacher."

Maria smiled through her tears. There was something very ridiculous in the idea of that stalwart, handsome fellow calling himself an old bachelor.

"May I come?" persisted he, as he moved toward the door.

"I will see if mamma considers it proper," she said.

"I should like to state the question to mamma myself," said the gentleman. "May I not accompany you home, and— perhaps—take my first lesson?"

Maria was half uncertain whether she was doing right or wrong, but the bright, frank eyes of the stranger pleaded powerfully in his behalf; so she said, a little ungraciously:

"Yes, if you choose."

Mrs. Cooper was considerably astonished to see her daughter return with red eyes and a tall escort, but after mature deliberation, she decided that Mr. Harvey might, with propriety, receive lessons from her daughter, provided that she presided over the piano. And so——

But what is the use of spinning a story into endless length when our whole purpose will be answered precisely as well by a peep into the handsome drawing-room in Fifth avenue, about three years subseqently.

A bright fire glowed in the grate, and beside the window sat Mrs. Cooper, stately as ever, with a baby grandson crowing on her knee, and making vain snatches at her gold spectacles. Mr. Harvey was at his writing table, busily engaged in letter-writing. The door opened, and a pretty, hazel-eyed young wife came in—our old friend Maria.

"Harry, I want to cut a pattern" she said, taking an old newspaper from one of the compartments of the open desk. "May I have this paper? It is about the right size."

He looked up into her brilliant eyes with arch tenderness.

"My love, I would rather give you almost anything else in my possession."

"Why?" she asked, leaning over his shoulder, as he unfolded the rescued paper and glanced eagerly over it.

"Because, dearest, if it hadn't been for this paper, I should never have had the sweetest wife in the world."

And he pointed smilingly to the tiny little advertisement in an obscure corner:

"Wanted, a few pupils on the piano, at moderate prices. Apply by letter to M. C., No. — — street."

Black Spots on Railways

It is a peculiar fact, but one well within the knowledge of railway officials, that no sooner is one person found killed upon the line than other similar fatalities may be expected at the same spot. More especially does this apply, says London Answers,, to places where are found the bodies of persons mysteriously killed.

A little over a year ago an aged man was discovered almost decapitated upon a Yorkshire railway. The discovery was in less than two months followed by the deaths of three others at the same spot—an out-of-the-way one, to which access was difficult—under similarly inexplicable circumstances.

At one place on a Midland line no less than four people were found within twelve months—all within ten yards of the deathplace of the first person killed there, and all having ended their lives with almost similar injuries, inflicted by the engine of the same express.

From these and similar instance railway officials have arrived at the conclusion that, however the first person is killed at any place, it immediately becomes a point of attraction to morbid-minded persons in the locality, who seek it out for the purpose of suicide, and now, when any two persons have been found dead in succession at one place it is a common practice to have the spot watched.

WHAT A HOG DID

Once in One of the Most Remarkable Cases in Missouri Criminal History The Principals Died Tragically But the Suit Goes On.

PHILOSOPHERS and people generally agree that there is something aggravating about a hog. He is the friend of no man but a lawyer. Many times has he grunted his lumbering way from primary court through intermediate legal processes, attended by a mob of lawyers and a mass of briefs, up to big wig and gown, only to find when all is settled that he, like the Court of Chancery, has devoured everything on the weary journey and left an empty platter and darkened home for the people who first led him into court. Every legal administrative unit has had its hog case. Missouri, says the St. Louis Republic, can boast of the best of all. This is the lawsuit of Winn vs. Reed, which is still grinding along in the Kansas City Court of Appeals, with little prospect of settlement until the court of last resort passes upon it.

A few years ago J. Newton Winn and Watson Reed were heads of two of the best families in Clinton County. Their large and highly improved farms adjoined, and the members of the two families intermingled constantly in the capacity of neighbor, host and guest. Both were men in the prime of life, good types of the country gentleman and modern farmer. Each was a perfect specimen of physical manhood, and in every sense a representative man. The suit that sundered the two families, almost ruined two estates and brought both Newton Winn and Watson Reed to untimely graves was begun in 1892. It originated over a hog. Winn lost a valuable blooded hog, and after a prolonged search it was found in one of the pastures on the Reed farm. Winn claimed his property, but Reed refused to give it up, asserting his ownership to the hog by virtue of having purchased it from a stock trader. Winn replevined the hog before Justice of the Peace Thomas S. Pearcy, before whom the first trial of the cause was had. Winn won his suit, but Reed took an appeal to the Circuit Court of Clinton County. In the CircuitCourt it quickly developed that the fight was destined to be fought with great bitterness. The wealth and station of the two families soon involved in one way or another all their immediate relatives. People throughout the county took sides. Reed took a change of venue, and the case was sent to Platte County. There it ran the usual course, and finally came to trial for the first time in the fall of 1893. Over 100 witnesses testified at the trial, which lasted a week. It resulted in another verdict for Winn. Reed swore that he would not rest satisfied with the verdict, and his attorneys took an appeal to the Kansas City Court of Appeals. Several months later the case was argued before the full bench of that court. On an affidavit of a juryman alleging irregularity the finding of the Circuit Court was reversed and the case remanded for a new trial.

Eighteen months elapsed before the now celebrated case again came to trial in the old court house at Platte City. This was in August, 1895. The lapse of time had not softened the bitterness of the two principals. Mutual friends tried to patch up a compromise without success. Neither Reed nor Winn would abate one jot from his position. Acrimony and intense personal hostility had succeeded the hasty anger out of which the suit sprang. When court assembled the entire community felt that the hog suit was of more importance than all other litigation on the docket. Nearly 200 witnesses had been summoned. Winn and Reed arrived, each attended closely by a bodyguard of personal friends and relatives. Great care was taken to prevent a personal encounter between the men. Judge W. S. Herndon was on the bench. The counsel were the same as at the previous trial. At every session of the court the large room was crowded to suffocation by the army of witnesses and friends of the principals. The speeches commenced one afternoon shortly after the court had reconvened after the noon recess. One of the counsel for Winn opened the argument and spoke about an hour. He was followed by John Cross, who represented Reed. Cross made a bitter speech. Particularly did he apply the lash to Berry Winn, a son of Newton Winn. Cross had just delivered a particularly scathing sentence reflecting on Berry Winn, when Newton Winn rose from his seat and, with a muffled exclamation, struck Cross a violent blow in the face. The blow sent Cross reeling against a juror. Before Winn could strike again Reed sprang to his feet, his face was as white as a sheet and his eyes glowing like coals. In both hands he grasped a Colt's revolver of the largest caliber. This he leveled at Winn and fired. The heavy bullet struck Winn in the abdomen, tore a hole entirely through his body and ripped up the carpet on the platform of the judge's bench. Winn reeled, but did not fall. He was unarmed, but seized a chair and made an effort to reach his enemy. Reed seemed to become a madman. He fired two more shots before he was overpowered. Within half an hour after the shooting Judge Herndon ordered the attorneys to proceed with the trial. With the plaintiff dying and the defendant in jail for murder, the hog case went to the jury and a verdict for the defendant was returned. Winn never lived to know that he had lost the case after having won it twice. On the following morning he died.

At the April term of court, 1896, Reed was brought to trial on a charge of murder in the first degree. Over three hundred witnesses testified and the trial lasted ten days. He set up two pleas—defense of his attorney and self-defense. After considering forty-one hours, the jury returned a verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree and fixed the punishment at ninety-nine years in the penitentiary. Reed was out on bond until January, 1897, when the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the lower court. The next morning Wat Reed presented himself to the warden of the penitentiary at Jefferson City and his career as a convict began that day. But his servitude was to be shorter than he dreamed. From the day he surrendered his health began to fail, and in just four weeks he was carried from the prison in a coffin. The case of Winn vs. Reed still grinds along in the courts. The verdict in favor of Reed found an hour after the murder of Winn was set aside by Judge Herndon. The court gave as its reason misconduct on the part of John Cross, Reed's attorney. This necessitated a new trial. Reed's attorneys appealed from this order of the court, and this appeal is now pending in the Kansas City Court of Appeals. As both plaintiff and defendant are dead, the cause is being carried on by administrators. The original issue has long been lost sight of. Both sides would be glad to let the case drop did not such action entail the payment of the costs, which now amount to many thousands of dollars.

SMALLEST BABY IN THE WORLD.

Chicago Youngster Six Weeks Old Who Weighs Only Two Pounds.

Mary Pollock, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Pollock, residing at 167 Clybourn avenue, celebrated the sixth week of her advent into the world on Friday by drinking a pint of milk and crying for more. Miss Mary is the tiniest healthy infant that lives in this country. A few hours after her birth she was weighed and the scales balanced at one pound and three ounces.

WORLD'S SMALLEST BABY.

The attending physician told her parents that there was absolutely no chance of saving the child. But in spite of this Miss Mary lived on and has grown from day to day. On Friday she weighed two pounds and cried as though her lungs were two pounds strong. She is being as carefully nursed as human skill can devise. Every one of her features is particularly well developed. A more beautiful specimen of physical babyhood would be hard to find. But she does look so little. Her fingers are of the size of a goose quill and her arms are so small as to resemble nothing ever seen in the way of human flesh. But her eyes are wondrous large and they are very blue, and if she keeps on improving in strength it is safe to say that she will dangerously use them some day. Local medical history has no record of a child weighing so more than did Miss Pollock when born living for a longer period than two days. The case is phenomenal.—Chicago Times-Herald.

SIR EDWIN ARNOLD'S ROMANCE.

Married a Daughter of the Land He Loved and of Which He Wrote.

The marriage of Sir Edwin Arnold, the English poet, editor and author, to a Japanese young lady, in London, while it may have occasioned considerable surprise among the staid old Englanders as a whole, did not cause much surprise among his more intimate friends, who predicted that the visits of Sir Edwin to the land of the Mikado would result in his bringing home a Japanese bride. The poet and his wife will make their residence in London. This is Sir Edwin Arnold's third matrimonial venture, and at least one more of them was of a romantic nature.

SIR EDWIN ARNOLD.

The name of Sir Edwin Arnold is closely linked with that of Japan. He is completely infatuated with the land and has visited it many times. The country seemed to lend an inspiration to his genius, and some of his most graceful songs are those in which he lingers caressingly over the women of the island empire. In 1890 he secured a house on the outskirts of Tokio, built in the ideal Japanese style, and there he lived for many months. It was here that his most famous production, "The Light or Asia," was born. He received many visitors from the Japanese people, and they were devout worshippers at his shrine. He learned the Japanese language in six months. It was said at this time that he was to be married in Japan, but rumor has it that the marriage was delayed, through his eldest daughter, who was with him, and who never took kindly to Japanese religions and customs.

Sir Edwin is not over popular in England. This is due mainly to the fact that he has expressed his love for Japan and, after that, the United States. It was this so-called desertion of his own country that very probably caused his loss of the poet laureateship.

How Mineral Waters Cure.

When a patient reaches a mineral water health resort he is examined by the resident physician and ordered to drink certain quantities of the water at certain times during the day; this is increased from day to day until the maximum quantity is reached. He is ordered to drink one or two glassfuls between breakfast and dinner, the same quantity in the afternoon, and a couple of glassfuls before going to bed. The patient is urged to take it whether he wants it or not. He may say that he is not thirsty, but that makes no difference; he must take it as a medicine. The quantity is increased until we have known thirty glassfuls per day to be taken.

A part of the benefit derived is because of the rest and change of scene; a part, perhaps, is from the small quantity of the salts and other bases contained in these waters (we are not speaking of cathartic or chalybeate waters), but the benefit from this source is very slight. The secret of the cure is in the quantity of the water taken. If the water be pure, free from organic matter, and taken in sufficient quantity, the results will be substantially the same, regardless of the "traces" of lithia and small quantities of sodium chloride and other salts. You can perform these cures at home with the ordinary drinking-water, if of good quality, if you will require the patient to take it in the same quantity as at the springs. It is very easy to add lithia if desired, but you must not lose sight of the fact that the quantity of water (not lithia) taken is the important thing. It acts by flooding the kidneys; by washing out the bladder with a copious, bland and dilute urine; by unclogging the liver and clearing the brain. The patient feels better from day to day; he is better. Irritable bladder is relieved, the kidneys act freely—are "washed out"—and many effete substances are carried out with the blood; this clears the way for the liver to act freely and normally, for there is an intimate relation between the liver and kidneys.—Medical World.

FAME WITH A FIDDLE

Triumph of a Young American Girl in Europe's Musical World.

Though only 17 years old, Miss Leonora Jackson has scored a great musical success in Europe and has accomplished something no girl hailing from this country has ever equaled. This is the winning of the "Mendelssohn stipendium," a prize coveted by violinists all over the world. Miss Jackson's father is a banker of Mud Springs, Cal. She is a protege of Mrs. Grover Cleveland, by whom she was sent to Berlin to study her favorite instrument under Joachim. Representatives from a score of countries annually trive for the stipendium. This year artists from all the great European cities and from various sections of this country were among the contestants. When Miss Jackson was declared the winner Dr. Joachim went into transports of delight, embracing his favorite pupil in the presence of a host of people. Since then she has performed at the Royal Opera House of the German capital in a special performance before the Empress and the court. Subsequently she appeared at many important concerts in Berlin and in some of the provincial towns of Germany.

MISS LEONORA JACKSON.

When she played in May with an orchestra accompaniment at the Anhaltish musical festival in Kothen, under the court conductor, August Klughaedt, she was then and there engaged for two orchestra concerts at Dessau next winter. A little later on she will fulfill her successive engagements in various orchestral concerts at Vienna, Leipsic, Munich and Hamburg. Wherever Miss Jackson has appeared she has sustained her fast growing reputation as a talented orchestral soloist.

In London Miss Jackson has lately played for Dr. Richter with marked success, and also at Mr. Henschel's. That eminent artist called the young American "a genius—one not found in thousands."

OLDEST BRIDE AND GROOM.

Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin F. Hunt, Recently Married at Watertown, N. Y.

Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin F. Hunt, of Watertown, N. Y., are the oldest bride and groom in America, Mr. Hunt being 87 and Mrs. Hunt being 91. They were married recently at the home of the bride, who was Mrs. John A. Sherman. Mrs. Hunt's first husband died in 1882. She inherited from him a large fortune. She and Mr. Hunt were friends fifty years ago, but he went to Western New York to make his fortune, while she remained in her native town. Mr. Hunt formerly lived at Brockport, N. Y. His son, Daniel T. Hunt, was formerly business manager of the Rochester Post-Express, later was postmaster of that city and is now engaged in business in Chicago.

TRIUMPHS OF ELECTRICITY

It is estimated that to about 2,500,000 persons in this country electricity contributes a means of livelihood.

The long-distance telephonic transmission now commercially carried on between St. Louis and Boston, a distance of 1,400 miles, is the longest telephonic service in the world.

The magnitude of the street railway mail service is shown by the fact that this year a full $250,000 has been appropriated for electric and cable mail service.

The capital value of the power developed by the Niagara Falls is equal to $1,000,000, and a large part of this perpetual capital is being made available by electric power.

The Postmaster General of Paris has, according to recent advices, prepared a bill for the gradual adoption of motor cars and omnibuses by the postoffice for the use of carriers in the delivery of the mail.

The locomotives of the Wilmington and Northern Railroad that are fitted with electric headlights have also been equipped with electric lamps, operated from the dynamo circuits, for the illumination of the cab gauges.

Berlin is to have a combination electric street railway, part of the system being an elevated road operated on the trolley system and the other portion an underground system, the cars running in tunnels. Electric power will also be used here.

About two years ago the Cincinnati Street Railway Company laid some steel ties experimentally, but nothing has been heard of steel ties for a long time. Recent examination of these ties show such good results that the company will now lay a considerable number of them.

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

Darkness.—Skepticism surrounds life with a fog, a precipice and the blackness of darkness forever.—Rev. George R. Wallace, Congregationalist, Chicago, Ill.

False Religion.—False religion is distinguished from true by this: The false speaks always of get, get, get; the true speaks always of give.—Rev. Frank Crane, Methodist, Chicago, Ill.

Universal Brotherhood.—No book of the Old Testament so closely teaches the lesson of universal brotherhood as does the book of Jonah.—Rev. R. S. MacArthur, Baptist, New York City.

The Truth.—Let us tell the utter truth to the world, the truth about itself and its sins, the truth about God and his goodness.—Rev. J. W. Waddell, Baptist, Philadelphia, Pa.

Self.—Self-realization is the highest function of man. The method is self-sacrifice. But it is to find ourselves that we lose ourselves.—Rev. A. A. Berle, Congregationalist, Boston, Mass.

Rewarding Virtue.—In human laws virtue, as the people understand it, is rewarded and vice punished. No country punishes what it declares to be right.—Rev. Dr. Gullette, Methodist, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The Down-Trodden.—There is too much suffering, too much degradation, too much poverty in the world. There is a real and serious grievance back of the labor demonstrations of our times.—Rev. F. A. Hinckley, Unitarian, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Old Folks.—I congratulate you who are old. All the sorrows of your life lie back of you; all the sins, weaknesses and pains are back of you, and each step is one step nearer to your crown of happiness.—Rev. J. B. Graff, Methodist, Philadelphia, Pa.

Mistakes.—There are unfortunate tendencies in churches, the same as everywhere else. Churches are made up of human beings, and mistakes may be made in them as well as out of them.—Rev. George C. Adams, Congregationalist, San Francisco, Cal.

Good Government.—Let good citizens work as hard for good government as gamblers work for dollars and political influence, and there will be no need of constitutional amendments and the people would trust their legislators.—Rev. Alfred W. Wishart, Baptist, Trenton, N. J.

Capital and Labor.—Workmen have rights that should be respected, and so have capitalists. There should be no quarreling between them. They are necessarily joined together, and no man or organization should try to put them asunder.—Rev. R. Harcourt, Methodist, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Clergy in Politics.—For years my conviction has been daily deepened that Christian ministers have failed to suitably qualify the men in our churches to help on the kingdom of God by the proper performance of their political duties.—Rev. Charles Pelton, Presbyterian, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Spirit and Matter.—Since, then, the union of spirit and matter, to form the composite man, is in nowise subject to man's choice; neither is his preservation in existence, which, after all, is but a continuation of the creative act.—Rev. Father J. J. Baxter, Catholic, Boston, Mass.

Dulusion.—At midday, while the brilliant, warm sunshine bursts about me and envelops me, tell me that I am deluded, and that I grope in Stygian darkness, and I shall come nearer believing you than when you say there is no God.—Rev. C. B. Adams, Congregationalist, Philadelphia, Pa.

Extravagance.—Many church members pay more for tobacco than toward the support of the Gospel. Many would pay more to see a bicycle race than to help bring about the millennium. Many will give pennies to missions and spend dollars for jewelry.—Rev. C. A. Perkins, Baptist, New Brunswick, N. J.

Heavenward.—We may make mistakes, we may blunder, stumble, tumble, like the child learning to walk, like the person taking the first lesson on the bicycle, but the earnest question asked of the Lord, "What good thing shall I do?" is the first step toward heaven.—Rev. John Goddard, Swedenborgian, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Coming Fiction Heroes to Be Patriots

"Patriotism of the right sort will be the master passion of the coming hero," writes "Droch" of "Heroes in Fiction," in the Ladies' Home Journal. "It furnishes an endless scope for the highest kind of courage combined with that mastery of men that is leadership. And yet how seldom does it creep into current fiction, except in the spurious garb of rhetorical bluster or the melodramatic account of physical heroism in battle! There have been many attempts in American stories to depict the perversion of patriotism that shows itself in ring politics and corruption—but the plain citizen, doing his duty simply and at a sacrifice, is hardly alluded to. And yet the country is filled with him, as has been shown in every supreme test of its temper on a moral issue. As Lincoln often said, you can always count on the 'plain people.' Perhaps if more ideals of citizenship were depicted in popular fiction there would be more of the real thing in actual life."

Two Hours Was Enough.

That some men require only a few hours' sleep out of the twenty-four is certain, but Alexander von Humboldt must have been a marvel in this respect, as he was in others. He told Max Muller that, as a young man, two hours' sleep was all he wanted, "but as I grow older I need four. When I was your age," he said to Muller, "I simply lay down on the sofa, turned down my lamp, and after two hours' sleep I was as fresh as ever. It is a mistake to think that we want seven or eight hours of sleep." Humboldt died at the ripe old age of 81.

Dampness is unhealthy, but it is better to live with a crying man than a profane woman.

CRACKED THE SAFE.

Monday's Daily.

Last night or rather during the dark dismal hours of the morning, the safe in the office at the H. E. Trout livery barn was opened and relieved of what change was in the money drawer. The work was done by some one who was entirely familiar with the situation, and as Mr. Reynold's who has been employed at the barn during the past four months, is missing, he is supposed to be the robber. Setting next to the safe is a desk which contains several drawers. In one of these tools are kept to do repairing about the barn. Such as a hatchet, screw driver, etc. This drawer was opened and with the screw driver the top drawer was pried open, but it contained nothing but a couple of caps and a pair of driving gloves. The outer door to the sate was not locked and this was easily opened. The hatchet was then used in smashing in the door to the cash box. From the looks of the door only one stroke was neccessary. Here was a small sack which contained about $15 in change. Then on Saturday Reynolds had collected about $12 from the sale of fruit trees which were left there, and about $3 for livery hire on Sunday. This making a total of about $30 he was not satisfied, and took Willis Jenner's overcoat and gloves and one of Gene's hats and bid adieu to the Trout livery establishment. Sheriff Stroh was notified of the theft and has been keeping a lookout for him. But he has had many chances of escape, as the morning trains run in his favor.

A Life Saved.

Marvelous cures of throat and lung affections are made daily by Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. Miss Annie Swan, Petersburg, Va., writes: "My brother was attacked by a bad cough and cold, and it was thought he had consumption. Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup was used, and to our great surprise it made him well and hearty. There is no better cure in the world than this Syrup." Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is sold everywhere for 25 cents.

JAMES WEEKS.

James Weeks, living east of town, died yesterday, Sunday, at 1 p. m. He is an uncle of Ed. Weeks and a well known and respected citizen. The funeral will be at Union Chapel, near his home, tomorrow at 11 a. m. Services by Rev. J. D. Brosy of the Lutheran church.

REVIVAL SERVICES.

Rev. Guild announced yesterday that revival services would commence at the M. E. church next Sunday. Every effort will be put forth to make these meetings very interesting and profitable. We hope they may result in much good.

BUTLER.

Lewis Henning our hayman has purchased Job Linkenfelters dwelling on south side of Oak-st and will fit it up for a residence.

Saturday was quite a busy day at Butler, and our merchants report good sales of staple goods.

Walter Shide one of Butler companies' trusted employes, took a long trip through northern Ohio last week to test one of their '98 wheels. He reported deep mud and awful roads across the black swamp country. He reached home last Saturday night about 8 o'clock, about all broken up. The wheel carried him safely home however.

Joe Funk has bought the Geo Handy dwelling at the west end and will fit it up for a home.

—Hindoo wizard has been holding the boards at the opera house the past week to the great amusement of the small boy and his larger brother and sister.

Much inquiry is being made for Butler property and sales are made almost daily at increasing values.

I notice that several of our young men are applying for a liquor license. Of all the avocations offering an opening there is none so degrading and demoralizing as the running of a saloon. Why don't the good people of ur town and township follow the noble example of those of Steuben county and defeat these applications and save these good yonng men from themselves. After they had seen the folly and madness of their course fully demonstrated by a year or two among good men, and in any honest calling, they would rise up and bless these good people all rest of their lives for the good they had done them.

ARKANSAS LETTER.

Stephen Masters formerly of Corunna, but now of Charleston, Ark., sends in a remittance for the COURIER that pays him to Feb. 18, 1900. How is that for good pay? Such a man's slumber will be peaceful and his future bright. But we quote a part of his letter showing more fully the conditions down there. After speaking of two years of drought and consequent crop failures, he adds:

Times are hard in Dixie. No foreign famine will help us to any of that boasted McKinley prosperity. With a small crop of cotton everywhere it is the lowest price ever known. The higher price of wheat is but another disadvantage to those who have their bread to buy, as a majority do down here. The fall has been so dry that the wheat that has been sown has much of it failed to come up. We had a fine rain last night which may do it some good, but it will take much more to soak the ground to any extent. We have had but one real soaking rain since early spring, that was August 8 and 9. Water has been ascarce commodity this fall with the most of folks. We have had enough for own use though, but many of our neighbors are not so fortunate. Health has been very good around here, but it has been very sickly along the streams and low lands.

TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION.

The DeKalb County Teachers' Association will meet in the opera house at Waterloo, Nov, 26 and 27. The 27th is "Institute Day," at which all teachers are expected to be present. All are urged to attend both days as these meetings are valuable, Supt. Coe and other educators will be present.

CHANGE OF FIRM.

Yesterday a deal was consumated between Frank Fanning and the Rollins' whereby Frank becomes sole owner of the Princess Store. They began to invoice the stock at once and in a few days all will be in readiness. Frank will be glad to see his friends in his new place of business. He will probably sell his barber shop.

HILDA MAY HEBEL.

Hilda May Hebel only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Hebel was born on May 19, 1895 and died Nov. 8, 1897. She was buried in the morning Nov. 9, in Woodlawn cemetery. Her age was 2 years, 5 month and 20 days. Rev. George Engleman officiated.

Asleep in Jesus blessed sleep,
From which none ever wakes to weep;
A calm and undisturbed repose,
Unbroken by the last of foes.

Asleep in Jesus! peaceful rest.
Whose waking is supremely blest;
No fear, no woe, shall dim that hour
That manifests the Saviior's power.

The Record Stubs.

MONDAY FORENOON.

The time was taken by reading the rest of the list of McIntosh's orders.

MONDAY AFTERNOON.

W. H. Ernst sworn. I was employed by the county, to examine the records of Sawvel's, Borst's and Coffinberry's time. I became acquainted with the methods employed in keeping accounts in these offices. A register of receipts and expenditures is kept in each office. He gave the method in detail, but it was not of value in this case so far. The treasurer paid out money on warrants issued by the auditor. If money is allowed by Judge, then the county clerk issues a cerficate and on this, warrants are drawn by auditor. Orders are in a bound book, 1000 in each book. Then the treasurer has a "Record of Protested Orders" in which is a record of each order presented to the treasurer, when presented and protested, when paid, and how much interest paid on the same. He explained that an order first appears on the Commissioners' record, then on the treasurer's book of orders protested and afterwards paid. Examined Mr. Sawvel's and Coffinberry's accounts. I examined the Commissioners' allowances to see if the alowances had actually been made by the Board and not allowed by the auditor alone, without authority. If auditor had on his own authority drawn any orders that the law did not give him the right to draw. I classed as "unauthorized." I ascertained how many of these orders had no bills allowed by the Commissioners. The officers make a monthly statement, of funds, etc, and and twice a year make a settlement, that is, at the close of taxpaying in April and November. I was engaged in January and part of February on Sawvel's and Coffinberry's term. Later I was employe to examine Borst's accounts. The Coffinberry warrants were about all in and paid, but the most of Borst's were still out and unpaid. Orders generally were paid at about 18 months after issue. I became acquinted with Mr. McIntosh. He was in the room one day, and said he was familiar with the books and wou d give me any point of information that I might need. G. M Ralston was deputy auditor, Dills, was second deputy under Coffinberry and deputy under Borst. Borst had been deputy under Tomlinson, Walter and Coffinberry. I found orders without any allowance by commissioners and some that had been changed. I made discoveries, before I actually began work, and verified them by examination. These irregular orders, in Coffinberry's time were signed by his name. In latter part of Sawvel's term he was paying the Coffinberry orders, and in first part of Fair's. In the latter part of Fair's he was paying orders issued by Borst.

After some argument as to allowing a part of his testimony the witness proceeded. They spoke of the different classes of orders, like "exhibit A" "Exhibit B," etc, that we had published fully in the COURIER last spring, He said "E" embraces orders, that one amount is named in face and a different amount on the stub. "C" "A" etc were submitted as evidence. The questions and answer were rapid and difficult to catch, but the substance of all is, that Mr. Ernst had been employed 8 or 10 weeks in going over the books of auditor and treasurer, and in so going over them he had become very familiar with their contents. He thought a person going over the books often would find it easy to see what was going on. He had been assisted in this examination of the books, by B. C. Robbins, Cashier of the Farmers Bank and by W. H. McIntyre, former cashier of the First National Bank both skilled accountants. The various county officers also had given him a little assistance now and then. McIntosh did not help him but had once remarked to him that he had done work off and on in these offices and was familiar with the books. McIntosh had come to him to see about a certain order he had bought, and about the regularity of which he had a doubt. They looked the matter up, and when it was found to be straight, McIntosh seemed to feel relieved. On cross examination Mr. Ernst admitted to both Judge McClellan and Judge Best, that he did not know that McIntosh had done any wrong, or acted improperly in regard to any of the matters. He had simply thought he migt have found out had he tried—or some words to that effect. He and the attorneys also discussed "exhibit E." This it will be remembered was the list we did not publish last winter when we did the others because it had been found that about half the orders in this "list of unauthorized orders," were good. The bill and clerk's certificates authorizing them had not been found by Mr. Ernst. but were afterwards found by the commissioners and other offices. His attention was called to a number of orders, now proved good. He admitted he may have made some errors but that his list was correct bills for the orders or failed to find them. He said in answer to a question. "I know of no act of Mr. McIntosh, as shown by the records that will bring him into connection with these frauds."

Re-direct by Judge McBride, Mr. Ernst thought a man who worked a good deal in these offices could have noticed the difference in the orders and the stubs, but admitted it might depend on circumstances. He occupied the stand all the afternoon, but seemed not much tired at last. After reading a record of some orders, court adjourned till morning.

TUESDAY MORNING.

Ossie Bachtel sworn. I know G. W. Clayton of Chicago. He is a dog trainer or deals in dogs. Saw him wi h Borst and Dills. An order for $38 was shown witness. It is payable to Clayton for ditching. I do not know that Clayton did any ditching. He was here about a year ago. I do not know that this order was given in payment for a dog. Attorney for the state alluded to this order as one that McIntosh had sold to Nettie Chamberlain, though the defense to deny its being in the list.

A number of other orders were here read by name and number and put in evidence. Among them were the salary orders of Ralston and Stroh, one of the latter being endorsed. "No claims paid" though just what that had to do with the case was not explain d.

Here the state rested, having finished the evid nce on its side.

The defense then asked for an adjournment till noon to give them the time to examine the list of orders and stubs that had been put in evidence, as so far, they had not had them. This was granted and court adjourned till 1:30.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

The state began to call witnesses. A list was called, and those present arose and were sworn. It was decided that those witnesses should remain outside the court room except the two newspaper men, Gordon and Barns. This was changed so that all remained in the room.

Judge Best spoke to the jury for the defense. They deny every charge made against defendant. He will show that the various transactions with McIntosh were all right and honest. He will show that the Nusbaum order had been protested properly; that Nettie Chamberlain bought her orders orders of Fair and gave Fair the money. He would show that McIntosh paid back the money he had received for that part of the $1063 order the treasurer cashed for him, that was involved in the Barth ditch, for though it was good, it was in court and not likely to be settled for some time, McIntosh had also refunded the interest he had received on the Stroh orders as soon as he saw it was in dispute, although he was probably entitled to it. He also alluded to the efforts McIntosh made to get a full knowledge of the character of the orders he held as soon as it became known that there were bad orders out. Then he spoke of the efforts McIntosh made to get Borst to make good the bad orders McIntosh held. If McIntosh had been in the ring he would not have done this, and could not. He would prove that two-thirds of the orders that Ernst had put into "Exhibit E" as "unauthorized," were in fact good orders, found to be good by a subsequent examination by the commissioners. He would, to further show the defendant's well known honesty, show how on buying some orders of J. W. Baxter he had by an error in reckoning, not paid Baxter as much by $10 as he should, and he went back and paid that much more.

John W. Baxter sworn. Was county clerk for four year. Have known McIntosh about 30 years. Have seen various persons, officers and other, in the office of the court house for many y ars, some being in the offices nearly as much as McIntosh. He remembered the paying of $10 additional by McIntosh. He was one of those who thought McIntosh should have the interest on the Stroh orders, but as others doubted this, McIntosh paid the interest back or a part of it, Stroh paying the rest. At the time the contract with Miller was made, I drew it up. McIntosh did not know the orders were bad, but was beginning to fear a part of them were, felt pretty sure at least two were. Afterwards it was found that a number were bad. McIntosh's reputation for honesty and integrity are good.

James H Rose sworn. Am county attorney. Have been a lawyer for 11 years. Was with the Commissioners and other offices a good deal during this investigation. Generally attends the sessions of the Board. Had helped them more or less to examine disputed claims. He spoke of assistance given Mr. Ernst in looking up matters, by Albert Robbins, Bert Robbins, W. H. McIntyre Al. Bishop, G. W. Lackey, and the work by the commissioners. Went over Ernst's list, they found in "exhibit E." that about two-thirds were all right, having allowed bills to show for them or certificates of the county clerk. Asked if he found anything to make him suspect McIntosh, said "I did not." Also said the standing of McIntosh was good Thinks one reason Ernst did not get the "Exhibit Ee" correct, that certificates or bills were either overlooked, or did not come into his hands.

H. E. Coe, County Superintendent, and G. A. Bishop Ex-Clerk sworn, and both agreed as to the integrity of McIntosh.

Isaac Hague called. Am county commissioner. Have been auditor. He, J. H. Rose and Boland examined Ernest's report. The other commissioners helped also. I spent extra time later. We took about 15 days to go over the orders and allowances. We found many orders that Ernst thought bad, that had been allowed by the Board, and the county really owed. Of the $9,000 in Exhibit E. we found $6000 good. Ernst found against Borst $7250, unauthorized. But Ernst had failed to find many bad orders, especially of Borst's. At least nearly 40 of the orders in Exhibit E. were found to be good, and some of them had been allowed by the board. He was emphatic that McintosH's reputation for integrity is good. Asked if he found in all his examination of the records, anything showing McIntosh had done a wrong. "I did not." Here various orders were offered in evidence. On cross ex. was asked if he looked for anything against McIntosh. Ans. I looked for everything. We found some of his handwriting. Thinks that in Borst's term most of the orders agreed with the stubs, and did not disagree as in Coffinberry's term. Bad orders seemed to follow a certain line of allowances. The chief object of going over the list was to find exactly what the county really owed. Ernst had told us he would not try to sift out those the county really owed. He also explained that in the old way bills considered in vacation were marked allowed, and the auditor drew orders. Then in regular vacation these allowances and orders would be confirmed. In going over Ernst's lists we found some bad orders he had not found. Coffinberry's indebtedness was $14,000, but Ernst had found but $9,000.

Adjourned to 8:30 to-morrow.

WEDNESDAY FORENOON.

Hague continued. We found $14,300 against Coffinberry, some being doubtful. The sheet I have was prepared for settlement with the bondsmen. "Schedule E" was about $9,000, we made only some over $3000 to be bad. Some had been allowed by commissioners on the "O. K." of at least two of the members of the Board. Some were shown to be authorized by a certificate of the clerk of the court.

M. Boland sworn. Is now acting auditor since March 8. Have been county recorder eight years, and has filled other town and school offices, and was postmaster. Have been more or less into all the offices and helped more or less in several of them. Was on the bond of Fair and Borst, and helped in looking over the books, when we found there was trouble Went over the treasurer's books. And again after Ernst had finished we went over them to see if any of his list was good, for, if they were good, we the bondsmen would be saved that much. We found some of "Exhibit E." that were good, Ernst had said that he had not made himself certain on this list but supposed the Board would go over it. Am acquainted with the handwriting of McIntosh. I never found anything that I thought possibly McIntosh was connected with. This was the Platter order in McIntosh's writing. Platter thought he never had that order. But we found the bill and stub signed in Platter's handwriting, and Platter then said it was all right and he remembered it. Found nothing else that appeared suspicious.

Cross-ex by McBride. McIntosh drew some of the orders. Remember where he had signed the stubs of some orders of his. Ernst had told him that part of "Exhibit E." might be found to be good. Only 4 or 5 cases in Borst's term when stubs and orders showed a different sum. We found about $8,000 in Borst's time, of which $2,000 had been paid. The commissioners ordered the treasurer not to pay outstanding orders of a list furnished that were proved to be bad. This left only $2,100 for Borst's bondsmen to pay, the holders of the bad orders having to lose what they held.

M. F. Long called. Am county clerk. Am acquainted with McIntosh. When it was found there might be bad orders, McIntosh came several times to see my list of certificates of allowances by the cour. We found twe or three had no certificates, but others were all right.

Blanche Shilling sworn. Have been deputy clerk for five years. Am now assisting in the sheriff's office. Remembers when McIntosh came in and asked to see bills on which court certificates were issued. Helped some in the work of looking over. Same testimony as Long's.

R. D. Tefft sworn. Lived here 23 years. Been about the court house almost daily. Had my office in court house 6 years. Work mainly in abstracting and collecting allowances for parties who have not collected their own. I am continually called on to examine books in all the offices. Never detected anything wrong that McIntosh had done. My attention was never called to any wrong doing.

Boland recalled. Brought records. As to the Platter order for $49.50 Platter thought it had been raised from $42. But it was found that Platter had a bill of $42 allowed Oct. 6, '90, and again on Dec. 1, '90, an order of $94 50. Both orders were signed by Platter on the stub, and when the books were shown him, he remembered it.

Dr. Nusbaum sworn. Groscop came to him to borrow $50. Gave him the $60 order to get cashed so he could have the money. Groscop paid the difference. Showed note already spoken of in COURIER. I have not talked with Groscop or with Andy Baxter, from whom I bought the order. (It was decided to subpoena A. J. Baxter.) Next day after the Groscop matter, Borst came wanted $200 to put in on the celery farm of his deceased father in Ohio. I let him have it. Think I got the orders of Baxter about May.

C. E. VanAuken called. Have been county surveyor 4 years. Asked when his office had expired, said he did not know as it had expired yet. This caused a universal smile. McIntosh came to him, and asked if some ditch warrants he had bought were authorized so as to be good. I think he had no warrants with him, but a list of orders he was anxious about. I searched the records and found some had no authority.

Frank Dills sworn. Thinks the forging was going on up to the time Hines got the treasurer's office. The offences by him and Borst began in Borst's time. I never knew the amount No understanding between me and Coffinberry or Borst. I had nothing to do with Coffinberry's forging, I had discovered that he was in it. Borst and I had no division or deal. Each was doing business for himself. I sold my make of orders to different parties, some to McIntosh. I bought McCrory's order, suppose it was allowed. I asked McCrory to let me have the order. McIntosh bought a good many orders. Don't remember how McCrory signed the stub whether before or after the order was filled out. I sold bad orders to McIntosh. I sold about a third to McIntosh. The treasurer took many of them and cashed them with money people had left with him. I would merely tell McIntosh I had an order to sell and he would take it. Good and bad looked just alike. McIntosh left money at the office for us to buy orders when he could not be there. We bought and gave him good orders also, as well as bad ones. He always paid 100 cents on all orders. Asked if McIntosh had any knowledge that any orders Dills sold him were bad. Ans. He had no suspicion of anything wrong Question. He has any knowledge of what was going on? Not a thing. I did nothing to conceal it from him, I merely sold them to him good and bad. McIntosh never received anything from the sale of these orders from me. Never had a word of conversation with him about these orders, and never in any manner participated in any manner in these frauds.

Cross ex. by McBride. I began working under Robbins as auditor helping make duplicates. I helped Tomlinson about two thirds of his term. I went into the office when Coffinberry began his term. Coffinberry at once began to have us make bad orders. He made no effort to conceal the frauds from us, Coffinberry did no work. Would come in a few minutes two or three times a week. Borst I think found it out before I did, Coffinberry's plan was changing or raising orders. After a time they were paid and came back. I could see that changes had been made, Borst and I soon began to follow suit, each on his own hook. We each, Borst, Coffiberry and I, raised orders, each independent of the other. Do not know as to Fair, whether he raised orders or not. Was shown the "Dog" order on the ditch fund. Said he drew it. The man never did any ditching. He was shown others, and admitted he had drawn some of them. Some had part in Borst's and some part my writing. Cannot say as to many of the orders. Sometimes McIntosh took a receipt for the money he left with us. Sometimes not. He had no knowledge of what we were doing. He sometimes made out orders for the auditor. Borst and Sawyel made the annual settlements, I do not know whether McIntosh helped them or not, as I didnot help at that. Repeated that he and Coffinberry never talked over these forgeries or agreed to any division of the money. The last times McIntosh had charge of the office was during campaign when both of us wanted to go, say once a month. Don't think this happened many times in Coffinberry's time. Redirect by Judge Best. C. P. Hammon and Geo. Ralston sometimes helped us instead of McIntosh. Adjourned till 1:30.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

A. J. Baxter sworn. He had sold to Dr. Nusbaum a number of orders drawn in favor of parties who had been allowed damages on a new road opened by their land. He named as many as he could remember. I sold Nusbaum as much as he wanted, say $280. It was in summer of 1896. I sold the rest to McIntosh. Don't know which orders either bought.

F. A. Borst sworn, I have resided in Auburn since Dec. '82. Deputy auditor 12 years and auditor two years. There were orders issued in Coffinberry's time that had stubs and face different. I wrote some and Dills some. Some were written without authority, Coffinberry came to me at first saying I want to draw an order for a friend in Garrett, or sometimes say he needed the money himself. I wrote those orders and signed his name. Can't say how long it was before I suspected a wrong, and then I began to understand it. After I got started I finally began to draw orders for myself, and sold to different persons. Sometimes I took them into the treasurers office. No one knew we were doing this, I did not then know that Dills was doing so. There was no understanding between us or others I got what I drew and Dills what he drew. This continued part of Coffinberry's time. Do not know how much was the amount of either of us. Coffiberry continued this all through his term, number of them drawn in his own hand. Suppose Coffinberry sold his. I never got any of the money on his. I never had any talk with him on this, except a few times when I refused to draw the bad orders for him. I knew that Dills drew bad orders during my term, but it was when I was away. Each one got the money on his own order. There was no understanding.

We often got them cashed by the treasurer, when persons had left money there. No agreement between me, Dills and Coffinberry, not a penny either was They never got any of mine. Sawvel was treasurer while Coffinberry was in, and Fair during mine, 2 years followed by Hines in Nov. '96 Coffinberry, as I understand it from Sawel came to Sawvel to make an arrangement, but I had no arrangement with him One ditch order of $17 I raised to $117 and we divided the excess. There were but 3 or 4 of these we had between us. They amounted to $555. Never had any other arrangement for division. McIntosh left money in my office to buy order, $100 and upwards. We put it in an envelop and bought orders with it for McIntosh. We put the order into the envelop with the money. Always paid 100 cents on the dollar. Some of these orders were bad ones. McIntosh only got a small per cent of the bad orders we made. There was no difference in the apperence of the good and bad orders. McIntosh did not know I turned over to him any bad orders. When the money was gone, if he had more to buy with, he would leave more. Sometimes he had no money to use for this. The bad orders McIntosh did not get, some were sold to other parties and some turned over to treasurer. Am now serving a term for this crime. (Here the prisoner broke down, and shed tears.) Cross ex. It was early in Coffinberry's first year that Coffinberry began to have bad orders drawn. The first ones were drawn on fictious claims. I at first refused, but finally consented to do it. Then Coffinberry must have known that I knew of it. Coffinberry said. "You have gone so far, now go on and draw these." So we kept at it. Was shown some orders that had two different kinds of ink used in filling them out. Do not know whether are many like this with different ink. I did not begin to follow Coffinberry's plan of work within the first year. All the talk I had with Dills was when I refused to draw that order for Coffinberry, I told him of it. I did not tell Dills that Coffinberry had drawn bad orders, or that I had. Dills probably got onto the work after a while. I did this work when I was alone and Dills probably did when he was alone.

NOTE

The above is only a part of Mr. Borst's testimony and for want of space it will be continued to next week with that of the witnesses to follow him. Mr. Sawvel was on the stand at the close of court Wednesday evening. The case will probably be completed this week.

Last week the matter of partition of the Sheets estate was up. The finding was that Wm. Huffman two fifths of the land; M. C. Sheets, one fifth; Maud Blankenship, one fifth; Hulbert L. Sheets one fifth. That the share of H. L. Sheets is subject to lien of $142, got in another case, which was brought against him by Wm. Huffman. Jacob Walborn, James McClellan and J. J. VanAuken, were ordered to divide the land for these heirs.

A judgment of $1,200 is taken against the several bondsmen of D. D. Moody, which we supposes closes that matter up.

Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

THE BOGUS P. O. ORDERS.

John Lahnum goes to Indianapolis to-night to testify before the U. S. grand jury in regard to the bogus P. O. money order he bought last summer A young man Geo. Vogel claiming he was working on a farm came to him one evening and said the post office was closed and he wanted John to cash a $12 money order for him. John did this but it proved to be bogus. The man was arrested afterwards for stealing an order book from the postoffice at Bellmore, Ohio. At the examination in Ft. Wayne, he gave bonds of $2,000 with his father and his attorney on the bond. Later it was learned that a man named Ford was arrested in Pennsylvania, with the stolen order book in his possession having sold about $5,000 in orders. It seems Ford taught school near Bellmore and Vogel was a pupil and they probably got this book and one started west to sell orders and the other east. If the crime is proved on them, they will be severely punished.

SHOOTING STARS.

Look out for the meteors. From now on all this month we are liable to see shooting stars. The best show is believed to be about the 14th. The years 96, 97 and 98 are said to be the best, as we run into the thickest part of this meteor belt every 33 years, and as it is a pretty wide belt, we are liable to hit the best of it each November for three years. Lovers can see the display by raising the parlor curtains. It is too cold to sit on the porch, and it looks verdant to walk the streets late.

An Ancient Canal.

How many of the engineering works of the Nineteenth Century will there be in existence in the year 6000? Yet, there is at least one great undertaking conceived and executed by an engineer which, during the space of four thousand years, has never ceased its office, on which the life of a fertile province absolutely depends to-day, says a writer in Engineering.

We refer to the Bahr Joussuf—the canal of Joseph—built, according to tradition, by the son of Jacob, and which constitutes not the least of the many blessings he conferred on Egypt during the year of his prosperous rule.

This canal took its rise from the Nile at Asiut, and ran almost parallel with it for nearly 250 miles, creeping along under the western cliffs of the Nile Valley, with many a bend and winding, until at length it gained an eminence, as compared with the river bed, which enabled it to turn westward through a narrow pass and enter a district which was otherwise shut off from the fertilizing floods on which all vegetation in Egypt depends.

Through this cut ran a perennial stream which watered a province named the Fayoum, endowing it with fertility and supporting a large population. In the time of the annual flood a great part of the canal was under water, and then the river's current would rush in a more direct course into the pass, carrying with it the rich silt which takes the place of manure, and keeps the soil in a constant state of productiveness.

All this, with the exception of the tradition that Joseph built it, can be verified to-day.

MAN'S OWN CORNER.

A Few Simple Suggestions from Uncle Reggie.

Never pin up a hole in a sock you are wearing. The pin is apt to become bent, and its usefulness thus destroyed.

In tearing off the leaves from your calendar, care should be taken to remove but one at a time, otherwise you may find yourself dating your letters a month ahead of time, which would be found very annoying.

When making your toilet do not forget to keep your collar button in full view, lying upside down on the dresser. When ready to connect your collar and collar band, grasp the button firmly between the thumb and first finger of the right hand, insert in the buttonhole and clasp firmly. This method oftentimes saves much profanity which otherwise might sully the atmosphere of your room.

When writing to a young lady, always say, "My Dear Miss Jones." It is true that some modern authorities commend the style of "Dear Old Girl," "My Pal," or "Dear Jonesy," when addressing a bachelor girl, but it is wretchedly bad taste from a conventional point of view, and should never be used by perfect gentlemen.

When calling on a young married woman, always accept an invitation to the nursery, but never commit yourself as to whom baby resembles until your hostess gives you the cue. Woman's finer perceptions enable her to detect a resemblance between her squirming lobster-faced hopeful and its handsome athletic young father, which a mere man would pass by unnoticed.

It is considered wise by young men with small salaries to cultivate the acquaintance of young women who have conscientious scruples against the theater, champagne and dances.

The Mountain of Madness.

The mountain of danger and dread is Slieve-na-Gulle, in the Irish County of Kerry. The name, "Slieve-na-Gulle" signifies, in Gaelic, "Height of Madness;" and an appropriate name it is, if one believes the stories told by travelers and the local peasantry. It is an accepted tradition that any person reaching the topmost peak of Slieve-na-Gulle becomes instantly insane, and continues in a state of insanity until taken at least five Irish miles from the dreaded mountain. Curiously enough, staid history lends its support to this wild legion. Only one year ago an American tourist of position and standing in his own country got lost while traveling through Kerry, and inadvertently scaled Slieve-na-Gulle. A searching party set forth, and, after many days, found him a raving lunatic, on the barren wastes of the mountain. Again, not many months since, the political prisoner, Whitestone, on being released from Dartmouth Jail, and while waiting for an American steamer, became lost on the "Height of Madness." He also was discovered entirely crazy. But when both of these persons were brought to a safe distance from the mountain they at once recovered their full mental powers. During the past 100 years it is calculated over eighty wanderers have been overtaken with madness while crossing the mountain.

Of course, the peasantry ascribe to Slieve-na-Gulle magical qualities, and declare that it was solemnly cursed long centuries since by St. Brendan, the fabled first discover of America. But common sense has another explanation of the mystery. So utterly desolate and barren is the mountain, and so constant are the rains which fall upon it and the mists which envelop its miles of moor and heather, that a stranger easily loses his way upon the summit. Sense of locality once lost upon Slieve-na-Gulle, the wanderer in nine cases out of ten finds himself a prisoner, unable to leave those dreary solitudes. Wet to the skin, shivering and hungry, he roams from spot to spot, until finally his mind gives way under the hopeless struggle to escape, and he becomes temporarily insane. Rescue, restoratives and food soon bring him back to sanity again.

Most Beautiful Bed.

When M. Faure was recently at Peterhof he slept in a bed arranged for the first Grand Duchess Olga Nicholaievna. She was the youngest and the handsomest of the three beautiful daughters of Nicholas I. The bed is like that of Louis XIV. in having a canopy, but is curtained in soft thick creme silk. Opposite the foot is a mirror framed with Serves porcelain flowers. The Grand Duchess, sitting up in this bed, could see herself in it.

The alcove ceiling is faced with mirrors, also set in garlands. Olga, in her visits to Russia as Princess or Queen of Wurtemburg, dwelt in a suite of rooms, one of which contained the famous bed. Mirrors throughout the rooms show they were meant for a beautiful woman, and that her father intended they should be a suitable sanctuary for her loveliness. Her wedding dress was preserved there until the death of Empress Alexandra (Charlotte of Prussia) in 1860, when it was taken to Stuttgart, where it was at Olga's death.

Arabian Horses.

Arabian horses manifest remarkable courage in battle. It is said that when a horse of this breed finds himself wounded and perceives that he will not be able to bear his rider much longer he quickly retires from the conflict, bearing his master to a place of safety, while he has still sufficient strength. But if, on the other hand, the rider is wounded and falls to the ground, the faithful animal remains beside him, unmindful of danger, neighing until assistance is brought.

GREAT YERKES GLASS

ENORMOUS TELESCOPE WHICH HAS BEEN COMPLETED.

New Observatory at Lake Geneva, Wis.—Object Glasses and Their Manufacturers—The Delicate Operations Involved in Grinding a Large Glass.

Some Big Telescopes.

The opening of the Yerkes Observatory was one of the most notable events in the history of modern astronomy, for the telescope then put in operation is the most powerful instrument that has ever been turned to the heavens. The distinguished American astronomers who, from many institutions, gathered at the observatory had an opportunity such as was never offered to astronomers before, for the enormous power of the 40-inch object glass brought into view details on the moon and planets to a degree never equaled by any glass previously constructed.

The Yerkes Observatory, so called from its founder, is probably the most perfectly equipped observing station in the world, whether considered with regard to its situation, to the number of its instruments or their delicacy. The situation is chosen with reference to obtaining not only a clear sky, free from dust and smoke and electric light, but also a spot free from vibrations of the earth. The instruments of an observatory are so delicate that the jarring of the earth caused by a passing wagon or train may put them out of equipoise and require a readjustment. The observatory is called a Chicago institution, but is, as a matter of fact, located in Wisconsin, at the head of Lake Geneva, seventy-five miles from Chicago. A large area of ground was purchased and laid off in such a way that there should be no roads in the immediate vicinity of the building. The nearest railroad track is almost two miles distant, while the closest electric lights are seven miles. The instruments can easily be protected from electrical disturbances, but the shining of an electric light in the sky is a source of serious embarrassment to the observing astronomer, for a bright illumination close at hand nullifies the power of his instrument when observing the stars. Thus it will be seen no pains have been spared to perfect all the conditions favorable to the astronomer and the great fortune which has been expended in fitting out the observatory has made it perhaps the most perfect on the planet.

The main building is 350 feet in length, or more than one city block, while the two Ls are each 160 feet. The dome, in which the great telescope is located, is at the further extremity of the main building, while at the ends of the Ls are smaller domes for telescopes of less power and other instruments. The building in which the great equatorial is suspended is covered with an iron dome 90 feet in diameter and 60 feet in height. The tube of the telescope has a length of more than 60 feet, and is hung upon supports whose foundations of solid granite sink deep into the earth. The dome is placed upon thirty-six wheels, each a yard in diameter, and is moved in any desired direction by machinery, while there is a movable floor which, by very clever mechanism, can be made to rise or fall so that no matter at what angle the telescope may be set the observer can stand on the floor to do his work or seat himself in a chair, lifting the floor from time to time as may be necessary.

The uninitiated should understand that when a telescope is fixed upon a star the instrument does not keep the object in focus more than a minute, unless especial provision is made for moving the telescope with the apparent motion of the star. The star really stands still, but the motion of the earth upon its axis is constantly placing the telescope out of focus, and, therefore, means have been devised by which the telescope can be moved at a rate equal to that of the apparent motion of the star, so that when the object is once in focus and the clock work which moves the telescope is started, the instrument will follow the star from dark until dawn, thus giving ample time for observations of any length. As in spite of the wonderful mechanism used in the work a large telescope is not easily moved, the star to be observed is first located by means of the "finder," a much smaller telescope, and the position in the heavens of the object being ascertained, the great telescope is moved according to the scale of a graduated circle placed just beneath and an exact focus is obtained. The Yerkes telescope is fully equipped with every modern invention, not only for observing, but also for recording the observations. Photographic and spectroscopic apparatus may be connected with the telescope in such a way as to make, with the aid of this instrument, the most delicate records of the appearance of the celestial lights and ascertain their composition.

What may be expected from the new instrument is indicated by the information gained on the first evening of observation. The instrument was turned on the moon as the nearest, and, in many respects, the most interesting of our celestial neighbors. Considerable excitement has been aroused in astronomical circles by reports from Paris that the observers there detected, or, thought they detected, appearances in the moon indicating the presence of water and vegetation. The accepted theory is that the moon is a dead world, having no atmosphere, and if there is any water, it has retired to the interior of our celestial companion. The observations through the Yerkes telescope confirm this opinion, for though much detail hitherto unobserved came into view, no indications were observed of atmosphere, water or vegetation. It is anticipated that very interesting discoveries will be made with regard to Mars. The advance in telescopes has been followed by a corresponding increase of knowledge with regard to this remarkable planet, and the public interest aroused through the discoveries of the astronomers and the speculations of imaginative writers, has led to a lively demand for further information which the astronomers at William's Bay will not be slow to gratify.

The Yerkes telescope has an object glass of 40 inches and a focal distance of over 60 feet, the glass being, as already stated, the largest ever made. The Clarks have a similar glass in hand, which, when completed, will be placed in an observatory, under the direction of Harvard, on Mount Hilson, in Southern California. America will thus have the proud distinction of possessing the two largest telescopes in the world. Even without these, however, our country is, to borrow a slang phrase, "in the swim" astronomically, as well as every other way, for we possess a larger number of great telescopes than any other nation in the world. The Lick Observatory, situated at Hamilton, Cal., has a 36-inch glass, set up in 1887, the equatorial, in the Naval Observatory at Washington, has a glass of 26 inches, put in position in 1873; McCormick's glass at the University of Virginia is 26 inches, set up in 1883; the observatory at Princeton has a 23-inch glass, put in position in 1883; the telescope of the University of Chicago, set up in 1864, which did service before the Yerkes instrument, had an aperture of 18.5 inches; in 1880 a telescope of 16 inches was hung in the Warner Observatory in Rochester, N. Y.; in 1879 a telescope of 15.5 inches was placed in position at Madison, Wis., in the Washburn Observatory; as early as 1843 a telescope, with a glass slightly less than 15 inches in diameter, was put in operation at Cambridge, Mass., by Harvard University; in 1856 the Litchfield Observatory of Hamilton College at Clinton, N. Y., was provided with a 13.5-inch glass, and about the same time Columbia College, New York, provided itself with a 13-inch object glass. There are glasses of similar size at Allegheny, Pa., and Albany, N. Y., while others of 12 inches and less are in position at so many places in the United States that to give a list of them would be tedious.

The principal foreign refracting telescopes are those located at Poulkova, in Russia, 30 inches; at Nice, of the same diameter; the Greenwich at London has a glass of 28 inches, the Royal Observatory at Paris has a 27-inch glass, while the Imperial Observatory at Vienna is fitted with a telescope of the same power; the University of Cambridge, England, has a 25-inch lens in the telescope; the observatories at Milan and Strasburg have each 18-inch glasses; the Huggins telescope in London is 15 inches, while at Poulkova, in addition to the 30-inch glass, there is also a 14-inch, glasses of similar size being located at observatories in Paris, Lisbon, Brussels and Bordeaux; glasses of 13-inch and less are numerous in Europe, but less so than in America, for in facilities for astronomic observation we, as in most other respects, lead the world.

The greatest reflecting telescopes in the world are Lord Rosse's, at Parsonstown, Ireland, with a 72-inch reflector; the Bessemer, London, 50; Sir William Herschel, 48; Lassell, Liverpool and Melbourne, 48-inch; Paris, 47-inch; Common Ealing, 37; Toulouse, 33.5-inch; Marseilles, 31.5, and Harvard College, 28-inch. The enormous weight of the mirrors of the reflecting telescope is a serious objection to their use. The two reflectors in Lord Rosse's telescope weigh the one seven and the other four tons, and the difficulty of casting in a homogenous mass such a quantity of metal is as great an obstacle to its employment in a telescope as the cost. There has recently been discovered, however, a method of covering plate-glass with silver so as to give a perfect reflection, and if this proves successful reflecting mirrors may yet play an important part in the history of practical astronomy.

The principal makers of object glasses are the Clarks of Cambridge, Mass.; Mers, Grubb, Cauchoix and Fitz, in Europe. The Clarks have an established reputation superior to that of any other manufacturers, and, from the excellence of their work and the success with which they have manufactured these huge object glasses, deserve the fame that has come to them. Nearly all the great glasses in this country are the work of the Clark factory, and, although the glass is procured in Paris, the labor to bring it into proper shape has all been done in America.

Few people have an idea of the amount of labor and expense involved in the manufacture of a 36 or 40-inch object glass for a telescope. In the first place, the selection of a proper disk is a matter of no little time and labor. The glass for a telescope must be of perfectly homogenous texture throughout. Every one has noticed in looking through the glass of a window that here and there will appear distortions of objects without, the cause being inequalities in the glass or differences in its substance. In an ordinary window glass, a distortion of this kind is a matter of no consequence, but in the object glass of a telescope, if the material at one point is a trifle denser than at another, or, if in cooling, the glass becomes harder or softer at different places, the result will be fatal to a correct observation. It is said that nearly forty disks were tested before a selection was finally made of one to be used for the Yerkes telescope. The testing of the disks is a matter of mathematical accuracy, the glass to be used being placed in a room darkened, save for a small light at the other end, then careful instruments are employed to test every quarter inch of the entire surface. Sometimes there is a superficial flaw, which disappears in the grinding, but if the defect is in the interior of the disk, that piece of glass is worthless for astronomical purposes, and is set aside at once.

After the selection of a perfect disk the grinding begins. In its early stages machinery may be employed to reduce the disk to an approximately correct form, but after the coarse grinding is finished all the rest of the labor must be done by hand, a work of great length and inexpressibly tedious. The object glass of the Yerkes telescope required nearly two years and a half of constant daily labor for its completion, and the cost was $70,000. After the mechanical grinding is completed, the workmen begin with emery powder and leather pads, and by a slow circular motion gradually work down the surface of the glass to the required dimensions. The tediousness of grinding down a disk of tough glass by slowly moving one's hands over its surface is more exasperating than the hardest labor. Day after day, week after week, month after month, the mechanic, a skilled mechanic at that, spends his time in rubbing the surface of the glass. He cannot see that he has made any progress from month to month; for within a few weeks after he has begun the glass appears as brightly polished as possible, but the skilled eye of the superintendent can detect the difference between the highest polish attainable and any degree below that. It is not only, however, for the sake of the polish that the workman labors, for the glass must be worn away to the required dimensions and the most delicate mathematical instruments are daily called into play to determine the progress that has been made. In six to nine months the progress becomes perceptible, in eighteen months the work is far advanced, at the end of twenty-four months of steady rubbing, the glass is approaching completion. Here and there, however, in spite of the care with which the rubbing has been done, there are inequalities detected by the instruments, if not by the eye, and these must be remedied by a little extra rubbing here, a little less there. Finally, as a concluding operation, the workman spends weeks rubbing the surface of the glass with his bare hand; no reducing substance, no emery, not even the finest and softest powder, will answer the purpose; the bare hand alone must complete the operation. When the hand of one worn man is bereft of the skin, another takes his place, and the bare-hand rubbing goes on for weeks and months. Finally the instruments detect no further inequalities, the tired hands of the workmen rest and regrow the cuticle that has been lost—the glass is finished.

At the workshop it is mounted in a temporary tube, then taken down, and, if necessary, retouched at different points and packed for shipment. Seventy-thousand-dollar object glasses for telescopes do not travel in freight cars; the jolting would ruin them forever. They are packed with dense layers of cotton batting, in boxes especially made for the purpose, are transported in soft-springed vehicles, at a walk, to the nearest railroad station, and then ride in a palace car to their destination. The box is set on edge, and at every few miles is turned so as to present another edge of the glass to the jarring motion of the train, lest, on account of the great weight, the substance of the glass should be changed in texture by the internal strain. A force of skilled mechanics accompany the glass to its destination; no one is allowed to touch it but these men, who themselves attend to the work of adjusting it in the telescope and then of mounting the instrument. Ere it starts on its journey it is insured for its full value against accident, and the Kohinoor in the Tower of London is not watched more closely than the object glass of a telescope.

Little by little the wonders of the heavens are disclosed to our view, but he who imagines that the revelations made by the great telescopes are without labor knows nothing of the intelligent effort, the innumerable calculations, the patient and long-continued toil represented by the object glass of a telescope.

LOST MINE IN ARIZONA.

Rich Property, Guarded by Crumbling Breastworks.

The story of the discovery of an old, forgotten mine in an unfrequented locality in the foothills of the Pinal mountains, embellished with romantic details such as usually accompany legends of lost mines, created a lively interest about the public resorts in Globe.

L. S. Goble, R. Quarrels and H. S. McClelland, on August 17, while prospecting in the foothills eight or nine miles south of Globe and three and a half miles to the left of the toll road, discovered an old shaft, and near by on the hill above the ruins of breastworks, which had evidently been erected for defense against Indians. The evidences of great age observable in the decayed shaft, almost filled with debris, and the crumbling breastworks, excited the party's curiosity, and they stopped to investigate. The old shaft was found to have been sunk on a well-defined ledge, from which they took promising specimens of ore which tested well in copper and gold.

Owing to the unsafe condition of the old shaft, after having removed two or three feet of the debris, they abandoned it, and having made their locations, they started a new incline shaft below the old works. From the surface down they had a twelve to fourteen inch streak of sulphuret ore running from 15 to 56 per cent. in copper and well in gold, one assay giving $42 per ton. The incline is now down fifteen feet and the ore has widened to three feet.

A well-preserved skeleton, with a bullet hole through the skull, or bearing other evidence of foul play, is a desirable, if not an essential exhibit of every such discovery, and as this was lacking, Mr. Goble industriously set about to supply the deficiency, although in justice to our informant, he says it was the hope of uncovering treasure more than to make so grewsome a find, which prompted him to explore a mound of stones lodged in a crevice in the rocks near the breastworks. After removing about three feet of rock and leaves Goble struck his pick into what proved to be the eye-socket of a human skull, which caused him to momentarily shrink with horror, but summoning up courage he proceeded with the work, and soon uncovered a complete skeleton of a man. Near the right hand lay a dagger eaten with rust, a large chunk of quartz seamed with coarse gold, and a handsome specimen of onyx. What was the fate of the human being whose bones had been thus rudely disturbed? Had he been murdered by the implacable foe of the white man, the blood-thirsty Apache, or had he peacefully laid down life's burden and been tenderly committed to the grave by friendly hands? There is none to answer, and the mystery must remain unsolved.—Globe, A. T., Silver Belt.

Osman Digma a Scot.

Osman Digma, who for years has been giving the British trouble on the Upper Nile, is, according to the Pall Mall Gazette, really a Scotchman named George Nisbet. He was born in Rouen of a Glasgow father, who in 1848 emigrated to Egypt, where he died. His widow married a Turk named Osman, who adopted her son and made him heir to his slave business. George Nisbet took the name of Osman Ali, and after being educated at the military academy, where he was the intimate friend of the late Arabi Pasha, became a slave trader. The harm done to his business by the English and French interference in Egypt, and the fall of Arabi Pasha, turned him against his former countrymen. He must be over 60 years of age now.

The best examples of cyclopean building are at Baalbec. There are stones in the Baalbec walls thirty feet above the level several of which are sixty feet long, twenty-four feet thick, and sixteen broad, each stone weighing over 2,500 tons, all cut, dressed, and brought from distant quarries.

WASHING THE STREETS.

One German Town with Two Separate Water Supplies.

Undoubtedly one of the best methods of keeping streets clean is that of frequent flushing with water, especially when the sewer outlets are so planned as to permit all the solid refuse to be washed out through them along with the water. In many cases, however, the supply of city water does not permit the liberal flow necessary for a thorough flushing, so that this luxury can be permitted only when an excess of water is on hand. The city of Oldenburg, near Lubeck, has provided an independent water supply for the especial purpose of keeping the streets washed, this being one of the numerous sanitary improvements which have resulted from the cholera epidemic of 1892 in the north seaports. In order to avoid the cost of new buildings the pumping plant is placed in one of the electric stations where space was available, the water being taken direct from the River Hunte, the pumps being driven by belt from turbines. A system of high-service mains altogether distinct from the regular water supply is connected with this pumping plant, and a pressure of sixty-five feet head is maintained by an automatic regulator, permitting the excess water to be returned to the river whenever the demand is reduced. This high-service pumping system supplies thirty-seven flushing hydrants placed at such points of elevation as to permit the streets to be cleared by the slope. The hydrants are so arranged that their ordinary discharge is through openings in the curb at the gutter line, but they can also be immediately converted into fire plugs for hose attachment, either for street sprinkling or for fire engine supply. Since the river water at Oldenburg is unfit for household use, the plant above described is available only for the special purposes for which it was planned, but the expense of thus using a local supply of brackish water for purposes of street washing and fire service is so moderate that the method is worthy of consideration in other localities. The entire cost of the Oldenburg plant was less than $7,000—that is, less than $200 per hydrant—while the economy in street cleaning alone would soon repay this, after which the cost of operation would be much less than by any other method, not to mention the superior sanitary advantages.—Electrical Engineer.

TO MARKET BY TROLLEY.

How English Truckers Save Their Horses for Farm Work.

An English trolley line, plying between Bessbrook and Newry, through a rich farming district, makes a substantial addition to its receipts by hauling farm wagons over its lines attached to the motor car, in the place of the trailer, which is sometimes seen. In order to keep the wagons on the track a second pair of rails is laid inside the working tracks and slightly higher.

The towns at either end of the line are both market towns, and the line runs directly to the business centers, where the wagons are drawn aside and run into their places by a half-dozen sturdy men, who are paid a few pence each by the countryman for this service. It is, therefore, possible for a farmer to bring his produce to market and dispose of it without the aid of his horses. It is not an uncommon sight, and always a rather amusing one, to see a lumbering farm wagon loaded with hay or produce flying along behind the motor car on its way to market. The farmers take kindly to this scheme, as it is a saving of money as well as horseflesh.

A Christian Endeavor.

It was the work of Dr. F. E. Clark, and was successful, as the reader will see. The doctor was in a railway car in India, and in another compartment were several private soldiers. The story is told by Doctor Clark in the Golden Rule:

The soldiers were beguiling the tedium of the way by coaxing to their compartment every poor, mangy dog which they could induce to come near them with a chicken bone or a piece of bread. Then, when the dog got within striking distance, with a heavy hockey stick they would hit him with all their might over the back or legs. I saw them break the back of one poor dog, and the leg of another that went off crying with a most pitiable "ki-i-i."

I now thought it was time to interfere, and as few people travel in this part of India except government officials and military officers, I knew that "Tommy Atkins" would take me for one of his superior officers. So, putting my head into the compartment where the four human brutes were seated, I said to them:

"You are the most cruel and cowardly men I've ever seen in my life, to beat the poor dogs in this way. If I know of your doing anything more of this sort on this journey, I will report you to the general in command at Agra."

It is needless to say that these particular "Tommies" were cowardly as well as brutal. They said not a word, but slunk into a corner of the compartment, and I heard no more yelping dogs that day.

Birds' Eggs.

Next to that of the British museum the largest collection of birds' eggs is that belonging to a lawyer named Nehs Kordt, in Braunschweig, Germany. He intends soon to issue a catalogue of his collection, with fifty colored plates depicting the more valuable specimens, of many of which no other sample is known to exist.

A HELPLESS FARMER.

William Stimpson Stricken with Paralysis of His Lower Limbs—Caused by Overwork.

From the New Era, Greensburg, Ind.

Many of our readers may remember an item in this paper a year ago last fall which stated that Mr. William Stimpson, a well-to-do farmer, living near Rugby, Ind., had been stricken with paralysis of the lower limbs, and his recovery was doubtful.

The case, which was an unusually severe and complicated one, has at last been entirely cured, to the utmost surprise and joy of Mr. Stimpson and his family.

Mr. Stimpson was pleased to relate to a reporter the particulars regarding his case, and his subsequent recovery.

"A year ago last fall," began Mr. Stimpson, "I did a large amount of work. My hired help left me in the middle of corn cutting and I finished the fall work myself, doing an unusually large amount of work. I put up several hundred shocks of fodder, and also husked all my corn. To accomplish this I had to work early and late.

"About the first of December, as I was getting my fall work about done, I suffered a stroke of paralysis, which the physician said was brought on by excessive labor. My left limb was entirely helpless and my right limb was fast becoming so. My physician became uneasy, and after attending upon me for a week or so he brought me a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, saying that he believed they would do me more good than anything which he knew of, as he had used them with great success in a case very similar to mine where all other remedies had failed. The case in question was that of L. Phillips, of Petersville.

"About the time I began taking the second box of these pills a decided change was noticed, and when I had taken two more boxes we discovered that I was actually getting well. You can probably imagine what a relief and feeling of gladness this was to me, after being confined to my bed for nearly two months. Well, I kept on taking the pills according to directions, until I had consumed nine boxes of them, which completely cured me.

"I am sound and well to-day, with not a sign of the returning affliction and can affirm that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People did me a wonderful good and probably saved me from the grave."

To allay all doubt as to the truth of his statement, Mr. Stimpson made out the following sworn affidavit:

Rugby, Ind., Feb. 2, 1897.

"This is to certify that I do hereby swear that the foregoing statement is absolutely true.

"WILLIAM STIMPSON."

County of Bartholomew, State of Indiana, ss.

Sworn to and subscribed before me, a Justice of the Peace, in and for said county in said State. ABNER NORMAN.

The New Era was also informed that Mrs. Charles Williams, of the same neighborhood, had been cured of rheumatism, and Henry Johnson, of Hartsville, who was troubled with neuralgia, was also cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. It seems that this remedy is in great demand in that neighborhood.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. These pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Public Laundries.

It is probable that public laundries, similar to those which have been established in Great Britain for some time, will be arranged shortly for the convenience of the New York housewife of the poorer classes, to whom the weekly wash-day is a time of trial. In England these public laundries are splendidly equipped with all kinds of machinery for laundry work, so that not only by patronizing them may a woman keep her own house clear from the general disturbance attendant upon washday even in well-to-do families, but in one hour she will be able to do what would require four or five with the limited conveniences of home laundries. The cost for using such laundries is but five cents an hour, in which time it is estimated that the laundry work of five persons may be done. These laundries are not to benefit the professional laundress, but the actual housekeeper. Plans for such a project are now being considered by the committee of seventy of New York.

gation comprises both capitalists and the very poor in marked contrast. This circumstance guides its policy in the matter of sittings, and every third seat is held for visitors and the poor and cannot be secured at any price.

The church cost $125,000. In the dedicatory services Bishop McCabe and Bishop Hurst took part. Rev. Dr. McIntyre is the pastor. Bishop McCabe stated that a debt of $60,000 hung over the church and that it would be liquidated before a single person left the church. Then the ushers passed around the collection baskets, and into them fell silver, paper and gold. The widow's mite nestled against the millionaire's pledge for thousands and the pile grew until the congregation wondered if hard times really existed. Then the collection was counted. More was needed, the bishop said, and the ushers moved through the audience again. The response was generous. When it was all counted $42,000 was pledged. The contributions were from 10 cents to $20,000. Six were down for $5,000. At the evening service the balance, $18,000, was secured.

Must Have Had an Arsenal.

The late Gov. Henry A. Wise, of Virginia, received from admirers more than two dozen dragoon pistols and Colt's revolvers, said to have been taken from John Brown in the engine-house, while there are few homes in West Virginia that do not contain a rifle, pistol and dagger taken from the man whose "body lies moldering in the ground, while his soul goes marching on." There is a dealer in Washington who has built a block of houses with money made by selling pistols and pikes taken from Brown, and his supply is still ample for the demand.

Rest Before Eating.

Edward Everett Hale's advice to brain-workers and over-energetic women is to "rest, rest, rest; not all the time, but before eating. Ten minutes' rest before eating is a necessity. You should never eat when you are 'dead' tired, but wait until the machine is rested." The application of this admonition to shoppers who remain on the go until the last possible minute and then hurry down to dinner should be very evident.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. WINTER HATS APPEAR

THEY LINGER NOT FOR ICE AND SNOW.

Sailors Are Here, as Usual—The Correct Vogue Seems to Be Small or Medium Hats Profusely Trimmed—Passing of the Hat Pin.

Tips on Headgear.

New York correspondence:

ICE and snow are more backward signs of the season than are winter hats, which are already out in force, and they are so handsome that it is small wonder women are in a hurry for getting them. Enormous hats and tiny toques are both in favor with women who dress extravagantly, but the best milliners have very choice lines of small and medium hats, though in their windows there may be an array of picture hats as big as barrel heads. Sailors, as usual, are on hand—or, rather, on head—and are as captivating as ever. Elaborate trimming has so long been the portion of this shape, that there is now no shock at finding it almost covered with ornamentations of fashionably fanciful sorts. It comes in all shades, with a preference for warm browns, blues, greens and blacks, and is worn tipped a bit over the forehead, but not grotesquely so. The trimming that goes about the hat is made to extend well over the top of the brim, either by rolling it in great folds, or, if it is bound close to the hat itself, then the loops of the bow that is sure to be on one or both sides is sprangled well out in loops and ends.

Natural colored or undyed feathers of all kinds are greatly in vogue and many of the most stunning sailors bear this trimming. An example of this sort appears in the first picture. It was embellished on one side by a wide bunch of quills, all in varying shades of natural color, the rest of the hat being in harmonious shades of brown. Sailors as well as walking hats are this season furnished with elastics; indeed, the hat pin is not nearly as much in use as it has been for several years.

In her second sketch the artist has grouped a half-dozen newly fashionable models to be found in the stylish milliners' showings of small and medium sized headgear. The investigator of such stocks will find that little toques made to set back of the pompadour are offered. The pictured toque of this type was gotten up in brown and dull red grasses, a bunch of wheat standing at one side in aigrette fashion. These little hats are also made of autumn rose leaves in all their natural shades of red, green and bronze, while a bunch of the scarlet seed pods and, perhaps, a rose or two, complete the effect.

Soft crowned hats of medium size are offered in many novel shapes, in many cases the crown seeming to be only a fold of the scarfing that winds loosely over and about the brim. There is a fancy for wearing this sort of hat tipped forward and to one side, as if to allow a thorough inspection of the windings of the trimming. Heavy materials are used for such scarfings, felts, velvet or very heavy satin. In the second hat of this group, which was of gray felt, gray velvet furnished the draping, gray satin ribbon gave the bows, and a fan of rounded quills set off the back, the last a very jaunty finish for the scarfing of such hats. And in such fans there is no end to the torturing to which the innocent quill is put. It is perforated, fringed, cut into arrowhead shapes, rounded and squared at the tip, and so on.

WITH BRIM CHOCK FULL.

Cock's feathers, too, are in great vogue, and are handled most dextrously, either lying flat or arranged in waterfall fashion, to take the place of aigrette or plumes. In this picture they trim an artistic hat whose brim was turned up in Spanish fashion at the edge and was filled out to this edge by loose folds of rich satin, laid one back of the other, each one a little higher than the other, and so mounting to the height of the hat. All the folds swept about an aigrette of cock's feathers set on the right side. The pretty feature of the hat was that each fold was a different shade of satin, the outer one nearest the edge of the brim being a coppery brown, the next a metallic green and the last a bronze blue that was almost black. These three colors gleamed in the surface of the feathers also. The hat itself was a smooth felt of a dull copper red, and tipped down to the left a little, to bring high the aigrette of feathers.

MADE ELABORATE AND TO LOOK LIGHT.

SIX NEW TYPES IN SMALL AND MEDIUM SIZES.

This idea of making folds of goods the feature of the hat is carried out, too, in tiny toques that seem to be but a twist of felt, satin or velvet, setting back of the pompadour and almost hiding the stiff little crown. This crown serves to give security to the uplifted bunch of quills and the loop or so of ribbon that are employed as trimming. Rose pink satin and ribbon, a black jet crown and natural colored notched quills composed the toque on this order chosen for this illustration. Beside this is an entirely new notion—a cock feather pompon. These look a little devil-fishy with all their waving ends, but such a pompon is a stunning finish to a sailor-shaped felt, otherwise untrimmed except for a wide band of satin ribbon top and bottom.

While as a rule the lift of trimming that is a usual feature of almost all hats is set at the right side, in many cases it is pushed well to the back. And often, that it may stand very high and firm, it is thrust through an opening in the top of the crown, near the edge. The rolls and folds of the hat's scarfing come as high as the top of the crown, so that unless the construction of the hat is investigated this trick is not apparent. A hat with a narrow brim is trimmed with folds of felt, and at the back the felt stands up in a sort of frill, higher than the crown, giving the effect of an upturned brim. Sometimes such frill stands all around the crown, entirely concealing it unless you are tall enough to look down upon the top of the hat. This weighting by folds and disguise of the brim by mounting the trimming to the height of the crown from the very edge of the brim, while distinctly the style, are likely to create a heavy effect not always becoming to a delicate face and small features. For such wearers come hats like that of the concluding picture. It was black velvet, the crown hidden with puffing of pale blue moire, in which wound a band of jet edged with narrow chiffon pleating. A single plume and feathery aigrettes towered from the back. It will be seen that this brim was left clear and permitted to curve slightly in leghorn fashion. While the desirable height was gained by the plume and skeleton aigrettes, no suggestion of weight came in them, and further lightness was hinted by a delicate flower against the hair beneath the brim. The chiffon pleating saved the puffing from all indication of weight, and the hat was made altogether suitable for a delicate face.

JAPAN'S GREAT ENTERPRISE IN AMERICA.

LARGE APPROPRIATION BY IMPERIAL DIET.

To Inform Americans How to Make Tea.

Several months ago, the Japanese Tea Guild sent to this country a special commission, composed of Mr. S. Mitsuhashi, President of the Shizuoka Prefectural Assembly, and Mr. J. Ohara, member of Japanese Parliament, to investigate the condition of the Japanese tea trade in the United States and Canada and to co-operate with Mr. T. Furuya and Mr. T. Misutany, the American representatives of the Japanese Tea Guild, in giving publicity to the merits of Japanese Teas and the method of preparing them for drinking which would insure the best results.

Mr. Furuya and Mr. Misutany are planning to open Tea Bazars in many of the principal cities in the United States and Canada, where ladies can enjoy a cup of fine Japanese tea made by experts, and at the same time receive instructions which will enable them to make it equally well at home. More than half the Tea consumed in the United States and Canada is of Japanese growth, yet, the majority of Americans apparently do not understand how to prepare it so as to develop the delicious qualities which it contains. It is believed by these gentlemen that, when Americans are in possession of the secret of making good tea, the consumption in this country will fully equal that of Europe in proportion. The Japanese Government has appropriated a large fund to aid the Japanese Tea growers and Tea merchants in prosecuting this educational work, and it is hoped that American ladies will be apt students. The main Bureau of the Japanese Tea Guild has issued an official recipe for making Japanese Tea, the translation of which is as follows:

First—Use a small, dry and thoroughly clean porcelain teapot.

Second—Put in one teaspoonful of tea leaves for each cup of tea desired.

Third—When using Japanese teas, pour on the required quantity of fresh boiled water, and let stand with closed lid from two to three minutes. Never boil the leaves. In order to retain the natural flavor, Japanese tea leaves should be kept in tight can or jar, free from moisture.

Note.—To thoroughly enjoy the natural, delicate and sweet flavor of Japanese Teas, neither sugar nor cream should be used.

He has already spent $600,000 on "Cliveden" since he bought it from the Duke of Westminster, and now he is going to build a colossal marble fountain in his park. The marble has been cut in Naples from the finest Carrara marble to be found, and may be seen at a distance by the frequenters of the river, who, if they may not land on the edges of the estate and have their tea there, as they used to do when the Duke of Westminster owned the property, still have the right to look.

To Grocers.

We have direct proof that peddlers of washing-powders say that the stuff they're selling is "made in the same factory" as Pearline—and that buying from them will save going to, or ordering from, the grocery store. Do you want people "saved" that. You have these same washing-powders in stock. Possibly you are giving them out, whenever you can, in place of Pearline. You are trying to push them into notice; they are trying to crowd you out. You think you are "making more money on them." But will it pay you, in the end? 545

Send it Back Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back. JAMES PYLE, New York.

MRS. LYNESS ESCAPES

The Hospital and a Fearful Operation.

Hospitals in great cities are sad places to visit. Three-fourths of the patients lying on those snow-white beds are women and girls.

Why should this be the case?

Because they have neglected themselves! Women as a rule attach too little importance to first symptoms of a certain kind. If they have toothache, they will try to save the tooth, though many leave even this too late. They comfort themselves with the thought that they can replace their teeth; but they cannot replace their internal organs!

Every one of those patients in the hospital beds had plenty of warnings in the form of bearing-down feelings, pain at the right or the left of the womb, nervous dyspepsia, pain in the small of the back, the "blues," or some other unnatural symptom, but they did not heed them.

Don't drag along at home or in the shop until you are finally obliged to go to the hospital and submit to horrible examinations and operations! Build up the female organs. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will save you from the hospital. It will put new life into you.

The following letter shows how Mrs. Lyness escaped the hospital and a fearful operation. Her experience should encourage other women to follow her example. She says to Mrs. Pinkham:

"I thank you very much for what you have done for me, for I had given up in despair. Last February, I had a miscarriage caused by overwork. It affected my heart, caused me to have sinking spells three to four a day, lasting sometimes half a day. I could not be left alone. I flowed constantly. The doctor called twice a day for a week, and once a day for four weeks, then three or four times a week for four months. Finally he said I would have to undergo an operation. Then I commenced taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and after one week I began to recover and steadily improved until I was cured completely. By taking the Pinkham medicine, I avoided an operation which the doctor said I would certainly have to undergo. I am gaining every day and will cheerfully tell anyone what you have done for me."—Mrs. Thos. Lyness, 19 Frederick St., Rochester, N. Y.

I have recently read of four cases where Ripans Tabules relieved people from severe suffering which they experienced from the necessity of living in an impure atmosphere. First, there was a man who kept a 10-cent lodging-house in the Bowery, New York. He found that a Tabule taken now and then kept him from getting sick in that polluted atmosphere. Then there was a man who worked in a coal mine in Ohio, where the great distance under the hills made it impossible to get pure air, the air being forced to the men by great fans which would sometimes cease their motion on account of breaks in the machinery and then the air would become very bad indeed, causing pains in the head, dizziness and fainting. This man found a Ripans Tabule taken at such a time would preserve him from the pain he had previously experienced. Another miner, well known in Scranton, Pa., suffered from the foul atmosphere he breathed for so many years in the mines, resulting there from in the grave and damp. "My stomach suffered most," said he. Finally he was induced to make trial of Ripans Tabules, and was so much benefited that he now makes a practice of carrying a few of the magic Tabules in his pocket, so as to be able to swallow one at the first sign of approaching trouble. The fourth case is that of a Philadelphia tailor who had charge of the manufacturing department, and was obliged to spend hours at a time in the pressing, sponging and ironing department in an overheated room where the atmosphere is very heavy and disagreeable. This resulted in giving him frequent headaches, from which he sometimes suffered great torture. The medicines prescribed by his physician brought no relief, and he was, he said, on the verge of despair when a friend one day advised him to try Ripans Tabules. He did so and the result was that the first two Tabules wrought with him an almost magic change. "I escape all headaches now," he writes, "and no matter how hot the room is, one Tabule does away with all suffering. I always carry some with me for an emergency and can sincerely recommend them."

A new style packet containing TEN RIPANS TABULES in a paper carton (without glass) is now for sale at some drug stores—FOR FIVE CENTS. This low-priced sort is intended for the poor and the economical. One dozen of the five-cent cartons (120 tabules) can be had by mail by sending forty-eight cents to the RIPANS CHEMICAL COMPANY, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York—or a single carton (TEN TABULES) will be sent for five cents.

FRANK A. BORST,
Auditor of DeKalb County.

By M. BOLAND, Deputy.

The Record Stubs.

L. J. Miller sworn. Made no contract to have McIntosh purchase orders for him, but has a contract in relation to some orders. He received from McIntosh some orders and have a part yet, and McIntosh took up a part, I paid him $1500 cash and gave a note for $1292.54, and took the orders. Afterwards McIntosh gave me back my note and took back that much of the orders. I did not sort them over. Mr. Boland, and perhaps Mr. Ernst sorted them to see which were good. I did not pick out any orders. I never bought county orders before. Miller then gave these orders to Bratton who read them asking each time if he got them of McIntosh. He said he did, all of them. Many of these orders were those already considered in examining the various witnesses. He was shown an endorsement on the back of the contract in which was allusion to the orders named on the face but he did not seem to have much knowledge of it. Cross ex. by Judge Best. Said he was the father-in-law of Mr. Borst. McIntosh had claimed that two small orders of this lot had been changed. Do not know who first found these were wrong. I knew then of no question as to the ditch orders. Only the two named were in question. I suppose McIntosh paid 100 cents on the dollar for all the orders. I went Sunday eve to see McIntosh. He told me two small orders amounting to $100 had been raised and if they were not cared for he would make us trouble. I signed this contract thinking it would cover only the two orders. Do not think McIntosh knew then any others were bad. But afterwards, Boland and others looked them over and found more bad ones I took up my note by giving back that amount of orders that were found to be good. When this transaction occurred I did not dream that Borst had done such work. I was one of his bondsmen.

FRIDAY A. M. CONTINUED.

Wm. Kinsey sworn. Ex-clerk of Steuben County. Had made out a claim against DeKalb County for costs in the case of Auburn Machine Works vs DeKalb Co. I got the money in a draft, I never received any order. Got a draft $13.90. This order had been raised to $43.90, but stub was signed.

Frank Fisk came when called, but the state said did not want him now, he must wait.

The contract was read, in which McIntosh agreed to sell the orders as listed, to L. J. Miller who gave $1500 cash and a note of $1292.54 due in 30 days. The contract adds that he could not then turn over all said orders, as he had sold some of them. But he would get them back if he could, and such as he could not get back, he would endorse on the note of Miller as a payment made of that amount.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON

James Blake sworn, ex-trustee of Smithfield. Live in Ashley. Was shown stub of an order $72. It does not look like my writing. Do not remember whether I had a claim of that amount for poor. This March term 1893.

There being no more witnesses the record "K" of allowances by Board of Commissioners was introduced. In this is found a list of bills as allowed by the Board at each session covering the time the forgeries were done. If an order shows an amount different from that allowed on these bills, of course it has been changed, or is a forgery out of whole cloth. The list was read, at great length and included most of the orders that had already been introduced in connection with the witnesses who had been called. Several of them were made to Coffinberry for various services real or immaginary. And some of these orders were those about which Ex-Surveyor Hook has been sued, and for which he claims he was not accountable. In all cases, the stubs or orders, or both were in the court and were read to, and shown to the jurors.

The reading of these orders took till 5 p. m. And then more witnesses were called,

G. C. Ralston sworn, Ex-Sheriff. Term began in Nov. '92, and went out some date in '94. Order shown him. He thinks it was correct, but cannot remember as to amount. Was paid to me by treasurer, $333.64 services as as sheriff. Asked if he knew of this order being held by the treasurer after it was paid. Said he did not know, but had such was the case. Another of $466.65 was shown him. Thinks it was paid to him all right. He took it to the treasurer, who paid him the money. But it appears that each was endorsed by the treasurer, as "not paid for want of funds." Another for $34.26 was shown him. Think it was his first order or his salary. I presented it to Sawvel who protested it and I sold it to some one, do not remember to whom, Asked why this was protested, while the others after that were paid in cash. I found that I had to take a discount on the first order, and then when I got the next, I kicked and told the treasurer that I was entitled to full pay, and after that, they paid me cash, generally Cross Ex. Sold most of the orders that I did sell, to L. Bowers. Orders on odd accounts, such as for boarding prisoners, were not cashed by treasurer. May have sold one or two to McIntosh. But insisted on cash as much as could.

After G. C. Ralston had testified Friday evening, Geo. M. Henderson court reporter was called, and reported in short hand his own testimony as he gave it at the same time. It was in regard to the way in which the prosecutor got McIntosh's record of orders, at the time he was called before the grand jury. But the trial jury in this case, was sent out before Mr. Henderson began and as it is matter that came up before the grand jury, it was not thought proper that they should hear it. On Saturday morning this matter was continued by calling to the witness stand Mr. Bratton and Mr. McIntosh. The jury was still kept out. And for the reasons given above, it is not proper to report this part of the testimony. Hence it is not found in the COURIER.

(Several questions have been asked as to John Groscop's testimony. It seem he went to Dr. Nusbaum to borrow $50 in money The doctor did not have it for him, but gave him an order he had bought of some one calling for $60. This is the order that Groscop took to McIntosh and got cashed. Nusbaum has the note signed by John Groscop and A. W. Madden, and dated Nov. 9, '96. On this $25 was paid and endorsed, Aug. 17, '97, and on Aug 2, '97, $20 more. These facts were not brought out in the trial, but should be stated in order to make Groscop's testimony understood fully.)

Jury now called in and adjourned till tomorrow, Saturday morning at 8:30.

SATURDAY MORNING.

After the jury were called at 10 a. m. and Mr. Rowe, who was foreman of the grand jury before which Mr. McIntosh was called, was permitted to give the same testimony he gave this morning before the court when the jury were out. Then Geo. Henderson the court reporter was also acquired to read to the jury, the evidence he had given in the absence of the jury the evening before. The substance of what was sworn to by both these witnesses, as to what was done before the grand jury, is that McIntosh was called before them, while they were investigating the county troubles. He was told to bring before them his list of orders that he kept as a memorandum of what he had bought or sold. He replied that one of the books was too heavy. Mr. Roby who was concucting the examination for the prosecutor, told him if they were too heavy to get a dray. But Mr. McIntosh went and got a smaller book in which was this list. He objected to having the jury see certain parts of the book in which he had some private family matters. But did not object to showing his list of orders. On being assured that his book would be cared for he left it with them a day or two. On coming back however, he found that the paper and string with which it had been tied up, had been cut or opened, and believing his private matters were not being cared for, he told them he would sooner mutilate the book than to have it left there, and so cut out the pages on which was his record of orders, and this original list, he left with the grand jury. It was kept by Mr. Roby till he became judge, when it was turned over to Mr. Bratton with other papers that were likely to be used in this case.

Mr. Bratton here, read to the jury, the list of orders that McIntosh had bought and handled, as shown on the leaves torn out of the original record book in which he kept them. It covered the time a year or two before Coffinberry's term, and he bought them of persons all over the county, and also of nearly every officer, county and township who got pay for services out of the county treasury. Coming on up to the time of the forgeries, of course some of them were bad ones. At noon the court adjourned till 10 a. m. Monday.

EDWARD ORR.

Wayne Zonker brought word today that Edward Orr, died at his home in Corunna, yesterday morning after an illness of but a few days. He was one of the most prominent citizens of that place.

SEEING THE WIND

Did you ever try to see the wind? It is a very pretty experiment and one easily performed. In the first place choose a bright windy day, then secure a polished piece of metal (a hand saw will be the easiest to get.) Hold the mettallic surface at right angles to the wind. For example if the wind is in the north hold the saw east and west inclined about forty-five degrees to the horizon. Now look carefully at the sharp edge and you will shortly see the wind pouring over it like a watefall.—Ex.

THE POWER OF GOLD

Is Limited—The Power of Health is Unlimited—Both Rich and Poor May Have Health by Using

Dr. WHEELER'S NERVE VITALIZER

The rich need health to enjoy their riches. The poor doubly so to prevent greater poverty. Rich is he who has health, however poor in money. To be both poor and sickly is the extreme of poverty.

As all physical power, both mental and muscular, depends on the condition of the nerves, they should be strong and healthy. If strong, obey natures laws and keep them so. If weak and sickly, restore them to healthy action by using Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer, which is a specific for sick nerves.

Don't treat your stomach, liver, kidneys or blood, but look well to your nerves and they will correct the troublesome symptoms of all the organs. Read what Wm. McCutchen, Bucyrus, Ohio, says:

"My trouble was sleeplessness, caused, probably, by too close application to my business. I could feel that lack of sleep was surely undermining my general health. I tried several kinds of medicine advertised to cure such troubles, but they did me no good. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer was recommended. I knew it would cure me after I had taken the first dose. Natural and refreshing sleep restored the activity of both brain and body, and I was soon well."

Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer does not stimulate the nerves to unusual action. It arrests the waste of nerve tissue and builds up the frame work of health.

Worn Out?

Do you come to the close of the day thoroughly exhausted? Does this continue day after day, possibly week after week? Perhaps you are even too exhausted to sleep. Then something is wrong. All these things indicate that you are suffering from nervous exhaustion. Your nerves need feeding and your blood enriching.

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod-liver Oil, with Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda, contains just the remedies to meet these wants. The cod-liver oil gives the needed strength, enriches the blood, feeds the nerves, and the hypophosphites give them tone and vigor. Be sure you get SCOTT'S Emulsion.

ELECTION ECHOES.

Mark Hanna is likely to have a bare majority of 3 or 4 in the legislature. It was 60 to 70 before and he must feel as if the people of Ohio, on election day, did nothing but "Mark Hanna."

The republican governor of Ohio, gets a majority of about 25,000. Two years ago he had 91,000. Last year McKinly had 50,000 and now to come down to half that, shows how popular opinion runs.

Iowa gives a republican majority of less than half what it had last year.

In Nebraska, the republican ticket was defeated by a bigger majority than last year.

In Kentucky and Virginia, the democrats carried everything by large majorities.

Massasachusetts went republican by a smaller majority than last year.

MISER-WILLIAMSON.

As announced last night the wedding of Christ Miser of Richland township and Miss Bertha Williamson took place at the home of Mrs. Cowan, Rev. W. L. Meese officiating. After the ceremony a dainty luncheon was served and the happy couple then drove to the home of the groom where a supper was served. The COURIER extends congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Miser.

STOLE CORN.

Cal Husselman came down town this morning and swore out a warrant for the arrest of some movers who had camped near his farm a few nights ago, and stole about ten bushels of corn. The constable has been put on their trail and they will soon be run down.

NOT ALWAYS UNDERSTOOD

A fact often overlooked, or not always understood, is that women suffer as much from distressing kidney and bladder troubles as the men. The womb is situated back of and very close to the bladder, and for that reason any distress, disease or inconvenience manifested in the kidneys, back, bladder or urinary passage is often, by mistake, attributed to female weakness or womb trouble of some sort.

The error is easily made and may be as easily avoided by setting urine aside for twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling is evidence that your kidneys and bladder need doctoring. If you have pain or dull aching in the back, pass water to frequently, or scanty supply, with smarting or burning, these are also convincing proofs of kidney trouble If you have doctored without benefit, try Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy. The mild and extraordinary effect will surprise you. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures. If you take a medicine you should take the best. At druggists fifty cents and one dollar. You may have a sample bottle and pamphlet, both sent free by mail. Mention AUBURN COURIER and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The proprietors of this paper guarantee the genuineness of this offer.

HELLO!

Did you say that you were not feeling well and that your stomach was out of order? We'll then, try a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin and you are sure of relief. Constipation and indigestion cured. Sick headache cured. Greatest boon to mankind and is being appreciated by thousands. 10c will get you a trial size bottle. Larger sizes 50c and $1.00. Of DAVENPORT.

ONE DOSE.

One dose of "77" taken at the beginning of a cold is worth half a dozen afterwards. When you feel the first chill or shiver, or your throat feels scrapey, is the easy time to cold or check the Grip. This is why so many people keep a vial of "77" handy in the poket, on the office desk, or in the home. If you forget your bottle, you will be safe in asking your friend for a dose; it will be considered a compliment. "77" is everywhere. Neglected Colds take longer, but are "always broken up" by "77". CORNER STONE LAYING.

November 17, the corner stone of the new court house in Fort Wayne will be laid. They had four court houses in seventy years. The first steps towards having a court house were taken in May 1831. This one cost $3,341, and lasted ten years. The second was begun in 1841, and cost $15,000, and lasted eleven years. The third one, the one recently torn down, cost $78,000.

(Ashley Times.)

G. H. Yesbera, of Auburn, has rented the Moyer brick store room and will put in a stock of clothing and gents furnishing goods as soon as some necessary changes are made. A plate glass front will be put in, counters and shelving remodeled, electric lighting etc., the building is to be ready for occupancy by the 10th. Mr. Ostrander, who has been Yesbera's head clerk for six or seven years will move his family here and have charge of the business. He is a young man thoroughly competent and a hustler and as Yesbera has plenty of capital they will put in a good stock of up-to-date goods and will surely draw a large trade. Yesbera the clothier is known all over this section and his many friends will be glad to have him locate here. They have leased the building for one year with privilege of renewal and have come here to stay with us. Ashley extends to them a hearty welcome.

Depew On a Great Railroad.

"Talking about great railroads," said Chauncey Depew, "the Chicago & North-Western with its 8,000 miles of track is about the liveliest railroad on this continent."

"The North-Western trains run to St. Paul, and, in fact, over the Union Pacific to California. It is the only road that you can ride fifty miles an hour on from Chicago to Ogden and Portland, Oregon, without changing cars" "Where else does the 'North-West' run to?" I asked.

"Why everywhere. It is an all-over-creation railroad. It spreads out like a great fan from Chicago. It runs straight through to Milwaukee, Madison, St. Paul, Duluth, Superior, Ashland and the copper and iron mines of North Michigan. It runs straight through Wisconsin, Minnesota and South Dakota, to Pierre on the Missouri, and Oakes on the Northern Pacific. It shoots a train straight through Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Omaha, Nebraska, to the Black Hills in South Dakota, and to the Asphalt lakes beyond Fort Casper, in Montana. It draws the tin from Harney's Peak, and corn from Lincoln, Hastings and Superior, Nebraska."

"And makes time on all these roads?"

"Its engines are the best in the world, and its cars the newest. Makes time? Why, Eli, they tell me that when their great overland twelve-car train shoots into Omaha you will see the Union Pacific officials standing at the end of the bridge, watches in hand waiting to set them by the train!"—Eli Perkins' Railroad Letter.

GASOLENE ACCIDENT.

Mrs. Fred Yesbera narrowly escaped a serious and possibly fatal injury Tuesday. Her gasolene stove became unmanageable and the flames had gotten so far beyond control as to burn her hands and wrists severely. She then ran to the door, and while weak from exhaustion and fright, she saw Mr. and Mrs. McIntosh and George Henderson going on their way home from court, and called to them. They hurried in and Mr. McIntosh succeeded in extinguishing the flames and then they helped to bind up and care for the burns on Mrs. Yesbera's hands. She is not seriously injured though the burns are painful. But had not help come along it might have been more serious.

THE 250TH.

The Presbyterians expect to celebrate their 250th anniversary this coming year. In 1643 the English Parliament then made up of Protestants, called Puritans or Roundheads, had a general meeting of English speaking protestants called and that meeting, which held a session of nearly a year, adopted what is called the Westminister Confession of Faith, which is the foundation of the Presbyterian doctrines of to-day. It does not appear that they have decided on any particular day, but each Presbytery will celebrate when it chooses, but sometime during the year. It would appear from this that the Presbyterian church is next to the oldest of the protestant churches, the Lutherans being the oldest

FRANK B. DAVENPORT, JAMES R. RIGY,
CAPT. N. L. HANSEN, CHAS. REICHARDT, E. T. MILLIGAN.

To those desiring to secure a share in the wealth of the wonderful Gold Fields of Alaska and the Klondike, the Merchant's Alaska Mining Company offers an unequaled opportunity.

WHILE all cannot go to Alaska, there are many who realize the opportunities that have been opened up there, and would make an investment if they could be assured that their money would be honestly handled, and that they would receive their proper share of the profits.

The MERCHANT'S ALASKA MINING COMPANY offers such an investment. It is a reliable, honest enterprise, directed by responsible men of business standing and character. It has associated with it mutually the firm of Atkins & Milligan, Mining Engineers and Operators, whose long experience and success in the mining business is a guarantee of the investments of its funds in the most renumerative manner, and whose reputation and business standing among mining circles is second to none. Their thorough acquaintance with the Northwest Mining Regions enables them to grasp opportunities others would overlook, and keep out of those ventures their experience has shown to be unsafe. The engineers and prospectors who will go to Alaska for the Company will be men of reputation for honesty and capability.

What the Company Will Do.

The lines upon which this Company will operate are novel in many particulars, and particularly adapted to the conditions in Alaska, and are sure to acquire for the Company large interests and reap immense profits for the stockholders.

First.

It will prospect and locate min in mining claims through agents and prospectors, and by grubstaking reliable miners to stake and operate claims on shares.

Second:

It will develop, operate, buy and sell mines and mining property.

Third:

It will acquire interests in claims already staked out and partly developed, whose owners are out of supplies and money, and who are unable to proceed with work, but who have good claims; by advancing money, supplies and labor to such owners in consideration of an interest in their property.

Fourth:

It will conduct a general mining and mercantile business in Alaska, British Columbia, Northwest Territory, the United States and elsewhere in accordance with the terms of this charters, as opportunities may present.

The Company is now the owner of the "CELTIC" Mineral Claim located in the famous Big Bend District in the rich Kootenay Country, British Columbia. Late reports from this property give promise of rich developments. The camp in which it is located is a thriving one, rapidly building up. The assay on this property shows an average of from $10 to $15 per ton in gold. Every stockholder in this Company becomes on receipt of his stock a part owner in this property in addition to the interests he will acquire in every investment of the company in Alaska. This property will not be developed at present, all the efforts of the Company being directed towards Alaska, the land of such wonderful opportunities.

A limited amount of the stock of the company is for sale at Fifty Cents per share. The stock at this figure is very low, and should advance in price at an early date. Subscriptions should be made at once to secure it at that figure. The Directors reserve the right to advance the price of stock or withdraw the same from the market without notice

McINTOSH HIMSELF

Explains to the Jury His Innocence of the charge,

MR. BORSTS' TESTIMONY

The Testimony all in and the Lawyers making Pleas.

BORST'S TESTIMONY CONTINUED FROM WEDNESDAY.

I do not know the amount of these bad orders. I see the papers say there were yet between $6,000 and $7,000 unpaid bad orders still outstanding and ordered not paid by the bondsmen. Cannot remember any special one of these bad orders. Was shown some orders a part of which he wrote and a part of which Dills wrote. I found bad orders after a time that I suspected Dills had drawn. There was no understanding between us three. I presume Coffinberry knew what Dills and I were doing. McIntosh helped some in the office. Some times he took up the order book to see who had orders.

Coffinberry was cautious in drawing these orders, sometimes having the stub smaller than the face. This was done to prevent anyone from finding out, The records were kept in the office and no doubt McIntosh looked over those books. He did not look for the stubs of the orders we had torn out and put in his envelope while he was absent. Knows G. W. Clayton who lives in Chicago. Don't think he is a ditcher. He was a traveling salesman, but I met him at the dog show there Think he was a dog fancier. I never saw this order till after the investigation began. I do not remember that McIntosh ever had his attention called to an improper order. But after this investigation began, he came to me to ask about some orders he thought were bad, McIntosh told me one was dangerous, and it should be destroyed, I destroyed it. Was shown an order, and said I think I wrote the stub, I erased the name. This was shown to the jurors. I think the name scratched out is Warren Alwood. I wrote the order without the authority of Alwood. McIntosh advised me to destroy it. I do not know as No. 487 is an illegal order. Could tell by hunting through the records. In 1896 McIntosh worked for me amounting to about $20. I gave him this order in payment and he paid me the difference in money. When the investigation began McIntosh came and asked me about two orders that were in question as to being good. One of the orders was the Clayton order. The other order may or may not be the Alwood order. At the time he came to me to ask about these orders, people had become aware there were many bad orders out and he was getting uneasy about his. Something was said that perhaps Alwood had not signed his name. I said I would sign Alwood's name, but he said I had no right and he would make me trouble if I did it. After he had gone, I erased Alwood's name. This was done in the auditor's office. Think the whole Alwood order is in my handwriting. McIntosh was looking for the records of these orders and we found this stub, He said to me, "That is a dangerous thing to do," and that it would be forgery as I had no right to sign Alwood's name. This was after the trouble over county matters had begun. McIntosh said in substance, that it was my handwriting, and if so it was a grave matter, a forgery. Understood McIntosh was being treated for disease resulting from army service. Witness said that after orders had been taken from the book, only the stub remained and no one could tell by looking at this book then, whether the order and the stub agreed, or whether one was bad or both. When settlements were made, many orders would be outstanding, and in that case they would not appear at the settlement and so would not be noticed. I did not tell Judge McBride I destroyed the Alwood order or stub, but only erased the signature on the stub.

Cross-ex. by McBride, you never knew of McIntosh being treated for mental weakness. And Judge McClellan turned the laught by asking if McBride had ever been treated for mental weakness. McBride called up the Stomm orders, that had been raised from $12 to $42. But he could not remember whether he had made these changes. The Stomm orders and similar ones, were allowed by the Board for the proper amount, but the orders may have been drawn later, for a different amount.

Borst was asked by the state whether McIntosh had threatened him as to the stub of Alwood order. No. he made no threats. He seemed to recognize my handwriting and told me that was a bad thing and dangerous, a grave offense, and I would be liable to suffer for it. We were friendly but McIntosh was probably despondent at finding he had some bad orders. I did not think he was angry. He said in substance it was forgery.

Reuben Sawvel sworn. Has lived in the county about fifty years. Resided in Auburn nearly seven years. Was county treasurer two terms, the same four years as Coffinberry was auditor. I have learned since this trouble began, that Coffinberry drew bad orders. I mean Mr. Coffinberry personally. I did know his deputies were drawing more or less of bad orders, about the latter part of my first term of two years. I got hold of this, by having a claim of my own, that was filled out for a greater sum than was in my bill. Borst and I divided the excess. Salary orders were correct. It was other orders that were forged. Do not know that Dills drew any orders in excess of the allowance. Borst and I shared in a few of the bad orders, but no one else did. Dills and Coffinberry did not share with us in any orders. Did McIntosh know of your forgeries or share in the proceeds? Ans. "He knew nothing of it, as far as I ever knew and got no share of the money." He was examined as to the details of keeping records in the treasurer's office. D. Z Hoffman assisted me when I first took charge of the office. He admitted he is now serving a term in punishment for these forgeries.

Borst and I got nearly an equal share of these bad orders.

Cross ex by McBride. Mr. Hoffman helped about five weeks. McIntosh helped me sometimes. He made my monthly reports during the four years. I made monthly reports and at close of each year I made a final or yearly report or settlement. McIntosh made a good many entries while helping me. I never had any deal with Coffinberry as to raised orders. But he had come to me early and asked me to help in taking out some old orders, quite small ones. He asked me to go in with him and take these up and get the cash on them. They were not probably over $40 in all. I got half and Coffinberry half. (It should be explained that these old orders were some that had remained many years on the order book uncalled for. Finally the Commissioners advertised in the COURIER that all of these old orders not called for by a certain date, would be outlawed and payment refused. But just before the time was up, Coffinberry came so Sawvel says, and asked him to go in and the two would take up these old orders. He said the county owed the money to some one and the owners were not likely to come for them and the county would really lose nothing They finally did this, signed the old stubs and claimed the money as assignees of the proper parties, and got their cash. This apparently trifling affair it seems was the first step in crime, for Sawvel at least. We suppose they did not look at it as beinng a real crime. But it seems to have got them started in their criminal course. At least this is the idea Sawvel carries.) Was shown some bad orders. One that he and Borst had divided a raised order of $117 which should have been only $17. He got $50 of the extra $100 and Borst $50 I may have got some orders in Coffinberry's name, as I bought some of his claims. As to the Ralston orders, he presumes Ralston told it correctly, when he said he cashed all after the first. Interest was paid, I presume on these Ralston orders, but McIntosh did not get any of it.

Re-direct by Judge Best. But again the most of it was about the details of the office work and had little or nothing to do with the McIntosh case. Was shown some of the records of his office in McIntosh's handwriting, which he recognized. Adjourned to 8:30 Thursday morning.

THURSDAY MORNING.

Dr. Swarts called. Has been in practice here 31 years. Known McIntosh all this time, has been a patient of mine. Had chronic diarrhœa and hemorrhoids. Operated on him six years ago. Examined at length as to the defendant's disability.

Cross-ex by McBride. Did you treat him for weak mind? No. He had enough other ailments.

Judge McClellan sworn. As to orders sold to Nettie Chamberlain. She had said she bought those orders of McIntosh. I saw her sitting in treasurer's office with some money in her hand, and seemed to be waitang for Fair to do something, I did not see McIntosh Cross-ex. She had a whole handful. I did not know whether she had just received that in change from the treasurer or not.

M. Boland recalled. Was asked if Sawvel had not paid back the full amount principal and interest on all the bad orders he had helped in.

W. H. McIntosh sworn. Have lived in this town for 31 years, and is now 60 years old. A native of Massachusetts. Am one of the defendants in this case. First he was a merchant, with James Case. In army 3 years. Taught one year in Adams Co. Then came to Auburn, had been appointed Co. Supt. I also taught school here and in Butler 5 years in all. Then I also taught in Corunna. Then I worked in Pa., and N. Y. writing county histories for a company. I was at this two years. The wages were $2000 and $2500 a year and car fare paid. I was again made Co. Supt. in '79. Got about $600 a year out of it. At different times have helped in various offices, during busy times, say about 25 days in a year. Also worked for commissioners as they might need in settling with trustees. For several years, I and 'Squire Walborn have been an auditing committee on these matters. I have always bought county orders. Have kept a list of the orders I have bought since July 3, 1891. Was shown his list of orders and recognized it as the one cut out of his book. I bought orders of anyone who had them to sell. I had about $8000 invested in orders. Can't say just how much when Fair went out. Latery when I sold orders, it would be the ones run longest. I got accrued interest and a premium of 1 per cent. I have had a pension of $24 since '90, and $8 before that. My father died in '78, and I got $500 In '90 my mother died and and I got $3,200 from her estate. I own 3 lots and the building. The other house and lot belong to my daughter. My own property cost $4000. When I went to Pa., to work I was worth about $2000. I got my first intimation that there was something wrong in these orders, when it was found that Fair had two raised orders. Had no suspicion of bad orders being out till then. Think I heard of Fair's orders in December last year. Later heard Judge McClellan say that two of Coffinberry's orders had been raised. Then in February last, James H. Rose came to my house, with a large list of orders, and asked me if I had any of them. We went over them, and I found I had one or two of them. Next mornin went to the commissioners room, and we found things looked bad. Borst looked over with me. I saw he hesitated on one or two orders. I sent word to Chas Kelley to come. Went to Miller's that evening. He was not at home. But he came to my house next morning and asked me to investigate the matter further. I went to the surveyor, and Van Auken gave me to understand that ditch orders seemed in danger. I went to John Baxter, and he said I better get Miller to fix up. Kelley also came, and put in the orders he had, and others I had sold to, did the same. Miller paid $1500 cash and for the the rest gave his note $1202. These outside parties brought in about $2000. Kelley alone had $1400 a part of which he got from me and a part from others. Mrs Swineford had an order, and Engelbert Ashley, and E. Orr. I intended to give to Miller all I had or had sold to others. Miller took up this note by paying me back, the good orders as they were found goo Miller asked me if I would take back all orders that Ernst said were good. I did this and have the orders now. He showed them to the court. A list of them was read. It included a few that the Board had found ok in "Ex-

SUMMARY OF A WEEK'S HAPPENINGS.

The Latest News as Flashed Over the Wires from All Parts of the World—Regarding Politics, Religion, Casualties, Commerce, and Industry.

FIRE AT FOSTORIA.

Best Block in the City Laid in Ruins, Entailing a Loss of Over $50,000.

An explosion of a quantity of gasoline in the basement of the Alcott Building caused one of the most disastrous fires in the history of Fostoria, Ohio. In a very few minutes the entire building was in flames and was entirely demolished. It was one of the finest business blocks in the city. The ground floor was occupied by the Maberry shoe store, Vogel Bros. tailoring store, Western Union Telegraph Company, American Express Company and Alicott Hardware Company. The upper floors were occupied by the Pioneer Club, the Odd Fellows and Physicians' offices. The loss will reach $50,000.

Germany to Chastise Hayti.

The German warship Gefion is under orders to sail for Port Au Prince, Hayti, this month, in order to insist upon redress for the arrest there of Herr Lueders, a German subject, and his unlawful imprisonment, for which Count Scherwein, the German minister at Port Au Prince, has demanded indemnity. The fitting out of the war ship is being hastened as much as possible. The officials of the German Foreign Office do not believe the matter will be adjusted for some time, because the Haytien Government has assumed a stubborn attitude. The German newspapers are blaming the Government for the delay in bringing Hayti to terms.

Search for Gold.

San Francisco special: When the schooner Vine sails the last of the week she will carry the members of one of the best equipped expeditions which has gone out of this port to look for gold in Central America. They are officers of the Spanish American Developing and Mining Company. They say they have concessions from San Salvador, Costa Rica and Guatemala for 60,000 acres of territory which lies at points of contact with the countries, covering the mineral development of the tracts. The claim is made that the company has a capital stock of $8,000,000, with one-half paid up.

Train Held Up.

The St. Louis fast mail on the Missouri Pacific Railway was held up just east of Independence, Mo., by five masked men. Two robbers, disguised as women, swinging lanterns, flagged the train without trouble, as the engineer seeing an apparent signal of danger, did not hesitate to stop. After searching the express car and finding nothing valuable, the robbers quickly disappeared in the darkness. The train proceeded on its way. The scene of the hold-up was within a mile of the famous blue cut, in which so many robberies on the Chicago and Alton Railroad occurred.

The Competitor's Crew.

Dispatches received at Havana from Madrid confirm the previous reports to the effect that the prisoners captured on board the American schooner Competitor, in April, 1896, will be included in the general amnesty decree soon to be issued. The second trial by court marshal of the Competitor's crew was to have begun on Monday last, but was postponed on account of sickness of the president of the court.

Fight Over a Corpse.

A ghoulish episode that has thrown humane circles into a state of indignation occurred when two local undertakers engaged in a fist fight to get possession of "Old Bob" Keyes' body at Saginaw, Mich. Deceased died at St. Mary's, and the body was sent to the morgue. Undertaker Konkle secured the corpse, but Undertaker Deisler replevined the same. The affair will be settled in the courts.

New State Out of New York.

A move is on foot to carve another State out of New York. This State, to be known as Manhattan, would be composed of the sixteen lower counties, and would have a population of 3,902,300. The remaining forty-four counties would have a population of 2,631,123.

Fortune for Mrs. McKinley.

The Campbell family, including John and Alexander Campbell of Warren, Ohio, Mrs. McKinley, mother of President McKinley, and others have notice of a fortune left them in Scotland by an ancestor. The estate is large and steps will be taken to secure it.

IMPROVEMENT IS LIKELY.

Various Causes Presage the Brightening Up of the Retail Trade.

Bradstreet's commercial report says: "Killing frosts South, the raising of quarantine embargoes at nearly all States invaded by yellow fever, the resumption of traffic and a prospective revival in demand for staple merchandise constitute the trade features of the week. Rains in central western and western States, followed by colder weather, have favored farmers and stimulated demand from interior storekeepers. This has had a favorable effect at Louisville, St. Louis and Kansas City. Jobbers in northwestern States are awaiting seasonable weather to stimulate the movement of heavy dry goods and winter clothing. Leading manufacturing industries continue fairly well employed. In addition to lower prices for Southern and Bessemer pig and for steel billets, quotations for naval stores, wools, copper, coffee, pork, flour, oats and wheat are lower, while those for cotton, print cloths, sugar and beef are unchanged, and for Indian corn and lead, are a shade higher. Wheat exports—flour included as wheat—from both coasts of the United States and from Montreal this week aggregate 5,575,216 bushels, compared with 5,911,391 bushels last week. Exports of Indian corn this week amount to 2,199,550 bushels, compared with 1,589,000 bushels last week."

GOOD MARKET IN ITALY.

Consul General de Castro Says Americans Neglect It.

Consul General Hector de Castro, at Rome, in a report to the State Department at Washington, says that if business men of the United States would give the same attention to Italy which they do to other countries they could largely increase their trade. He says there were no bidders at the auction for furnishing American tobacco to the Government monopoly, and the Minister of Finance sent a representative to New York for the purpose of purchasing tobacco direct in various markets. The Consul General also says that according to the latest news received at the office of the Ministry of Agriculture of Italy the wheat harvest this year has been estimated at 86,836,700 bushels, or about 60 per cent. of last year's production.

NO WAR NEWS IN THIS.

Sicard's Actions Are Pointed To as Proof of Peaceable Disposition.

A dispatch to the New York Herald from Washington says: As further evidence of the peaceful condition of the relations of the United States and Spain, navy department officials point to the program, adopted by Rear Admiral Sicard, commander of the North Atlantic squadron, for the next month. Repairs to the ships will occupy some weeks, but as each is put in condition for service Rear Admiral Sicard proposes to send it to sea for individual drill. It is expected that the squadron will remain at New York until about the middle of December, when it will proceed to Hampton Roads, which will be the base of the squadron's winter evolutions.

Riddled with Lead.

"Buck" Wakeman, alias George Thorne, alias Red Buck, the noted desperado and last of the famous Dalton gang of outlaws, was killed near Checotah, I. T., in a fight with two of United States Marshal Bennett's deputies, Geo. Lawson and "Hez" Bussie. Wakeman was a partner of "Dynamite" Dick, and was one of the gang who broke jail at Guthrie, O. T., last year with "Neel" Doolin, "Dynamite" Dick and others. Deputies Lawson and Bussie had been on Wakeman's trail for the last two months. He was located sixteen miles west of Checotah, I. T., but escaped after being shot in the arm and having lost his Winchester. He was tracked for several hours and again located in a log cabin between sundown and dark. Lawson ordered him to surrender, but he refused and began knocking chinks from between the logs to prepare for battle. When Lawson attempted to set the house on fire Wakeman came to the door and began firing. After about twenty shots had been fired Wakeman fell riddled with bullets. A reward of $2,500 had been offered for his capture.

After a Reciprocity Treaty.

A reciprocity treaty between Canada and the United States is what is particularly sought by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the Dominion Premier, who is now in Washington. The Behring Sea controversy is but an incident, and the concessions which Canada and Great Britain are prepared to make in the protection of the seal herds will be used as inducements in persuading the United States to accept the proposition which Sir Wilfrid is authorized to make. Sir Wilfrid comes with full power to negotiate and sign a treaty which will settle not only the sealing controversy, but all the causes of friction and misunderstanding between the British colony and her nearest neighbor. Among these are the immigration matters, bonding of Canadian railroads, the Frazier River dispute, and chiefly, the tariff hindrance to a free commercial relation between the two countries. The presence of Americans in the Canadian Klondike territory will also be used as a club to obtain concessions in the other matters.

Gen. Wade Hampton's Report.

Gen. Wade Hampton, who has just been succeeded by Gen. Longstreet as commissioner of railroads, has submitted to the interior department at Washington his report for the last fiscal year. He says that the year marked the low-water mark of railway construction. During the year thirty-four companies, with 5,441 miles of road, passed into the hands of the courts, and fifty-eight others previously placed in receivership were sold at foreclosure. A steady improvement in railroad earnings during the first six months of the current year is noted, an improvement particularly apparent in the bond-aided Pacific railroads. The outlook in the West generally for the present year is reported encouraging.

Law May Take Its Course.

The United States Supreme Court has affirmed the decision of the Circuit Court for the California district refusing a writ of habeas corpus to William Henry Theodore Durrant, under sentence of death for the murder of Miss Blanche Lamont in San Francisco in April, 1895. The decision permits the law to take its course with the condemned man.

Deplorable Condition of Cubans.

"American citizens in Cuba are not starving, but I believe many others are." General Fitzhugh Lee, consul general at Havana, made this statement at New York, from whence he has sailed on the Ward Line steamship Segurance. He added: "When I left Cuba many were dying of starvation. In Havana I did not see very much distress, but there was plenty in other parts of the island. During my absence I understand matters have grown much worse. There was no starvation at the place in Havana called Los Pesos when I left, but I am informed that destitute Cubans are starving there now and that there have been many deaths due to lack of food in other cities. The condition of the poorer classes in Cuba is deplorable. So far as the American citizens and their families are concerned, ample care is being taken of those who are in want. The appropriation by Congress of $50,000 for their relief will last for some time yet, certainly until after Congress meets again. We are taking care of 1,400 American citizens in Cuba. They are scattered all over the island—not in the country, but in the cities and towns. But for the action of Congress many of these Americans would have starved."

GOLD IS MORE PLENTY.

Interesting Figures Regarding the Currency of the United States.

The first annual report of Ellis H. Roberts, treasurer of the United States, has just been completed. It shows, among other things, that money is much easier than it was a year ago. At the end of the fiscal year of 1896 the aggregate currency and specie in circulation was $1,507,467,531, while at the close of the fiscal twelve months of 1897 this amount increased to $1,641,190,097, while during the same period the total stock of money in circulation and in the treasury mints increased from $2,348,338,571 to $2,500,371,978. A gratifying improvement in the condition of the stock of money has occurred in the increased proportion of gold which has entered into circulation. The estimated gain of gold to the country in the fifteen months ending Oct. 1 is placed at $112,511,570, of which about $43,000,000 came from abroad. The redemption of national bank notes during the period covered by the treasurer's report entailed an expenditure of $125,061.73, which the national banks had to pay at the rate of $1.07 per $1,000 of notes redeemed. A special deposit of $70,000 of United States 4 per cent. bonds is held in the name of the comptroller of the currency for the benefit of the unfortunate Fidelity National Bank of Cincinnati.

TO FIGHT SUGAR TRUST.

Independent Refineries to Handle Bulk of Hawaiian Crop.

A special telegram from San Francisco says: Plans have been perfected and the assurance is given that everything will be in readiness for fighting the sugar trust Jan. 1, when the five-year contract of the Hawaiian planters at the Western sugar refinery will expire. It will continue to handle that portion of the crop, say from 40,000 to 50,000 tons, which Claus Spreckels can control. Of the remainder of 225,000 tons, 150,000 tons will be placed on the market by the California Beet Sugar and Refining Company, in which Welch & Co., George W. McNear and their friends are the principal elements. Of the 150,000 tons of raw island sugar, 90,000 tons will be sent to New York, where it has already been sold to refineries, independent of the trust. The remaining 60,000 tons will be refined at the California Beet Sugar and Refinery Company's works at Crockett, on the straits of Carquinez.

Did Not Appear for Trial.

Ex-State Treasurer Booker, of Grand Forks, N. D., is among the missing. Some time ago Booker was indicted by the Federal grand jury for making a fraudulent report to the comptroller of the currency on the condition of the Grand Forks National Bank, of which he was president. When his case was called in the United States court, Booker failed to respond, and his bonds were declared forfeited.

Follows His Fiancee.

Two weeks ago Lynn Taylor went to Cincinnati instead of appearing at the side of Miss Mary Burns, at Cynthiana, Ky., the evening he was to make her his bride. The mortified and heartbroken girl took the matter so seriously as to prefer death by suicide to facing life afterward. Taylor committed suicide from remorse, adopting the same method as did Miss Burns, his affianced bride. He hanged himself.

TELLS A GORY TALE.

MRS. NACK COULD NOT KEEP HER BLOODY SECRET.

Miserable Woman Reveals the Awful Mystery of How the Unfortunate Guldensuppe Was Murdered by Martin Thorn—Must Have a New Trial.

Confession of the Crime.

The trial of Martin Thorn for the murder of William Guldensuppe, begun at Long Island City, was suspended owing to the dangerous illness of Juror Magnus Larsen. The jury was discharged and a new trial ordered. Juror Larsen was taken ill and physicians called to attend him found that he was suffering from appendicitis. An operation was successfully performed upon the sick juror, and it is expected that he will be able to leave his bed in two weeks. All evidence for the prosecution, whose case was nearly completed, will have to be introduced again, and Mrs. Nack will be required to go on the stand and tell her horrible story anew. The Guldensuppe murder was committed, according to Mrs. Nack's confession, on Friday, June 25, in a cottage rented for that purpose in Woodside, L. I. On that date William Guldensuppe, a Turkish bath attendant, was killed by Martin Thorn, a barber, and his rival in the affections of Mrs. Nack. The latter was at the Woodside cottage at the time of the murder and aided in covering up the traces of the crime.

MARTIN THORN.

The woman confessed in the witness chair that she and Martin Thorn murdered William Guldensuppe. She related the awful details of the crime without flinching, without a tremor. At times she even smiled as she spoke the words that doomed to the electric chair the pitiable wretch who had staked his soul for love of her.

THE WOODSIDE COTTAGE.

How the Deed Was Planned.

Mrs. Nack told of her arrival in this country; how she left her husband and went to live with Guldensuppe. Then she advertised for a lodger, and Thorn came. Early in June he and Guldensuppe quarreled. They fought, and Guldensuppe got so much the better of it that Thorn had to go to the hospital for two weeks. Thorn came back, and with Mrs. Nack planned revenge. Woodside, L. I., was selected as a good place for the consummation of the plot. "We hired the house," she continued. "Thorn gave the name of Brown. Thorn said to me that I should bring Guldensuppe over, and that Guldensuppe should be killed. I went home and told Guldensuppe that he should come with me and look at a house. We left New York between 9 and 10 o'clock in the morning. We came in the ferry, and took the trolley car that passed the house.

MRS. NACK.

"When Guldensuppe and I got to the house I gave Guldensuppe the key. He went in. I went to the back; then I heard a shot. Thorn came downstairs and said: 'I've shot Guldensuppe. He's dead.' I was almost dead myself. Thorn told me to go home and come back. I got oil cloth to cover the parts of the body and went back to the Woodside house. Thorn was there. We went over a ferry. Thorn had the head. It was wrapped in gray paper. He told me he threw it in the river. When we landed in New York we took the First avenue car. I went home. I met Thorn Thursday morning at the Thirty-fourth street ferry. We went to the house in Woodside by a trolley car. Thorn told me he had a big parcel; he could not carry it. I hired a carriage. We were not long in the house on June 26. We took the breast part and went to New York together. We took a downtown ferry. When we were crossing the ferry Thorn left me. He came back and said he had thrown it overboard.

"On Saturday I got the carriage and we went to Woodside again. Thorn told me he had a bottle of ammonia, and to clean up the blood stains. I cleaned up blood stains. I took a parcel Thorn gave me and put it in the bottom of the carriage. We drove to a place where both sides was woods. He said: 'This is the place where we're going to fire it down.' We took it out and fired it down over the bank. It was dark. We drove back. I got out and went home. He delivered the carriage. I met Thorn Monday night at Twenty-third street and Ninth avenue. We had no conversation. I went home. I don't know where he went. I did not see him again after that at all."

JOSEPH LADUE IS ROBBED.

Klondike Millionare Loses Nuggets of Gold in Chicago.

Joseph Ladue, "the bonanza king of the Klondike," was robbed of $950 worth of gold nuggets at the Lake Shore depot in Chicago Thursday afternoon just as he stepped from the 4 o'clock limited train from New York City. With Mr. Ladue was E. I. Rosenfeld, a friend and business associate from New York, who had gone to Grand Crossing to meet him. They alighted from the train together, stepped briskly to the Pacific avenue entrance and hailed a cab. The horse had just started when Ladue sprang from his seat and shouted: "It's gone!" The cab was stopped, while the Klondiker and his companion searched the cushions and Ladue's pockets. Then they hurried back and informed the depot police that a leather pouch containing thirty-five ounces of gold nuggets had been stolen from Ladue's overcoat pocket. The only hope of detection the officers rely upon is the difficulty that will beset the thief and his accomplices when they attempt to dispose of that amount of gold.

"After carrying many times that amount about the snowy fields of Alaska in safety it seems hard to be robbed in the heart of civilization," said Mr. Ladue. "I brought two bags of nuggets from New York. The one contained about $250 in gold, the other $700. Both were in my satchel. As the train pulled in at the depot I slipped the bags into my overcoat pocket. I felt the weight dragging on my coat as I passed out of the car and it is strange that I did not miss it as soon as it was taken. It is the first time I was ever held up like that."

SEALING COMES FIRST.

The International Conference Begins in Washington.

The experts representing the three governments, the United States, England and Canada, assembled at the State Department in Washington. There were present Messrs. Jordan, Thompson and McCoun. In addition Gen. Foster and Mr. Hamlin were in attendance for the United States and Sir Louis Davies for Canada. Sir Julian Pauncefote sent a note excusing himself from coming on account of illness.

The meeting lasted for about an hour, and presumably the proceedings were mainly preliminary and designed to outline a plan of procedure. Mr. Hamlin was elected chairman. It was officially stated that the proceedings were in the sense that nothing could be given out for publication before the end of the deliberations. The treaty which was negotiated last week between the United States and Japan and Russia for the further protection of the seals was not referred to in the first meeting, although its general provisions are known to the British delegates. The feature of the treaty is said to be the short time it is to continue in force, the limit being one year.

President McKinley received Sir Wilfrid Laurier, premier of Canada, in the blue room at the White House. Secretary Sherman introduced Sir Wilfrid, who was accompanied by Sir Julian Pauncefote, British ambassador Sir Louis Davies and Prof. Thompson, the British seal expert. The visit was entirely formal.

The Canadian premier received callers in very democratic fashion at his apartments in the Shoreham, but to all he gave the reply that it would be manifestly premature at this stage for him to discuss the outlook on the Bering sea question or any other subjects which concern the United States and Canada. He and Sir Louis desired first to communicate with the seal experts of the United States and Great Britain before indicating any course of action. He made it clear, also, that they would give their exclusive attention to this subject until some conclusion was reached, and that other questions, such as reciprocity, border immigration, etc., would not be referred to until the first purpose of the visit was accomplished. It was stated that the official purpose of the visit was to consider the Bering sea matter, and that future circumstances would develop how far other questions would be opened to consideration.

FARMERS CONGRATULATED.

An Improvement in the Price of Most Products of the Farm.

The National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, convened in the Supreme Court chamber at Harrisburg, Pa. Delegates from almost all the States represented in the national body were present. National Master J. H. Brigham, assistant Secretary of Agriculture, was in the chair and submitted his annual report. He said:

We have reason to rejoice over the marked improvement in the prices of most products of the farm. The prices now received are not burdensome to the consumer but remunerative to the farmer and if maintained will cause a marked advance in the value of farm lands. It is also a highly gratifying sign of the times that the business failures in the South and Southwest in July, August and September of the present year represented in the aggregate of their liabilities only $4,394,000, as compared with $11,498,000 during the corresponding period of the preceding year.

Earnest efforts are being made to extend our markets in foreign countries and to secure the abolition of the discriminating restrictions and prohibitions unjustly maintained by certain foreign countries against the agricultural products.

Congress will undoubtedly be urged by interested associations to appropriate large sums of money to build dams, reservoirs and canals for the purpose of irrigating the arid lands of the West. It is not the policy of our grange to espouse the cause of any political party or indorse the policies advocated by either, but when the people have settled the questions at issue, we accept their decision and try to secure for agriculture fair treatment in the legislation carrying into effect the policy indorsed by the people.

WED OR LEAVE HOME.

Four St. Louis Girls Must Hustle for Husbands.

In St. Louis is a father who has grown tired of seeing young men call on his daughters with no apparent intention of marrying them. To prevent any more dilly-dallying, he has issued to his four girls an ultimatum which compels them to either marry before Dec. 1 or leave the parental roof and shift for themselves.

THE BURKHART GIRLS.

The man's name is Jacob Burkhart, the daughters being Lotta, Emma, Ella and Laura. The family lives at 4511 North Twentieth street, at least Mr. Burkhart does, for all his daughters have now left him. The girls are good-looking, domesticated and accomplished. Each would make an excellent wife. One of them, Ella, might have been married before Dec. 1, but that her father's ultimatum has caused her to defer her plans rather than yield to his insistence. She has fled from her home, not waiting for the ides of November to pass.

Jacob Burkhart is 63 years old, of slight physique, gray hair and straggling white beard, but wiry and tough and full of nervous energy. He is terse rather than brilliant in conversation. He said: "I don't believe in forcing girls to marry, but I don't believe in them growing up totally dependent upon their parents. I think there is too much courting. Young upstarts, with their hair parted in the middle run around to see the girls, never intending to marry. I set my foot down on such capers. My girls have had too much company, and as their father I have the right to break it up. They have courted long enough to have all been married, and as I told them, they must either marry by December or get out and make their own way."

Sparks from the Wires.

John F. Farley has been made chief of the Denver, Col., police force.

Rev. George Reader has practically been expelled from Boston University for marrying a couple in a lion's cage.

Lizzie Burke and Bertha Ingle were probably fatally burned by the explosion of a gas generator, which also wrecked the Piqua, Ohio, hosiery factory.

Major S. A. Mulhauser, of Cleveland, who was reported from Honolulu as having tried to commit suicide, has arrived in San Francisco and says the shooting was purely accidental.

GOVERNMENT CROP REPORT.

The Average Yield of Corn Shown to Be 23.7 Bushels to the Acre.

The November report of the statistician of the Department of Agriculture gives 23.7 bushels as the average yield per acre of corn according to the preliminary returns of the department's correspondents. The corresponding preliminary estimate last year was 27.3 bushels, and that of 1895 26.2 bushels. The average yield in the principal corn States is as follows:

New York, 32.5; Pennsylvania, 36.0; Ohio, 32.5; Indiana, 28.0; Illinois, 31.5; Iowa, 29.0; Missouri, 25.0; Kansas, 19.0; Nebraska, 29.0. The average per cent of quality is 86.3, as compared with 88.4 in 1896 and 92.3 in 1895.

The preliminary estimate of the average yield of buckwheat is 20.7 bushels per acre, as compared with 18.7 bushels last year and 20.1 bushels in 1895. The averages in New York and Pennsylvania, the two States of principal production, are 22 and 21 bushels per acre, respectively. The average per cent of quality is 94.3, as compared with 94.7 in November of last year. The average yield per acre of tobacco is 646 pounds, against 679 pounds per acre last year and 743 pounds in 1895. The estimated average yield per acre of Irish potatoes is 64.6 bushels, as compared with 86.8 bushels last year and 100.7 bushels in November, 1895. The average per cent of quality is 81.3, against 89.2 in November last year and 94.8 in November, 1895.

The average yield of hay is 1.42 tons per acre, against an average of 1.21 tons per acre for the last fifteen years. In point of quality the average is 92.8 per cent, as compared with 92.9 per cent in November, 1896, and 91.3 per cent in 1895.

Favorable conditions for the sowing of the fall crops are reported from most parts of Europe, and the condition of the crops, so far as sown, is likewise favorable. The opinion is freely expressed that an increased area has been sown in wheat, but this appears to be more as a matter of inference from the natural tendency of high prices to produce such an effect than as an observed fact. The crop reports from India continue favorable, and on the whole this is true as to those from Argentina and Australasia, but in all these countries the harvest is too remote to permit any very confident prediction as to the final outcome. In the case of Argentina it may prove that more damage has been done by the locusts and the spring frosts than is yet apparent. There is nothing to indicate that the wheat shortage in Europe is any less than has been supposed, while the crop of Manitoba is now represented to be much below the official estimate issued in August and that of the Canadian Northwest territory is poor.

EMPLOYING COOLIES.

Illinois Mine Owners Said to Be Importing Chinese Labor.

The news that Chinamen are to be imported into the mines at Carbon Hill is not considered very seriously at Spring Valley. Men stood around the corners in knots discussing this latest phase of the strike situation in Northern Illinois, but the coolies did not interest them as much as the reported settlement at Braceville, where it is stated the miners have accepted the operators' offer.

The men in the Spring Valley district are indignant over the action of the Braceville men in accepting a settlement below the scale. The Spring Valley men claim to have the strike won, and the leaders say that no matter if Braceville does return to work at a non-union scale the Spring Valley men will hold out until next May, if necessary, for the scale formulated at Springfield. Ladd, Seatonville, La Salle and Peru are equally firm.

The labor leaders scoff at the idea of the coolie movement being a success. They say it is only a bluff. Said one prominent leader: "What if they do succeed in working one obscure mine with Chinamen? That does not necessarily break the strike. We are not going to let 200 Chinamen at Carbon Hill make the price of coal digging for 2,000 white miners of Northern Illinois. The very fact that the Northern Illinois operators are importing 'coolie' labor is an indication that the white miners are poorly paid and evidence of their cause."

A remonstrance against allowing Chinese coal miners to be imported into the State for the purpose of mining coal at Wilmington and other towns in place of striking miners will be placed before Gov. Tanner in the name of the United Mine Workers of Illinois. The Governor will also be asked to co-operate with the State secretary of the Miners' Federation in keeping out the coolie labor.

EVIDENCE IN NOVAK'S TRIAL.

The Jury Is Secured and Witnesses Are Called to the Stand.

The trial of Frank A. Novak, who is charged with the murder of Edward Murray at Walford, Iowa, last February, was begun at Cedar Rapids Tuesday. The work of securing a jury was completed by the noon recess. Immediately after noon the jury was sworn and County Attorney Tobin made the opening statement to the jury.

He said that the State expected to prove that Novak was on the brink of financial ruin and insured his life for large sums of money, and that in murdering Edward Murphy, which was a part of the preconceived plan, it was for the purpose of causing the people to believe that he (Novak) had perished in the ruins, and that it all was done with the intent of defrauding the insurance companies. Judge Ney, assistant counsel for the defense, made the opening statement for the defendant. The taking of testimony was at once commenced.

SEEK TO BAR FOOTBALL.

Ordinance Is Introduced in the Chicago Council.

Ald. Plotke, of anti-high hat notoriety, took another ordinance to the Chicago Council chamber Monday night, with the intention of clinching his claim to fame as a lawgiver. The ordinance will prohibit the playing of foot-ball anywhere within the limits of the city of Chicago. In speaking of his anti-foot-ball ordinance, Ald. Plotke said: "Why do I introduce it? Because it is an inhuman game; a game that should have been stopped long ago. Somebody gets hurt badly every time a foot-ball game is played, and many have been killed. It is forty times worse than prizefighting. I'd rather see a prizefight any day than a game of foot-ball. It teaches school children to be brutal. Every little boy in the city gets out in a vacant lot and fights and swears just like the older boys do playing foot-ball. The game should not be tolerated in Chicago."

Fever Steadily Abating.

At New Orleans all interest in the fever has about disappeared. The newspapers are paying but little attention to it, confining themselves to simply the official bulletins. From all infected points the same diminution in the disease is reported, and it is expected that the next cold spell will wipe out the pestilence entirely. Prospects for a cold snap are excellent and in anticipation the merchants throughout the city are preparing for a rush of business. Mobile reported nine new cases Tuesday and Montgomery reports one new case, with no deaths.

INDIANA INCIDENTS TERSELY TOLD.

Free Rural Mail Delivery Experiment in Delaware County—Preferred Death to Arrest—The Bridegroom Failed to Appear—Murderer Cuts His Throat.

Rural Free Delivery.

An interesting trial of rural free delivery is about to be made in Delaware County. Starting from the four postoffices of Daleville, Albany, Eaton and Selma, especially appointed letter carriers will establish a daily free delivery and collection service over carefully selected routes, which will take in as far as possible every farmer or other resident within a radius of many miles from these points.

Cuts His Throat.

Charles Pinkerton, the murderer of his nephew of the same name, who was sentenced to life imprisonment, committed suicide in the jail at Laporte by cutting his throat from ear to ear. It is supposed his wife, who has been allowed to occupy the cell with him and to go in and out freely, furnished him with the knife.

Groom Failed to Appear.

William Vanness and Miss Ida Smock, highly connected Elwood young people, were to have been married, and all arrangements had been completed for the event. The groom failed to show up and investigation later showed that he had returned the license and declared the engagement off for some unknown cause.

Death Before Arrest.

Frank Hayden of Gaston, who escaped from jail at Muncie, was captured in Remington, but as the sheriff cornered him at the home of William Hammond with the remark: "I'll not further disgrace my people," Hayden pulled a revolver and sent a bullet through his left lung.

Improvements for Hobart.

The Town Board of Trustees of Hobart have accepted the proposal of John P. Dales of Crown Point for the construction of water works and an electric light plant at the cost of $20,500. The plant will be completed this year.

Farmer Fish Shoots Himself.

Herbert J. Fish, a farmer near Valparaiso, attempted suicide by shooting himself through the head. The bullet entered his right temple and lodged back of the left eye. He is alive, but blind. No cause is known for the act.

All Over the State.

The law on quail in Indiana has expired. Birds are reported plentiful.

Elwood has taken the first steps toward holding a gas belt exposition next fall.

Judge Vaughn of the Blackford Circuit Court has decided that the city of Montpelier cannot sell its public square.

A tank containing 250 barrels of oil at the Harry Carrell oil well, a mile and a half west of Hartford City, exploded. No one was hurt.

The new Presbyterian Church of Elwood was damaged by fire, the heaters becoming overheated. Loss, $1,000; fully covered by $1,500 insurance.

George Smith and Thomas Dodge fought over a game of dice at Greenville, and Dodge was shot near the heart and fatally wounded. Smith made his escape.

Orson Wheeler, aged 83 years, at one time one of the most prosperous farmers in that section, died in the Porter County poorhouse, where he had been an inmate several years.

James Lynch, known as a habitual drunkard for eighty years, who would have been 119 years old had he lived forty-seven days, died at the county infirmary at Muncie.

Albert Carpenter of West Virginia, who was in Brazil in search of employment, was struck by an east-bound passenger train on the Vandalia and so badly injured that he will die.

The Marion lodge of Elks, by a practically unanimous vote, has decided to ignore the order of the Grand Exalted Ruler to expel James Fitzsimmons under penalty of losing its charter.

State Senator Thomas E. Ellison of Fort Wayne resigned as a member of the board of managers for the State reformatory at Jeffersonville. Representative W. H. Eichhorn of Bluffton is named to succeed him.

St. Paul's Catholic Church, a magnificent building, was dedicated at Marion. Bishop Rademacher was the celebrant, and the sermon was delivered by the Very Reverend Andrew Morrissey, president of Notre Dame.

Assistant Postmaster General Heath has made arrangements for the consolidation of postoffices in the vicinity of Indianapolis, in conformity with the greater Indianapolis plans. Fifteen additional carriers will be allowed.

Clarence Richwine, a mail carrier dismissed from the service with others by Postmaster Albert Small of Anderson, was reinstated by the civil service and postoffice commissions, and it is understood that similar action will be taken in the cases of the others.

Gov. Mount is being urged to call out the militia to stop the investors in oil lands from wasting natural gas. The contest is between the gas companies and the citizens of the State, who want the gas saved, on the one side, and the investors in oil lands on the other.

Mrs. Nellie Brooks, en route from her home in southeast Missouri to her parents' home, about eighteen miles from Birdseye, surprised the stage driver early in the evening by telling him she "would not go a bit further," and requesting him and a lady passenger who was along to make a pallet for her in the stage. The request was complied with, and one hour later a pair of bouncing twin boys were added to the list

THE CRY OF THE DREAMER.

"I am tired of planning and toiling
In the crowded hives of men;
Heart-weary of building and spoiling,
And spoiling and building again.
And I long for the dear old river,
Where I dreamed my youth away;
For a dreamer lives forever,
And a toiler dies in a day.

"I am sick of the showy seeming
Of a life that is half a lie;
Of the faces lined with scheming
In the throng that hurries by.
From the sleepless thoughts' endeavor
I would go where the children play;
For a dreamer lives forever,
And a toiler dies in a day.

"I feel no pride, but pity,
For the burdens the rich endure;
There is nothing sweet in the city
But the patient lives of the poor.
O the little hands so skillful,
And the child-mind choked with weeds;
The daughter's heart grown willful,
And the father's heart that bleeds.

"No, no! from the street's rude bustle,
From trophies of mart and stage,
I would fly to the wood's low rustle,
And the meadow's kindly page.
Let me dream as of old by the river,
And be loved for the dream, alway;
For a dreamer lives forever,
And a toiler dies in a day."

—JOHN BOYLE O'REILLY.

The Silver King.

There stood in Berkshire, far out upon a quiet country road, a little inn, which the wood sign swinging at the door declared to be known as "The Magpie's Nest."

It had been thus named because of the number of magpies in the neighborhood. And straight before the door stood an oak-tree, a century old, among whose uppermost branches, year in and year out, always hung a magpie's nest, to which the country people believed that the same old magpie returned regularly.

No very elegant entertainment was offered at the "Magpie's Nest" for either man or beast; but its patrons thought the fare good; and then it was served to them by the most charming, rosy-cheeked little maid, who wore a cap with bright ribbons, and had a waist that could have been spanned by two hands—a well-behaved little maid, also, who was known by the rector of the parish church to have been the best girl in his Sunday school.

So, though she was a poor orphan, and had only her little meed of wages, Betty might have married many a stout farmer. However, she refused them all, and kept on with her duties at the "Magpie's Nest" until the son of her master, coming home from India, where he had served as a soldier for several years, fell in love with her, and offered her his hand and heart. Betty did not prove unkind. The innkeeping father was willing enough to secure his handy Betty for a permanent assistant, and amid the chattering of the magpies Betty and John exchanged their vows under the nest-hung oak-tree one bright afternoon; and John put upon her finger a thick silver ring, which he had obtained abroad, perhaps by purchase, perhaps by gift, perhaps as soldiers obtain many things in the time of war.

It was not a costly gift—to our eyes it would not be a beautiful one—but Betty valued it highly. She kept it polished to perfection, and wore it with great pride on high days and holidays; but though she loved John, and looked forward to her wedding-day with joy, she would not alter the bright, coquettish manner which had always belonged to her. She joked with the farmers, flung them back repartee for repartee, and even gave them those bright glances which John, the soldier, thought should be only given to himself. So John grew jealous, and, being a moody sort of man, said nothing about it.

It never entered Betty's mind that the very manner which had once enchanted John should now offend him; and she herself grew angry with her lover for his scowls and sulkiness.

Therefore, when a young Frenchman from Marseilles, black-eyed, black-haired, and polite in his manners, as Frenchmen usually are, chanced, in the course of a business journey, to stop at the "Magpie's Nest," she felt that he really would be a fine example for surly John Leaf, and was amiable to him to a degree that might have made a less jealous man angry. Then, indeed, John Leaf spoke out, and Betty discovered the secret of his ill-temper.

Her pride being flattered thereby, she forgave him, and retired on Saturday night with the firm intention of winning back John's smiles on the morrow, her holiday, when she would go to church in her best attire and charm his heart from him over again, as he walked by her side. What woman ever had any design on a man's heart, ever desired to win from him any favor or any gift, that she did not bethink her of all her finery? Before Betty slept she took from her trunk her Scotch plaid dress, her fringed shawl, her blue-ribboned cap, her Sunday shoes, and her silver ring, and having given the latter an extra polish laid them where they would meet her eyes the first thing next morning.

John Leaf, sulking in his room under the garret eaves, had no thought of this. Those slow natures do not forget and forgive in a hurry any more than they do anything else.

The morning sun, shining aslant against the inn's walls, aroused Betty with his first rays. She rubbed her eyes, opened them, put her little feet out upon the floor, knelt down and said her simple prayer, and then flew to the glass. It was only a crooked thing, with a flaw in it, and a rough oaken frame, but sufficient to make her happy. She braided her hair, put on her cap, buttoned her dress, tied about her throat the gay neck-ribbon, laced her shoes geometrically, and then looked for her ring. It was gone!

She knew the very spot upon the red heart-shaped pin-cushion into which she had thrust the needle over which the silver ring had been hung. There stuck the needle still. It was below the window-sill, on a little table; it could not have rolled out; but it was not in the room. She shook out her dress, her shawl, her bed-clothes. She swept the floor. It was gone. That was the end of it.

Betty sat down and wept bitterly. All the country people of the day were superstitious. The ring had disappeared in a most mysterious way, for her door was bolted, and her window high from the ground, and she firmly believed that the loss portended some great evil.

Meanwhile at the bar of the inn a little scene was going on. The Frenchman had asked for a glass of ale, and John, who was always tapster on Sunday mornings, had drawn it for him, when, as their hands met in the act, he saw upon the little finger of his customer a thick silver ring, the very counterpart of that which he had given to his Betty.

"You've a pretty ring, monsieur," he said, with a sort of catching of the breath. "May I ask where you got it?"

"Ah, yes, certainly," said the Frenchman. "One does not boast, but a very pretty girl gave me that. Yes, and a kiss also."

John turned as pale as any florid face could turn. He made no answer, but marched straight out of the room and into Betty's kitchen.

She stood near the door in her holiday dress, with her white cotton gloves on. The magpies were chattering overhead, and afar the church bells were ringing.

"You are not going to church with me, John?" she asked, softly, with a smile.

"That depends," said John Leaf.

Then he walked straight up to her, and looked full into her honest eyes.

"You don't look like a cheat," he said; "but who knows a woman? Take off your gloves, Betty."

She obeyed.

"Where's your ring?" he asked.

Betty burst into tears.

"It's lost, John," she said. "I can find it nowhere."

"You haven't looked on monsieur's finger, then," said John. "You poor fool, to give it to him, and think I shouldn't know it."

"Oh, I'll swear I never did," sobbed Betty. "I give your ring to anyone else! Why, John——"

But he pushed her from him with his rough hand, and would hear no words from her; and the next day he left the inn, and enlisted once more, and was sent away again to India. And Betty left the inn also, and took service with a farmer's wife close by; and whatever the magpies chattered about, it was no more of the love-making that they heard when John and Betty sat together beneath the old oak-tree.

Five years went by. At last John received a letter from England, telling him that his father was dead, and had left all his little possessions to his only son.

John Leaf's fighting days were over, in any case, and he was on the invalid for life. He fought as desperate men do; had been commended and promoted, and had some medals and ribbons to show and boast of as compensation for a wooden leg. So he went home again, and settled down as proprietor of the "Magpie's Nest," and was a sort of hero among the neighbors; but he was very lonely. Men do not quite forget in five years. He could still see Bety's buxom form flitting about the kitchen in imagination; and when the magpies chattered in their nests he could fancy that he sat with her under the oak branches. Then he grew wroth with the magpies, who seemed to mock him, and ordered his pot-boy to tear the nest down.

In vain the boy pleaded for the birds. In vain he declared that, even if the new nests went, the old one in the topmost branches should be left "for luck."

"If the old magpies that built that find it gone, they'll peck some one's eye out in the night-time," said the boy. "It's been known to be done often."

But John Leaf, the soldier, had cast away all his superstition.

"I'll have those magpies chattering about my ears no more," he said. "Up and leave not a nest of them all. Some of the noisy rascals will take possession of that old rag if it is left hanging."

So the boy obeyed. He planted a ladder against the tree, and then swung out upon the branches. There was a grievous noise; and doubtless to this day old magpies tell their children of that massacre of the innocents at the great oak- tree. But there were no birds to chatter and scream in that great rag of a nest which the boy's hands clutched at last. He came down with the relic in his hand, and stood before his master with a grin.

"Eh, master! may I have all I found in the old nest?" he asked.

"If it is not a magpie's egg," said John Leaf.

"It's better than that," said the lad. "It's a silver ring."

"Let me see it," cried John Leaf, and snatched it from his hand.

It was the ring with which he had plighted his troth to Betty under the oak; and he knew that the magpies had stolen it, and that the Frenchman wore one that resembled it.

The first thing that John did was to call himself hard names: "A jealous fool!" "A suspicious brute!" Heaven knows what else. Then he melted, and all by himself in the wood beyond the house, shed tears, and vowed to find Betty if she still lived on earth.

Where he went, of whom he inquired, matters not. But one day when the sun was setting in the west, he opened a little cottage gate to which he had been directed, and saw at her knitting, under a vine-covered porch, his Betty, not changed one single bit. And she? She looked at him and did not know him with his thin, sallow face and his wooden leg.

"What may you be wanting, sir?" she asked.

And he said: "Betty!"

And she cried out: "Why, mercy, it's John Leaf!"

Then he sat down on a bench close by her side.

"You know I never had many words to spend on anything, Betty," he said. "I'll come to the point at once. I know now that you were true, and no cheat, and that you never gave my ring to Monsieur. I found it—or my lad did, for I'm not very good at climbing now—in the old magpie's nest in the oak-tree.

"So the magpies stole it, eh?" said Betty. "Well, they are strange birds. I've heard they take spoons before now."

"And so, Betty," said John, "if you'll overlook the past and let bygones be bygones I'll be a happy man."

"I owe you no grudge," said Betty; "and bygones are bygones, John Leaf."

"But you'll let things be as they were, Betty?" said John. "You'll be my sweetheart again?"

She laughed.

"Don't you know?" she said. "Why, look there."

He looked. Through the gate came a foreign-looking man, with gold rings in his ears and a silver ring upon his finger, who led by the hand a toddling child.

"Why, it's Monsieur," said John.

"You see," said Betty, "I went to him to ask him how he came by his ring, and he proved it was none of mine. It has a name and a date on it that mine never had. And he was kind to me and you had been cruel. And so we have been married three years—eh, Louis? And this is our boy."

"I had better go home, I think," said John Leaf. "One is always punished for being a fool. But this is your ring. Will you have it, Betty?"

"Pray keep it for your sweetheart," said Betty. "You'll find one soon, no doubt."

But John Leaf never found one again, and the silver ring found in the old magpie's nest was buried with him when he died.

An Indian in Congress.

"Remarkable progress has been made among the Indian tribes in the territory since I visited them six years ago," remarked Congressman Charles Curtis yesterday. Mr. Curtis visited the Kansas, Osage and Pawnee Indians for the purpose of securing information that will be valuable to his committee in Congress—the House committee in Indian affairs—next winter. Incidentally, he visited some of his relatives in that country.

"The Indians," he said, "are learning to farm, though, of course, many of them rent their farms to white men. I found corn that will run as high as sixty-five bushels to the acre on farms cultivated by Indians or half-breeds.

"Those who rent their farms to white men make good money. They get $2 an acre for the land cultivated, and usually reserve part of their farms for their own use.

"In general, I found conditions among the Indians improving, and I am glad of it."

As is well known in Kansas, Curtis has Indian blood in his veins, and takes a lively interest in improving the conditions of the Indians generally. He has an uncle and second cousin in the Indian territory who are half-blood Indians, and are famous ranchmen. They are known as "Big Louis" and "Little Louis." Both are Papans, an old French family. "Big Louis" is a brother of the congressman's mother, and is a man of wealth and influence among his people. "Little Louis" is a cousin of "Big Louis." They are about the same age, and when they were boys one grew much faster than the other; hence their designations, "big" and "little." Finally "Big Louis" stopped growing, but "Little Louis" kept on, and now is the larger, and weighs two hundred and sixty pounds, while "Big Louis" needs an overcoat to make him weigh full two hundred. Mr. Curtis visited both. "Big Louis" has a dancing pavilion, modeled after one he saw at an eastern resort. Every Friday night he gives a dance, and hundreds of people attend it. He has a lemonade and cigar stand in connection with it, and entertains as well as the best of the experts in this line. —Kansas City Star.

Coon and Muskrat Fight.

Mr. J. Hal Grimes caught a muskrat in the freight office at the depot. Joe Booth thought his pet coon could "do" the muskrat, and in order to see which was entitled to the belt the two were placed in a slatted box-car, the coon being favorite. They had hardly touched the floor before they began feinting and sizing each other up. Finally the coon lit on to his opponent, forced him to the corner, and it looked like he would be a sure victor, and the odds jumped to $5 to $1 in his favor. But in round number two the muskrat put on his fighting clothes, and no coon before ever got such a walloping. His child-like screams led a number of residents of the neighborhood who didn't know what was going on to believe that some mother was whipping her baby at the depot. At the first pass in the third set-to the coon ran up the slats to the top of the car and refused to fight, while the muskrat walked about the floor as if to say: "Bring on two or three more just like him."—Harrodsburg (Ky.) Democrat.

Ohio's Champion Whittler.

Edward Weyls, a barber of 114 West Mound street, claims to be the champion penknife whittler of the United States, and his work as displayed in several pieces of wood carving certainly stamps him as a genius in this line, even if his title honors are disputed. Weyls uses nothing but a penknife and out of blocks of wood he molds figures and articles with the artistic tact of a sculptor. He cuts chains, scissors, wagons, locomotives, machines and other articles and things out of white pine with the rapidity of a buzz-saw. All Mr. Weyls wants is a block of pine, his jack-knife and a seat on a store box, and he can execute the most difficult and intricate pieces of art. His shop is filled with masterpieces, among the number being a panel figure of Mark Hanna and the facial expression caught by the artist is wonderful.

Mr. Weyls will put his work on public exhibition here in compliance with the wishes of his friends.—Columbus (Ohio) Dispatch.

The Color of Arctic Animals.

Nature is a very considerate and provident protector to her children. In winter many of the arctic animals become perfectly white and can move over the vast snow-fields with safety, when if they retained their summer color they would be an easy mark for beasts and birds of prey, or the hunter's rifle. The fox, squirrel, ermine and other creatures of their class have dark fur during the summer to correspond with the rocks among which they live.

Over 400 mining companies were licensed to mine gold in the Rossland region, British Columbia, last year.

IT is seventy-two years since the first railway in the world was opened to the public for general traffic. The Stockton and Darlington line of England began operations Sept. 27, 1825, with about twenty-one miles of single track. To-day there are over 375,000 miles of railways intercrossing the earth. In the United States alone there are 180,955 miles of tracks, more than enough to girdle the globe fourteen times with single rails, while the combined railway systems of the world would be sufficient to open a trunk line between the earth and the moon, with over 135,000 miles to spare for branch lines and sidetracks. The total mileage of the United States is nearly equal to that of all the other countries put together. Illinois, with over 10,000 miles of tracks, leads all the other States,

GEORGE STEPHENSON.

Pennsylvania ranking next with over 9,000. New York State has nearly 8,000. The District of Columbia closes the list with thirty miles.

The first rail of the Stockton and Darlington road was laid May 23, 1822, and it required three years and four months to complete twenty-one miles of single track. In 1887 the Manitoba system was extended through Dakota, a distance of 545 miles, between April 2 and Oct. 19—a few days over half a year. From the rude beginning in England less than three-quarters of a century ago has grown a stupendous system that has revolutionized the commerce of the world—that has revolutionized the world itself, annihilated space and made subservient to the will of man. There are to-day over $30,000,000,000 invested in the railroads of the world, one-tenth of the total wealth of civilized nations. More than 2,000,000 men are employed in constructing, equipping and operating the railways of the United States. The standing armies and navies of the world approximate in round numbers 3,500,000 men—the wealth destroyers. How much more powerful is the wealth-producing army of American workingmen who have changed the whole basis of civilization from the military to the industrial!

When one studies the evolution of the railway he is lost in wonderment at the giant strides that have been made during a period so comparatively short. In the early stages of its development it met with the strongest opposition, in many instances force being employed to prevent its progress. The stockholders of the canal systems and the stage coach lines, and even certain classes of workingmen under the mistaken idea that the extension of railroads means a decrease in the demand for manual labor, united their forces and fought their imaginary common enemy. Parliament took part in the proceedings, and the promoters of the initial lines were subjected to the most scrutinizing cross-examinations. When the first road was opened a great concourse of people assembled to witness the event, and while a few were there to rejoice if the undertaking proved successful, the majority of the spectators were anticipating the pleasure of seeing the "bubble burst." This opposition continued for many years, and was only dissipated when it had been demonstrated beyond dispute that the commercial interests of the country were advancing to a state that had never been attained before the introduction of the new traffic system.

On this small stretch of track between Stockton and Darlington the great railways of the world had their beginning. But even this small beginning was a long time in coming. It seems strange to us now at the present day, with the wonderful development of steam and electricity brought so vividly before us, and made a part of our daily lives, that men within a period remembered by persons now living should be so blind to the advancement of public and private interests as to actually raise and organize an opposition to a system that has proved a greater benefit to the nations of the earth than all the other projects of civilization combined. To-day we are familiar with the names of great railway kings—men who have operated millions, who have been the life or the death of the stock market by the rise or the fall of a finger. We look with something of veneration at the careers of John W. Garrett and Thomas A. Scott, and even with a mixture of admiration at the wealth producing powers and executive abilities of Cornelius Vanderbilt and Jay Gould. But greater, far greater, than a Garrett, a Scott, a Vanderbilt or a Gould, was George Stephenson, the poor, uneducated, colliery fireman, who worked out, between the long and cruel hours of manual drudgery and slavish toil, the problem of the railway for the traffic of the world. He saw a half century ahead of his time.

Opposed by Capital.

Despite the opposition of the moneyed men and the learned engineers of the day he fought his way inch by inch, and by the sheer force and tenacity of his powerful mind brought to a successful completion a project that had been the companion of his thoughts by day and a vision in his dreams by night for many long and anxious years.

To George Stephenson and to him alone belongs the credit of the magic development of the railway. From the moment when a boy he completed his first clay model of a stationary engine; from the time when the steam hissed in his ungainly "Blucher" locomotive to the day when he saw his train rushing on toward Liverpool he nurtured the idea of a grand traffic way, and when he died it was with the peace of soul of a man whose life has been one of enduring usefulness, of unceasing benefit to his fellow-man.

The railway antedates the invention of the practical locomotive, although the history of the one is contemporaneous with the other. Wooden railways upon which coal was drawn from the mines by horses were in use at an early day in Northumberland and at Wylam, where Stephenson's father worked, the first locomotive was put in operation between the coal pit and the loading quay. In 1791 Saint-Fond, a French traveler, spoke in high terms of the colliery wagonways in England, which greatly facilitated the work of the horses, and he strongly urged upon his own countrymen the economy with which coal was thus hauled to the shipping places as an inducement to them to adopt a similar mode of transit. Wagon roads of the same character were laid in the colliery districts of Scotland at a comparatively early period. During the Scotch rebellion in 1745 there was a railway between the Tranent coal pits and the small harbor of Cockinzie in East Lothian. These wooden tracks were the germ of the modern railway. With the advanced ideas of the workmen improvements gradually came and in some collieries thin plates of iron were nailed upon the upper surface of the wooden rails to afford protection from friction. It is probable that the first iron rails were laid at Whitehaven in 1738. Twenty-nine years later five or six tons of rails were cast for the Coalbrookdale Iron Works in Shropshire, and in 1776 cast iron rails nailed to wooden sleepers were laid at the Duke of Norfolk's colliery near Sheffield. The laboring people of the district were so incensed at what they imagined was a trespassing on their rights that they tore up the road, burned the coal piles and doubtless would have seriously injured John Carr, who constructed the line, had he not sought concealment in a wood.

Origin of Tramways.

William Jessop laid a line at Loughborough, in Leicestershire, in 1789, using the cast iron edge rail, with flanges upon the tires of the wagon wheels to keep them from slipping off the tracks. In 1800 Benjamin Outram substituted stone props for timber to support the ends of the rails. This plan was generally adopted and the roads became known as "Outram" roads, and subsequently, being abbreviated, formed the words "tram roads" or "tramways."

In this way the early railways were slowly improved. As yet they were mere toys. Their usefulness was limited to drawing coal out of the mines a short distance to the place of shipment. No one had at this time proposed utilizing them for general traffic purposes. While the rude railways and tramways were being formed in the mining regions the inventive genius of man was busily engaged in the solution of a new mode of locomotion. Thus far the improvements had been almost entirely confined to the roads, and the wagons were still drawn by horses.

The first person who seems to have conceived the idea of employing steam to move vehicles on land as well as ships at sea was Solomon De Caus, who was locked up at Paris as a madman in 1641. He wrote a book on the subject, portions of which were embodied in the work by the Marquis of Worcester entitled "Century of Inventions." Savery, a Cornish miner, proposed a method of propelling carriages along ordinary roads, but took no practical methods to carry out his views. In 1759 the subject was presented to James Watt, who in the specification of his patent of 1769 gave a description of the engine proposed. On several other occasions the question of applying steam as a motive power on land was brought to his attention, but he was too busily occupied perfecting his condensing engine to further consider the locomotive. The first actual model of a steam carriage of which there is a written account was made by a Frenchman named Cugnot, who placed it on exhibition in 1763. Afterward he built an engine on the same plan, but when put in motion it projected itself with such force as to knock down a wall that was in the way, and the machine was set aside as a dangerous invention. It is still preserved as a memento of the early efforts toward steam locomotion. In 1772 Oliver Evans, an American, invented a steam carriage to travel on ordinary roads, and obtained from the State of Maryland in 1787 exclusive right to make and operate it. But no practical use ever came of the invention. William Symington, one of the inventors of steam navigation, conceived the idea of utilizing steam in the propulsion of carriages, but the roads in Scotland were in such bad condition that he got no further than to construct a model.

The first model of a steam carriage in England was made in 1784 by William Murdock, the assistant and friend of Watt. Murdock succeeded in making an engine about a foot high that generated enough steam by the aid of a spirit lamp to rush along at quite a rate of speed over a walk a mile in length. One dark night the pastor saw the little machine coming snorting up the path, and, taking it for the "evil one," sprang into the hedges on the side with shrieks of terror.

Richard Trevethick's Success.

About the years 1800 and 1802 the question of building railways for stage coaches was discussed and it was further proposed that stationary engines might be placed at certain distances apart and by means of circulating chains greatly lessen the employment of horses. While these plans were being considered Richard Trevethick, a pupil of William Murdock, built a steam carriage for use on the common highway. He took out his patent March 24, 1802. The carriage had the appearance of an ordinary stage coach. The horizontal cylinder, the boiler and the furnace box were placed in the rear of the hind axle, and to the credit of the inventor it may be said that this was the first successful high pressure engine constructed on the principle of moving a piston by the elasticity of steam against the pressure only of the atmosphere. In addition to being well constructed, Trevethick's steam carriage possessed the quality of moving quite rapidly along the roadway.

There were many inventors after Trevethick who sought a motive power to supersede horses, and while some produced very meritorious works none met the tests required of them. There were Blenkinsop of Leeds, who had an engine with toothed wheels that ran upon a cogged rail; Chapman of Newcastle, who employed a system of chains, and Brunton of Derbyshire, who invented a "mechanical traveler" to go upon legs, working alternately like those of a horse. These and similar contrivances projected about the same time show that invention was actively at work and that many minds were trying to solve the traction problem. Blackett, a colliery owner of Wylam, whose tramway ran by the house where George Stephenson was born, was one of the most persistent of capitalists in his endeavors to obtain a locomotive to haul his coal wagons. He had tried several of the unwieldy inventions of the day and was becoming the laughing stock of his acquaintances, who regarded him as a monomaniac on the subject of steam motive power.

While Blackett was experimenting at Wylam George Stephenson was racking his brains to the same end at Killingworth, where he had been appointed engine-wright of the collieries. Blackett paved the way for Stephenson. Profiting by the failures of the locomotives of the past, Stephenson planned and constructed his first locomotive in 1814, naming it My Lord, after Lord Ravenswood, the principal owner of the Killingworth colliery, who advanced the money. This locomotive, which was afterward known as the Blucher, while a great improvement on all previous machines, was very cumbersome and clumsy. It, however, answered the purpose for which it was intended very well and was regarded at the time as a wonderful piece of mechanism. The inventor made many engines after that, but none gave him as much satisfaction as this first rude locomotive.

Among the men of this period who were forming projects for the construction of railways in the important districts of population were William James of West Bromwich and Edward Pease of Darlington. James was exceedingly interested in the question of traction power, and though he had made no personal inventions he performed as great a service to the public when he found and appreciated George Stephenson. As early as 1803 James published an article in which he stated he contemplated the projection of a railway between Liverpool and Manchester. He had many other railway propositions under way, but nothing came of them, except to stimulate the demand for better transportation facilities.

Edward Pease was a man of an entirely different character. He was not so ambitious as James, and it seems he at first only contemplated a horse tramroad between Stockton and Darlington, but as he proceeded with the project and after he had had an interview with Stephenson he became an earnest convert to the locomotive system. What Pease first contemplated was the means of selling coal at the stations along the line of the proposed railway. He did not dream of the outlet that would be afforded to other markets, and such a thing as a passenger conveyance never entered into his calculations. After one unsuccessful attempt in parliament the Stockton and Darlington railway act was finally passed April 19, 1821. The projectors did not originally contemplate the employment of locomotives, for in the act they provide for the making and maintaining of the tramroads for the passage upon them "of wagons and other carriages, with men and horses or otherwise." The public were to be free "to use with horses, cattle and carriages" the roads formed by the company on payment of the authorized rates between certain hours. It is clearly obvious from this that the projectors of the line had no clear conception as to the scope and operations of their railroad.

Some time elapsed after the passage of the act for the construction of the railway before any steps were taken to carry it into effect. Toward the close of 1821 Stephenson called on Pease and strongly urged the adoption of the locomotive on the new road. The inventor made so good an impression that he was soon after appointed engineer of the line, conducted a personal survey of every foot of the route and began active preparations for building the road.

Estimate of the Cost.

In making his first estimate of the cost he set down £6,200 for stationary engines, not even mentioning locomotives. His reasons for this will be apparent when it is known that the whole question of steam locomotive power was in those days, among practical and scientific men alike, largely in doubt. He preferred to quietly impress upon the stockholders the wisdom of adopting a method he was confident would prove a complete success. After visiting Stephenson's locomotive at Killingworth Pease and another stockholder became convinced that it was the proper system, and in 1823 an amended act was passed permitting the use of this power.

Two years later the road was opened to the public, and from the start proved a great success. The rails were of malleable and cast iron and the gauge was four feet eight and one-half inches. The first engine, the Active, that was put on the line, was constructed by George Stephenson. It weighed about eight tons, and was capable of drawing about forty tons, in insignificant contrast with the American "consolidation" locomotive of to-day, weighing fifty tons and able to haul on a dead level over 24,000 tons, while more powerful engines are still being designed.

No sooner did the coal and merchandise trains begin to run than new business relations sprang up between Stockton and Darlington, and the increase in freight traffic called into existence a new passenger transportation. Before his plant was put in operation an attempt had been made to run a stage coach between Stockton, Darlington and Barnard Castle three times a week, but owing to the want of support it was discontinued. However, after the railway began running the stages were again put on and did a thriving business. The railway company, recognizing the importance of this branch of service, started the first passenger coach, the Experiment, Oct. 10, 1825, a fortnight after the opening of the line. It was drawn by one horse and performed the journey daily each way between Stockton and Darlington, accomplishing the distance of twelve miles in about two hours. The fare was a shilling and each passenger was allowed fourteen pounds of luggage free. The Experiment was not operated by the railway company, but was let to Pickersgill and Harland, who paid tolls for the use of the line. This first passenger coach was regarded as a wonderful conveyance at the time, but it would cut a rather poor figure if placed beside the modern drawing-car palaces constructed at a cost of $20,000 or over.

Stephenson next constructed and equipped with his locomotive the Liverpool and Manchester Railway, which was opened Sept. 15, 1830. Passengers were carried the entire distance of thirty miles in a little over an hour. Inasmuch as it had been previously considered a great feat for the locomotives on the Stockton and Darlington road to beat the stage coaches, and twelve miles an hour had been regarded as absolutely dangerous, this new rate of speed must have been looked upon as something phenomenal. The growth of the railway from this date was rapid, companies being formed in all civilized countries.

America quickly adopted the railway system. As early as 1827 a crude line was opened between Boston and Quincy for the purpose of importing granite for the Bunker Hill monument. In August, 1829, the Carbondale railroad was opened by the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company and extended from Honesdale, Pa., to Carbondale, a distance of about sixteen miles. It was the first road on which a locomotive was used in this country. The engine was built in England, under the direction of Horatio Allen, who enjoyed the distinction of being the first to run a locomotive in America. It was called the Stourbridge Lion and arrived at its destination Aug. 9, 1829.

First Baltimore & Ohio Road.

In May, 1830, the first division of the Baltimore and Ohio Railway, extending from Baltimore to Ellicott's Mills, a distance of fifteen miles, was formally opened, but the passenger service was not inaugurated till July 5 of the same year, owing to the scarcity of cars. Horse power was employed until the road was completed to Frederick, in 1832.

Peter Cooper built a little locomotive in 1829 for the Baltimore and Ohio Railway, and was very much delighted over the fact that on the trial trip he succeeded in beating a horse attached to another car. The York, which was built at York, Pa., was the progenitor of the famous "grasshopper" locomotives so many years in service on the Baltimore and Ohio. Thus did the beginning of the railway system on the Stockton and Darlington line extend over the old and the new world. It has grown mightily during the last two and seventy years, and its possibilities are still unmeasured.

When George Stephenson died, Aug. 12, 1848, his statue, which the Liverpool and Manchester and Grand Junction companies had ordered, was on its way to England, and arrived in time to serve as his monument. Far greater than any monument that mind of sculptor can conceive and cunning hand execute is the enduring monument of his own works and the undying memory of a name made glorious.

Might Have Been a Chimney.

In a certain Georgia neighborhood, says the Atlanta Constitution, a farmer had two boys who fairly flourished on red clay. All efforts to break them of the habit proved futile, and they had been given over as hopeless cases. One night one of them was missed from home, and search for him proved unavailing. His brother had left him in the clay bank, where he had burrowed a hole.

Late next morning a farmer went to that identical clay bank for material to build a chimney, and dug him out while loading his wagon.

That night, after giving the boy a good whipping, his father went to prayer meeting, and delivering his experience, said:

"I feel thankful to the Lord for the providence he showed to my little clay-eatin' John this morning; for Brother Jones wus a-makin' of a chimbley, and he loaded John up with the other clay, an' ef it hadn't been fer Providence John might er been a part of that chimbly now—a-smokin' an' a-smokin', fur from his friends an' loved ones! I want a prayer er thanksgivin' ter be offered up in this here meetin' right now. Brother Johnson, will you lead us?"

Curative of Bad Temper.

"When the little girl is naughty," says Miss Jessie M. Fowler, giving a mother directions for curing her small daughter's bad temper, "put on her best gown, and you will see that she cannot withstand its influence."

No man has to serve an apprenticeship in order to learn how to make mistakes.

Whenever you see a man visiting a chiropodist there is something on foot.

NOT GUILTY.

McIntosh Vindicated By The Judgment of Twelve Good Men And True.

THEY ARE SATISFIED HE DID NOT FORGE ORDERS OR KNOW ANYTHING ABOUT IT

They Make It So By A Vote Of 11 To 0, And Then Make It Unanimous.

Saturday's Daily.

The DAILY went to press yesterday just as the jury had gone out on the McIntosh case. At the end of an hour and a half the bell rang and every-body that heard it hurried to the court house. As soon as the audience could be quieted, Judge Adair asked the foreman of the jury, J. K. Stafford, if they had agreed on a verdict. The reply was that they had. It was handed to him and he glanced over its contents, read it aloud and then asked the usual question: "Is this your verdict gentlemen?" The foreman replied, "It is." And the judge repeated the other question, "So say you all?" All nodded their assent, and the long trial was over. They had been out a little over an hour but had readily agreed on a verdict. The first ballot taken showed 11 votes only, all being for acquittal. They could not find out who did not vote, for all declared they had put in a ballot. Then they voted again, and 12 votes for acquittal was the result. The trial had lasted eleven days including the time taken in getting a jury. After the verdict had been read, the jury were discharged and after a flood of congratulations had been showered on them, separated and went to their homes. Mr. McIntosh and his family were at their home when the bell rang, but being notified they came in with Deputy Platter, while the first congratulations over the verdict were being given. Of course they were gratified and Mr. McIntosh was grateful. He shook hands with the jury and his counsel and received the congratulations of a host of friends who had watched the trial from the start with unabated interest. It had been a hard fight, for the attorneys were able and worked with great zeal and earnestness. But the prosecution had soon found they had a weak case, and by the close must have foreseen what the verdict would be. And though they fought to the last ditch, nothing could be done to save their case. And especially is this true after the two speeches by "Best & McClellan," the old familiar names at the DeKalb bar. Judge McClellan in his plea had laid down the plan, and built the foundation in the short time he could give to it. And then the masterly argument of Judge Best finished at one sweep all that was left of the fabric the prosecution thought they had reared and finished. It was a brilliant legal battle and a sweeping victory.

The verdict is a just one. No one who knows Mr. McIntosh ever doubted his perfect innocence. And just why this case was brought, or at whose instance we are not able to say. But we do say for ourself, and we believe we speak the sentiment of all who will give the situatin full thought, that this case never should have been brought It is on a par with the case against Commissioners Hague and Bateman. In both cases, innocent parties have been put to heavy expense and have suffered still more mentally in having to appear as criminals at the bar of justice in the presence of all those who have looked on them as honorable men and good citizens. There is but one man left now to punish, who is reasonably supposed to be guilty. That is Deputy Treasurer Perry Fair. In his case there are many reasons for believing he was in the business of looting the treasury in common with the other four. If this is proved on him he should be punished. If no proof can be found he should be set free as soon as possible. And our own belief is there are no other persons who engaged in forging orders. If that is found to be so, then this expensive litigation should be stopped. If it keeps on, the county will lose more money than it recovered from the various bondsmen. It has already been at a heavy needless expense, to prosecute innocent men. Now let justice remove the bandages from her eyes, so that she may see her path plainer.

THE COURIEK WILL MOVE.

To More Commodious Quarters On Main Street.

For some time we have been negotiating for the lease of a building where the public would have access to our office without climbing a long flight of stairs. We are now able to announce to the change, and this week will be located in the Sebring building on north Main-st. adjoining Dr. Swarts' office. The room is being rearranged and fitted up according to our own plans, and will make a very convenient home for the COURIER. The moving of a printing office is no small job, and we expect a greater part of a week will have passed before our machinery and type will be in place. The location, while not quite as central as we would like, is a very good one, and our customers and friends, as well as the publ will appreciate the fact that there will be no stairs to climb. We hope to make the change without missing an issue of the DAILY COURIER, or delaying any who need job printing of any kind.

MOURNING FOR HIS MASTER.

A pathetic instance of a dog's affection for his master, and loneliness in his absence, is brought to notice day by day by the actions of a water spaniel that was the property and companion of Harry Sherman, who was killed at the Oakland avenue crossing on Oct. 14. The dog was deeply attached to his master, and had shared even his bed for several years. The whereabouts of the dog at the time of the accident is not known, but it is believed that he must have been following the buggy which contained the two men, Mr. Sherman and Daniel Weaver, as they drove to their fate, for the dog makes frequent trips to the fatal spot and whines piteously and runs nervously about in a vain search for his master Three times a day he visits the Walley undertaking establishment and hangs around the top of the basement stairs, but no amount of coaxing can induce him to go below. On the day of the tragedy he was noticed to go down the stairs, following Met Walley, but when e caught a glimse of the dead form of his master and seemed to understand that the mortal clay was unresponsive, he ran upstairs, and has since resisted all efforts at coaxing him to return. The dog at that time was unusually plump and rounded, but has since wasted to a mere skeleton, and is slowly starving to death, refusing to partake of food offered at home. Mr. Walley says he feels guilty as the dog looks at him, for the animal's gaze seems to declare that the dog holds Mr. Walley responsible for his master's absence. In spite of the cold downpour early this morning the dog appeared at the Walley place, as usual, and stood shivering, with drooped tail—an impressive picture of dejection and loneliness—Elkhart Review.

RULE OF THREE

"Second hand, $1.50" was a sign tacked onto a clock at Yesbera's the other day. No doubt this is all right and the bargain was a good one. But what puzzles us, is to know what the hour hand would cost. Make it a problem in proportion, and it would be something like this:

If the second hand of a clock costs $1.50, the minute hand would cost 60 times as much, or $90. And if the minute hand costs $90 the hour hand would lost 60 times as much, or $5400. And if the second hand of a clock cost $1.50, and the minute hand costs $90, and the hour hand $5,400, then the three hands would cost $5491.50. And if the three hands of a clock together cost $5491.50 what would be the value of the rest of the clock? This problem is thus left in about as much confusion and uncertainty as getting up copy for a daily paper, amid the wreck and confusion of moving a printing office down stairs. However, this will help to keep the type setters agoing while we help move the stove, the bookcase, the imposing stones, the chases, galleys, type stands and last, and not least, the crusted office towel. All of which is respectfully submitted.

P. S. Since writing the above we hear that the entire clock is to be sold for $1.50. So mote it be.

A CARD OF THANKS.

Mrs. Rachel Orr and daughters sincerely thank their friends for the kindness and sympathy shown them in this their hour of sorrow and bereavement.

TO MANY SENATORS.

The Ft. Wayne Journal recalls a little difficulty we explained at the time the last legislature was making the present gerrymander. We showed then, the trouble they are now having to face. It says:

The democrats are still contending that under the new legislature apportionment act the next state senate will contain fifty-one members—one more than the constitution allows. The point was made when the apportionate act was before the legislature last spring, but the republicans insisted that there was nothing in it. W. T. Eichhorn of Wells county, and other representative democrats, who were here this week, went over the new law once more, and they reiterate the statement made in the course of the session.

In the old apportionment act—the act of 1885, under which the election was held last year—Steuben and Lagrange counties composed one senatorial district. Last year Steuben and Lagrange counties elected Newton W. Gilbert, republican senator and DeKalb and Noble counties elected William H. Nusbaum, democrat. By the new law Lagrange and Noble are combined in one district and Steuben and DeKalb are thrown together. It so happens that Senators Gilbert and Nusbaum are thrown into the single district of Steuben and DeKalb counties. The new district of Lagrange and Noble, being without representative in the senate, declares that it has the right to nominate and elect one at the next election, and it is pointed out that if an election be held in that district and neither Gilbert nor Nusbaum resigns, there will be fifty-one senators.

The republican theory is that Lagrange and Steuben cannot elect at the coming election. It has been suggested either Gilbert or Nusbaum resign, but neither is disposed to quit. It is understood here that Senator Gilbert has said that he would offer his resignation if he could be sure of an appointment to a good foderal office; but as the Snited States pension agent has been taken from an adjoining county, the impression is that he will not get any thing. It is also true that the republicans are opposed to the resigna- of one of their senators in the light of the fact that the next legislature will chose a successor to Senator Turple. The situation is one with which the state committes with have to deal next spring.

WHERE'S THAT PROTECTION.

The Butler Record says: "The low price of wheat, potatoes, etc., is a practical demonstration that prices are governed by supply and demand and not by the price of silver, and that the theories of the so called "bimetallists" is nothing but theory. It also proves that the value of the dollar has not been appreciated." Whereupon we rise to ask the Record, what has become of "protection" that raises the price of all farm products according to republican doctrines. How is it that while it is claimed to raise the price of wool and wheat, that the party don't claim that it lowers the price of hay and clover seed?

OLD PROBLEMS.

The Ladies' Home Magazine, has and advt that offers a small prize for each person who solves the five following old problems:

I. If a bottle and cork cost $2.10, and the bottle cost $2.00 more than the cork, how much did the cork cost?

II. A fish weighs ten pounds and half its weight. What is its total weight?

III. A block of wood measuring 36 inches by 36 inches by 36 inches contains 27 cubic feet. How many cubic feet does a block contain which measures 18 inches by 18 inches by 18 inches?

IV. A frog fell into the bottom of a well 29 feet deep. In getting out he climbed up two and fell back one foot each day. How many days did it take him to reach the top of the well?

V. A man bought a par of shoes for $5. He gave the shoemaker a $100 bill in payment, and the shoemaker, not having the change, went across the street and got the bill changed, and gave the customer $95 in change and the shoes. Soon after, the man across the street called and made the shoemaker refund the $100 as the bill turned out to be a counterfeit. What did the shoemaker lose?

THE STATE MILITIA.

Many of our Young Men Will Want to Join Next Year.

The National Guard of Indiana will next year be an organization to which many a young man will wish he was a member. As Co. K. will be reorganized next month, which will give any who desire a chance to enlist, we will give below a brief account of the equipment for next year. Then too there are other reasons why people should be glad to enlist in Co. K. Major Kuhlman and his staff officer are located here, and we will soon not only have a military company but a military colony. Capt. J. F. Lahnum is now receiving names of persons who desire to enlist, any who do not fully understand may be enlisted by calling on him. Adjustant General Gore has just made his report and tells of many things for the future. He says:

That nine months ago, when the preparations for the annual camp of instructions came up for discussion, Governor Mount suggested that it would be a good idea to omit one encampment and use the money in new equipment of the guard. The books of the department showed that the annual encampment was a heavy drain on the appropriation for this department—so heavy that frequently there is a deficiency. The suggestion met with the approbation of the field officers, and plans for putting the guard in better form were at once agreed upon. The work laid out has gone on quietly and "nearly every company in the state is being reinforced," The department this year received its regular allowance from the general government in cloth for uniforms, and it is announced that there is now enough cloth on hand to supply the department for four years. Just after cloth had been received, the department was informed that the war department of the general government would not issue any more cloth at this time. It is pointed out that it enables the department to supply the men with tailor-made suits.

Packed in boxes, ready for distribution, are 4,500 caps, purchased through competition from an Indianapolis wholesale house. The caps are of the latest army regulation, with square top. It is the first time the militiamen of the state have been supplied with headgear of the regular army regulation. Recently the department also purchased 1,500 blankets, which are ready to be delivered. The order for these was placed before the rise in blankets, on account of the new tariff bill, and the department is informed that the blankets are at this time selling for fifty cents apiece more than when the order was placed. Another purchase is of 3,000 cartridge belts of the lastest pattern.

A large number of men are engaged in the basement of the capitol burnishing 3,000 Springfield rifles by the use of electrical machinery. Day by day the work has gone on, until the guns of the young soldiers have nearly all been made to look as if they had just come from the factory. The department has been exchanging some of the old guns for modern breech-loaders, and hopes to be able in the course of time to get modern guns for the 700 Springfield rifles it has on hand.

The plan of expending the money that would have been used in holding an encampment in improving the uniforms and equipment of the command has, it is said already improved the spirit of the drill and discipline. Several new companies have been organized, and the state's quota is now full. A new battery for the guard is being organized at Dana, to take the place of Rockville battery, recently mustered out. Two heliographs have recently been purchased for the use of the signal corps and the ambulance corps has been supplied with a new Red Cross ambulance.

An encampment will be held next year, and it will be held remote from any city or town. Lieut. Will T. May, of the United States army, now detailed to Indiana, has suggested to the war department that it would be of great benefit to the guard to have a battallion of infantry and a light battery of regular troops encampment with the milltiamen of the state. He has hope that the war department will order a detachment from Fort Sheridan to join the Indiana "boys" in the camp wherever it may be held.

Within the next three months the officers of the guard will be assembled at Indianapolis for theoretical instruction.

MOVED.

The Courier Now in Its New Quarters.

After remaining in one room nearly seventeen years, substantially under one management, the COURIER has changed its location, and this is the first article penned at the Editorial desk in the new sanctum.

The COURIER was purchased of the estate of Robert J. Lowry, and the first issue put out by the new firm of Barns & Husselman is before us bearing date of Dec. 23, 1880. In a few days after that issue the office was moved from its then location where the Dispatch office now is, to the then new building, just erected on the corner of Main and Seventh by the late W. H. Kiblinger. And there it has remained ever since. The location was a good one, and there was no fault to find on that score and it had come to seem like home. But the amount of great machinery required by a modern, fully equipped printing office is so heavy that it is desirable to have a room on the first floor. We have now a fairly good, first floor room the Sebring-Shull building next door north of Dr. Swarts' office on the east side of North Main St. Here our friends will find us at home and ready to give them a welcome, In fact many friends have already come in to congratulate us on the fact that they no longer have to climb a long, high flight of stairs to reach the office. Now come and see us, and don't forget the place, next door north of Dr. Swarts' office.

Speaking of our old first issue of Dec. 23, 1890, it may be of interest to note a few of the items in that issue.

One is a notice of "examination of teachers," by W. H. McIntosh, Co. Supt.

There are the time cards of the Ft. Wayne & Muncie Ry; that of the Pittsburg Ft. Wayne & Chicago while the Ft. Wayne and Jackson Ry. has a card ten inches long. The B. & O. and Wabash also have time cards.

This number contains of course, the "first words" of the then new firm, occupying about a third of a column. There is an article on milk cows, by Joel E. Thompson.

A local speaks of our moving into the fine new Kiplinger block before the next issue.

Anderson Bros. advertise their make of buggies; Ensley & Harter have as their successors still have, a double column ad, at the left hand top of the local page right where Bishop & Lackey still keep it.

Isaac Ochs advertises. So do Root & Co. of Ft. Wayne. Isaac Hague's shoe store, the Pioneer Hardware store, which is about the only one in town that still keeps the old location. There is J. B. White's Fruit House ad.; Joe Abright's jewelry store, etc.

CHURCH DEDICATION.

The new church at the Junction will be dedicated next Sunday, Nov. 21, as the very bad storm of last Sunday prevented holding the meeting before advertised. The pastor Rev. W. T. Wyrick, asks all the friends of the church and the cause to attend at that time. Don't forget the date.

THANKS FOR FAVORS.

The COURIER rises up in its new sanctum to thank Bro. Weamer of the Gazette for many favors and assistance during the stormy time of our removal to the new quarters. We are especially grateful for the use of his press to run the three editions of the DAILY that had to be issued during that time.

JULES LEVY

This famous cornetist, said to be the best in the world will be at the Waterloo Opera House on evening of Nov. 25, which is Thanksgiving Day. He be accompanied by E. A. Lefebre, the famous Saxophone player, and the two combined will give a musical entertainment that has few equals. Our people should hear them. Tickets on sale at R. Shull's store in Auburn.

Archery in Recent Warfare

The bow and arrow as a weapon of war long survived the introduction of gunpowder in Europe. In the battle of Leipsic in 1813 a large number of Bashkir Tartars were in the field, armed only with bows and arrows. General Marbot of the French was seriously wounded by an arrow in the battle, which was the last fought on European soil in which these primitive weapons were used.

REINIG-SCHIFFLI.

A very pretty wedding was that at the Smithfield Catholic church yesterday, Tuesday, that united Michael Reinig and Miss Gertrude Schiffli, Miss Josephine Schiffli and Thomas Reinig acted as bridesmaid and groomsman. The wedding was at the Catholic church there and by their pastor, and the attendance from among their friends and neighbors was very great At the residence the reception was attended by at least 150 invited guests and relatives. Many who were invited could not attend on account of the bad weather. There was a joyful social time and a grand dinner which all enjoyed. The young couple received many gifts, and the COURIER wishes them a long and happy wedded life.

The Auburn Catholic church choir attended the wedding and furnished the music. They are Mayme Buckley Minnie Hoff, Cecelia Girardot, Lulu Berg, Christ Fell jr. and John Harris of the Junction, with Lillie Fell as organist. All report a grand time,

For Mothers!

THE discomforts and dangers of child-birth can be almost entirely avoided. Wine of Cardui relieves expectant mothers. It gives tone to the genital organs, and puts them in condition to do their work perfectly. That makes pregnancy less painful, shortens labor and hastens recovery after child-birth. It helps a woman bear strong healthy children.

McELREE'S Wine of Cardui

has also brought happiness to thousands of homes barren for years. A few doses often brings joy to loving hearts that long for a darling baby. No woman should neglect to try it for this trouble. It cures nine cases out of ten. All druggists sell Wine of Cardui. $1.00 per bottle.

For advice in cases requiring special directions, address, giving symptoms, the "Ladies' Advisory Department," The Chattanooga Medicine Co., Chattanooga, Tenn.

NEXT.

For several years Hoffman's lake, near Bourbon, has had a "sea serpent," but not until last week was the story verified, when a turtle weighing 103 pounds, with a peculiar hump on its back, was caught. The feet are formed like a duck's foot, with a web. The tail is extra short, but the neck when stretched out easily reaches out over the hump, which is 11 inches high. The head is like an alligator's head, and the shell around the edges is so soft that it easily adjusts itself to the contour of the legs.—Magnet.

GOT THREE TURKEYS

HOW TOLLIVER WON HIS THANKSGIVING DINNER.

His Five Shots in the Gallery Result in Only Two Misses - Proprietor Gives Him One Bird and Pays Good Money for the Others.

Boze a Good Shot.

Shooting for turkeys on Thanksgiving is not confined entirely to the country. Those people who recall the times in the rural districts when they furbished up the old squirrel rifle or the family shotgun and attended an old-fashioned turkey shoot will be glad to know that there is a chance to accumulate a bird by prowess in marksmanship right here in town. It came, this knowledge, like a bright ray of sunshine to "Boze" Tolliver. "Boze" hailed from Missouri and he had been in Chicago a year. Times were tough and he and "the old woman" had hardly earned enough to keep themselves and the family. "Boze" had done teaming and odd jobs with his horses, but the fact was that right before Thanksgiving "Pete had the cupboard," to use a Missouri phrase.

To be sure, "Boze" had half a dollar, but that wouldn't provide a Thanksgiving dinner for six hungry people. He went out on the street and wandered along about six blocks, trying to think what he would get the most of for 50 cents. Presently he heard a sound something like a bell ringing and a sound also of shots. He looked across the street and saw a shooting gallery, with quite a crowd collected in and around the doorway, and he crossed the street rather aimlessly to watch the sport for a minute. When he got over there he saw that the crowd were shooting for turkeys. He pushed his way in and inquired the price of shots and the rules of the contest.

Now, "Boze" was a famous shot "back yon in Missouri," and could bark a squirrel with his rifle, or even kill a prairie chicken when flying from him straightaway, and his mouth watered at the prospect of gaining a turkey by an exhibition of skill with a rifle. He was told that the price of shots was 10 cents apiece; that he must ring the bell fairly on the smallest target to win a turkey. The hole on the smallest target was about as big as a 22-caliber cartridge and was exceedingly difficult for even a practiced marksman to find.

Only one man won a turkey while "Boze" watched the shooting and nearly forty shots were fired. It was evident that the proprietor was not losing money on the scheme.

"Boze" stood and watched. He did not like the new-fangled looks of "them ar brich-loaders." Finally, as the crowd thinned out some the proprietor said to "Boze," "Want to try your luck?"

"Well," replied "Boze," "I hain't never seed nary brich-loader, but ef you'll let me shoot my own rifle I'll try you a few."

"What caliber is your rifle?" said the shooting gallery man.

"It's a Hawkens rifle," said "Boze."

"Oh! I mean how big a bullet does she throw," said the proprietor.

"Oh!" said "Boze," "she kerries about a hundred and twenty to the pound. It's a powerful little bullet."

"How many shots do you want to take?" asked the gallery man.

"Well, I reckon about five," was the reply.

"Go ahead and get your gun," was the proprietor's answer, and "Boze" walked home and got out his artillery. It was a typical squirrel rifle, with the "buck horn" hind-sight, knife-blade front sight, cap box and patch box in the stock and carrying a bullet scarcely larger than a pea.

"Boze" returned leisurely to the gallery after assuring his wife that he "didn't aim to shoot ary feller." The shooting gallery began to fill up to see the muzzle-loader perform. "Boze" had measured out the powder, carefully greased the patch and pushed the ball home with the hickory ramrod. He braced himself, took careful aim and fired. The ball barely missed the center and the bell hummed slightly. The Missourian loaded his rifle carefully, aimed and fired again. This time the bell rang clear and true, the crowd cheered and "Boze" smilingly remarked: "By cat, I reckon that gits a gobbler."

He reloaded his rifle for a third shot and, bringing the gun to his shoulder for a third time, he fired and rang the bell clearly again. The crowd by this time was in ecstasies, all but the proprietor. Even "Boze" was affected with a sense of joyful hilarity and on his fourth shot he fired a trifle high.

Reloading his old standby for the fifth and last shot he brought the gun up with the steadiness of machinery. At the crack of the rifle the bell rang like a gong so clearly had the bullet reached the center. "Boze" was entitled to three turkeys.

"Tell you what I'll do," said the proprietor. "I'll give you a dollar and a quarter apiece for two of those turkeys. That will put you two dollars ahead, with your Thanksgiving bird free and your shooting costing you nothing."

"That's fair," said "Boze." "I kain't fight over that."

So "Boze" returned home triumphant with turkey and money and the Tollivers had as big a feed as anyone. And all because "Boze" had cultivated a knack for rifle shooting. As he said to himself at the dinner, with his utterance somewhat choked with "stuffin':

"What a feller kin do hain't allays goin' to do him good, but what a feller kin do kin be depended on to come in sometimes. It looks to me thataway."—Chicago Chronicle.

A THANKSGIVING DINNER IN 1621.

Pilgrims' Banquet to Indian Chiefs Was Fit to Set Before a King.

"The state dinner of the occasion—the real Thanksgiving dinner—took place on Saturday, the last day of the celebration," writes Clifford Howard of "The First Thanksgiving Dinner" in America, in the Ladies' Home Journal. "Notwithstanding that the kitchens of these wilderness homes were sadly wanting in many of the most common essentials of cookery, there was no lack of good things nor of appetizing dishes at this great feast. The earth, the air and the water had yielded of their bountiful supplies, and the good dames had done honor to their skill and ingenuity by setting before their hungry guests and companions a repast as sumptuous and tempting as it was varied and delightful. Foremost of all there was roast turkey, dressed with beechnuts; then came rare venison pasties, savory meat stews with dumplings of barley flour, delicious oysters (the gift of the Indians, and the first ever tasted by the white men), great bowls of clam chowder with sea biscuit floating on the steaming broth, roasts of all kinds, broiled fish, salads, cakes and plum porridge; while the center of each of the long tables was adorned with a large basket overflowing with wild grapes and plums and nuts of every variety.

"It was the time of the Indian summer. The soft, mellow sunlight shone warmly through the drowsy haze, illumining the somber woodland with a rich golden light, while the gentle winds of the south, laden with the sweet perfumes of the forest, came as a lingering dream of summer to add to the joy and brightness of this Thanksgiving feast. Upon the balmy air rose the hum of many voices and the merry music of laughter, as the Pilgrims with their Indian guests partook of the feast that the Provider of all things had given them."

Should Be Thankful.

Yes, there are gloomy days of dark repining,
That sadly flit along on leaden wing,
And yet, somewhere, the sun is always shining,
And every winter surely ends in spring.

Yes, there is pain and suffering heart-rending,
And pitiful old age, grown faint and gray;
But young lives come to crown the old lives' ending—
Think of the children in the world to-day!

Yes, there is war. God waits a little longer
Ere he will all this jarring strife subdue;
But human life to-day was never stronger,
And human hearts were never half so true.

Yes, in each life there will be bitter sorrow,
But 'tis not long—this space of mortal breath;
There waits for each of us a grand to-morrow,
There waits for each the kindly night of death.

A world where sunbeams dance and birds are singing,
Where violets never fail to come in May,
Where little children's voices sweet are ringing,
Where love shines steadfast on the darkest way!

A world where dear life meets us, full of gladness,
And guides our steps o'er easy paths and steep;
And where her smile has faded into sadness,
Dear Death soothes every weary heart to sleep.

Beyond our sight the angels are rejoicing,
They stand around the throne in shining ranks;
Oh, let us join the song that saints are voicing,
He is our Father—let us, too, give thanks;
—The Housewife.

Glad Things Are No Worse.

Comparative Joys.

"Have you much to be thankful for this year, Grumpy?"

"Well, something. I'm thankful that they can't make it any tougher for me than they have during the last twelve months."

GIVING THANKS.

A quaint, brown house, just out of town—
We young folks know the way;
'Tis there, each year, with Grandma Dow,
We keep Thanksgiving day.
A host of uncles, cousins, aunts,
Gathered from far and near,
The wanderer from home returns
To greet his kindred dear.

So great the crowd, so small the house,
'Tis full to bursting, quite;
But grandma says, "There's room for all
Who may with us unite."
And 'round the cheerful hearth where we,
As children, loved to play,
With many a merry song and jest
We keep Thanksgiving day.

Then "ting-a-ling," the dinner bell
Summons us, one and all;
To hasten to the laden board,
Nor wait the second call.
The turkey, roasted to a turn,
The place of honor takes;
Here, too, such doughnuts, puddings, pies,
As only grandma makes.

And seated thus, each one recounts
The blessings of the year:
The dangers passed, the hearts made glad—
We give attentive ear.
Then on the youngest papa calls:
"Come, Ned, 'tis your turn now."
Cries Ned, "I'm thankful as can be That we's got Grandma Dow!"
—Good Housekeeping.

SOMETHING ABOUT THE DAY.

The Thanksgiving Festival Was Long of a Peripatetic Nature.

THANKSGIVING till as late as 1680, nearly sixty years after its idea was first suggested, was eminently a movable feast, liable to occur at any time from January to December and in any place throughout the colonies, wherever the various inhabitants felt gratitude to be a becoming emotion. Instead, too, of a general expression of thanks, as is now the custom, they rendered up thanks in detail—on one occasion it would be in return for much-needed rain, then for triumph over the Indians and again for the safe landing of the English supply ships. One time, indeed, in July, 1621, when rain finally came after a prolonged period of drought and prayer, they appointed a thanksgiving of one week in duration.

Were such a peripatetic Thanksgiving to come in vogue again it would be quite a shock to us of this generation, with our pre-established notions of Thanksgiving as inseparable from roast turkey, cranberry sauce and pumpkin pie. Fancy sitting down to our Thanksgiving dinner in April when we might esteem ourselves lucky if we were furnished with asparagus as a delicacy and rhubarb pie as a dessert, for if we had been pilgrims or even Massachusetts Bay colonists we would have been obliged to choose between taking what the soil produced or going without, these present happy days of a whole Florida garden being landed by express at our doors in midwinter not being yet on the American program. Or imagine the Thanksgiving dinner of July, 1621, partaken of perhaps to the delightful accompaniment of the patter of the rain for which they had so fervently prayed and with green corn as the piece de resistance, or that Thanksgiving in June, 1637, after victory over the Pequods, when maybe strawberries garnished with roses formed the menu.

On these occasions, though, the colonists had evidently quite lost sight of the part that the autumn harvest plays in the observance—the prehistoric significance of the festival, the season being with them purely and simply a many-voiced thank-offering in acknowledgment of the bettering of their condition. After it became an annual affair it supplanted in a measure the English Christmas, whose celebration was too riotous to meet their strict religious notions—this the puritanic Thanksgiving, supplying the unalloyed devoutness which was the one thing they would willingly have retained in the Christmas of their forefathers.

As has been seen Thanksgiving day for the first sixty years of its existence was a hit-and-miss affair as to time and place, and even after it had settled down into an annual autumn festival if the people did not feel particularly encouraged the observance of it was liable to be omitted, and it did not assume its national character till during the revolution, when Congress recommended the yearly appointing of such a day. In spite of this, though, in the years intervening between 1784 and 1789 there were no Thanksgiving days. In 1789 Washington issued a Thanksgiving proclamation in view of the adoption of the Constitution and after that to the time of Lincoln, the example of the first President was intermittently followed by his successors.

But only since 1858 can Thanksgiving be said to have been a fixed and universal American custom, and in that year the Governors of the different Southern States united with their Eastern brother officials in issuing Thanksgiving proclamations, and the example set by Lincoln in 1863 of issuing a Thanksgiving proclamation suggesting the last Thursday in November as an appropriate day has been followed since without break by every occupant of the presidential chair.

Though long in coming to its fulfillment, like some fair oak tree that requires many years of storm and sun to bring it to its full beauty, Thanksgiving, the Sunday of our national year, is now an imperishable monument of the faith, the benevolence and the softer graces so often averred to have no existence in this practical work-a-day American world.

An Electrical Letter Carrier.

A very clever mail delivery box has been placed in a number of the larger buildings at Geneva, Switzerland, by an enterprising electrician. This mail box has a compartment for each of the stories of the building, and when the letters are deposited on the ground floor the carrier delivers them as required. The deposit of a single letter makes an electric contact, which starts a bell going on the respective floor, which does not cease ringing until the letter is taken out.

At the same time it opens the faucet of a tank on the roof of the house, which causes water to flow into the cylinder forming the counterweight of the mail box elevator until the weight is heavier than the box, when the box ascends and the flow of water ceases simultaneoulsy. As the box passes each story the mail intended for it—letters, papers and small packages—falls into boxes in the corridor on that floor. This is performed very reliably by a little spring at the bottom of each compartment in the elevator mail box, which causes the bottom of the compartment to catch for a moment, and the release throws out even a single piece of paper thinner than a postal card into the stationary box provided for its reception.

By its own weight the box descends to its place on the ground floor. Should by any mischance a single piece of paper have remained in the elevator, upon striking the bottom it will at once go through the same series of movements as before.—New York Evening Journal.

Boy Versus Time.

An amusing incident took place not long ago in an important lawsuit in a Kansas town. A twelve-year-old boy was on the stand, and testified that he had spent just ten minutes in getting a bucket of water for his mother. The question of time was a vital one, and the opposing attorneys tried to rattle the boy. Finally one of them pulled out his watch, and proposed to test whether or not the boy knew when ten minutes had elapsed. The opposing attorneys on the boy's side of the case sternuously objected to this test, for it is well known that nothing is harder than to sit still and gauge the passing of time. The judge ordered the test to be made, however, and after the court-room clock had been stopped, and every chance removed for the boy to play a sneak, the trial commenced.

The stillness in the room became appressive. Every watch was drawn, and the youngster, who chewed gum, swung his foot against the round of his chair and gazed placidly out over the benches, as though the proceedings had mighty little interest for him.

Two, four, six minutes passed, and still he made no sign. Then the attorneys commenced to worry him.

"Isn't time about up?' 'asked one of them.

"Nope," sententiously responded the boy, as he changed the cross in his knees.

Seven and eight minutes passed.

"Haven't you got that water pumped you?" asked the attorney, in a tone which was intended to convey the belief that ten minutes had more than passed.

"Reckon not," again replied the boy, and his own attorneys began to chuckle.

Nine minutes passed, and tick, tick, tick went the seconds toward the ten-minute mark, and up to exactly three seconds before the limit, when the boy drawled out:

"I think I've got the water drawed."

The people burst into applause; and after the trial, when the boy was asked to explain how he hit off the time so correctly, he replied:

"Oh, I just sorter knowed, that's all."

POLITICS OF THE DAY

BRYAN'S QUESTIONS.

In 1896 the Republican party promised to promote international bimetallism and Mr. McKinley, in his letter of acceptance, pledged himself to carry out that promise. If the gold standard has been a benefit to the United States, why should the Republican party try to abandon it and substitute the double standard by international agreement?

As soon as Mr. McKinley was elected he asked Congress for authority to appoint a commission to visit Europe and secure the aid of the leading commercial nations of Europe in abandoning the gold standard. If the gold standard is a blessing why did Mr. McKinley send a commission to Europe to get rid of it?

A Republican Congress, by an almost unanimous vote, appropriated $100,000 to pay the expenses of the monetary commission. If the gold standard is the standard of civilization, why did the Republican party spend $100,000 in trying to get rid of it?

The French government expressed a willingness to restore bimetallism by international agreement and joined our commissioners in asking England's cooperation. If the gold standard has been a blessing to France why is France willing to abandon its gold standard and substitute international bimetallism?

Within three years the German reichstag has adopted a resolution declaring in favor of international bimetallism. If the gold standard has been a blessing to Germany why was the popular branch of the German assembly willing to abandon the gold standard and substitute international bimetallism?

The gold standard has been indorsed by bankers, financiers and chambers of commerce, but it had never been indorsed by the producers of wealth in any nation in the world. Will the Republicans say that the producers of wealth do not know what is good for them, or should only financiers be consulted in monetary legislation?

The monetary commission remained in England for three months, and the press dispatches reported that the commissioners were confident of obtaining some concession from England. On the 22d day of last September the bankers of London joined in unanimous protest against bimetallism, and the English government has now refused to make the concession for which our commissioners asked. Does this not support our contention that the gold standard is advocated by the capitalistic classes of the world?

The Republican party, in its platform of 1896, after pledging itself to international bimetallism, declared that the gold standard must be maintained until the leading commercial nations joined in international bimetallism. Is it well to thus allow the leading commercial nations of Europe to dictate the financial policy of the United States?

That Vote of "Confidence."

If the Republican administration anticipated a vote of confidence, the recent election must have proved a severe disappointment.

Last year McKinley had the magnificent plurality of 268,574 votes in the State of New York. This year the Empire State went Democratic by a plurality of 53,248. A change of 175,000 votes shows what the people of the State of New York think of the Republican administration. New York City has reversed a plurality of 57,000 for McKinley to a Democratic plurality of 100,000. Republican measures are evidently not popular in the State of New York, nor are they approved by the citizens of the greater city of New York.

However, Ohio ought to have proved loyal to the party which sent her honored son, McKinley, to Washington as President of the United States. But, alas for the hopes of the grand old party! the Buckeye State has reduced her Republican majority from 50,000 in 1896 to 20,000 in 1897, and Hanna, who stands as the representative of McKinley, has an excellent chance of remaining at home as a private citizen instead of re-entering the United States Senate.

There is no necessity of referring to Kentucky, Virginia or Nebraska. It would be cruel to harrow up the feelings of Republicans by calling attention to the disasters which have befallen their party in those States. Tariff "reform," monetary "reform," Union Pacific "reform," Cuban "reform," have been weighed in the balance and found wanting. The Republican party is doomed to inevitable defeat in 1900.—Chicago Dispatch.

Victory for Silver.

One fact has been clearly demonstrated by the elections, and that is the enlarged growth of silver sentiment. However much the Republican editors may strive to ignore the conclusion, there remains no doubt that the dissatisfaction of the people with gold monometallism was at the bottom of Republican defeat. Henry Watterson frankly admits the victory of bimetallism at the polls in Kentucky and withdraws from party leadership. In New York the outcome is found to be practically the same. In Ohio, while the Republicans have won by a narrow margin, their victory is really a defeat, and the Buckeye State is now in the doubtful column. It is not at all sure that Hanna will go to the Senate, even though the Legislature may prove to have a Republican majority on joint ballot. A few dissatisfied Republicans can, by the aid of the Democrats, defeat the aspirations of the boss and elect some less objectionable Republican. As for Nebraska, W. J. Bryan says: "Nebraska increases her majority for silver. Returns from other States vindicate the Chicago platform. I rejoice over the outlook."

Still a Deficit.

The Dingley tariff for deficit keeps right on in its merry work, and the returns for October leave a neat little balance of about $10,000,000 on the wrong side of the ledger.

An analysis of the receipts and expenditures of the United States shows that the total receipts for the month of October were $24,391,415, and the expenditures $33,701,512, making the excess of expenditures over receipts for the month $9,310,097, and for the four months of the present fiscal year $38,009,010. The receipts for customs during October amounted to $9,713,494, as compared with $11,105,493 for October, 1896, and the receipts from internal revenue sources $13,614,872, a gain of $251,716 over October last year.

For a measure which was passed with the avowed purpose of furnishing sufficient revenue to meet the expenses of the Government, the Dingley tariff is certainly falling far behind the expectations of its promoters, and unless some unexpected change for the better takes place the contingency anticipated by Senator Aldrich will face the Republican party. This contingency will be the settled fact of a deficiency of revenue, chargeable to Republican legislation, which will result in the downfall of the party responsible.

What Brought It About.

That this is a Democratic year has become a trite expression, but as the election returns from the contested States all over the Union show, it is a true one. In New York the McKinley majority of nearly 270,000 has been wiped out. In Ohio, if Mark Hanna's Senatorial aspirations have not been obliterated entirely, they certainly have received such a setback that they can only be realized through the magnanimity—or the purchase—of his enemies in his own party.

New York and Ohio were the two important States in this year's political contest. The same agencies were at work in New York State and in Ohio, and to about the same extent, as the returns show. They were disgusted with the bunco game the Republicans in Congress played on the dupes who were caught by their "sound money" cry last year, the unblushing hypocrisy and only too transparent impotence of the McKinley administration in handling the nation's affairs, and the favor shown by every official in Washington to the monopolies and trusts all over the country.

The result shows that the people are angry, and that they will remain angry for some time to come is all too clear. They put the Republican party in power because that party made promises which it had no intention of keeping. It has been found out, and unless the Democracy is unusually stupid between now and November of next year it will elect a Congress of its own way of thinking.—New York News.

Something to Give McKinley Joy.

"I am well pleased with the result of the election" is the remark credited to President McKinley the day after the Ohio slump. No man has stronger reason than President McKinley to be pleased with the Ohio result. If it shall turn out that Boss Hanna has been overthrown and defeated for Senator the President will have cause for riotous joy. When McKinley became indebted to Hanna for his nomination and election he hung a millstone about his neck. The overthrow of Hanna's power and the snapping of the bonds he has twined around the administration would be the best thing that could happen to President McKinley. The continuation of Hanna's mastership will be his destruction.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Bond Issue in the Near Future.

At the present monthly rate of excess of expenditures over receipts, it is evident that the treasury deficit before the end of the year will be so heavy that some unusual means will have to be adopted to meet the requirements. Only one of two ways is open. Senator Alison has pointed out one of them. This is to take from the appropriations for the river and harbor improvement and coast defenses a sufficient sum to balance the deficit. It is hardly probable that the administration would care to establish so unpopular a precedent. The only other recourse is a bond issue. That it will be taken there is scarcely any room for doubt.—St. Louis Republic.

Pharisaical Talk About Tammany.

The spasms which some Eastern and European reformers are attempting to have over the election of Judge Van Wyck are due principally to the innocence of the "holier-than-thou" element in believing all the wild stories about Tammany. As a fact it is simply the only Democratic organization in the country that has the skill and discipline of the Republican machines. And Platt's gang is a great deal worse morally than Tammany ever was.—Kansas City Times.

Rebuked by Ohio Voters.

The voters of Ohio made a brave effort to rebuke Mr. McKinley's pitiful lowering of the dignity that attaches to the Presidential office in his madness of desire to make a United States Senator—by popular suffrage—of the slush fund syndicate organizer who made him President. They have voiced a shamed and indignant protest against Hannaism, the threat of which may not be wisely disregarded in future.—St. Louis Republic.

Still Something in Reserve.

It is well understood that many Federal appointments for Ohio were held back, pending the campaign lately closed. Some of them will no doubt soon be announced, in pursuance of promises made in the interest of Mr Hanna's election to the Senate. How many will be held back still further to assist Mr. Hanna in the difficulties he seems to be about to encounter in the Legislature?—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Iowa's High Opinion of White.

In the returns Mr. White can read the answer the people of the State made to the charge that he was an "anarchist," "a dangerous man," unfitted to be intrusted with the execution of the laws of the State. No man, not even Horace Boies, ever had a more magnificent indorsement from the people of Iowa than Mr. White received yesterday.—Des Moines Leader.

JUDGE HAS A BIG TERRITORY.

C. S. Johnson of Alaska, Whose Jurisdiction Is One-Sixth of United States.

Charles Sumner Johnson, recently appointed by President McKinley judge of the United States Court for the district of Alaska, exercises jurisdiction over a domain vastly greater than that of any Federal judge in the Union. It embraces an area of nearly 600,000 square miles, with a coast line longer than that of all the Atlantic, Pacific and Gulf States combined, and his jurisdiction is nearly one-sixth of the whole territory of the United States. It extends from south to north from latitude 54 degrees 40 minutes (sixteen and two-thirds degrees) to latitude 71 degrees 20 minutes, and from east to west from 130 degrees west longitude (57 degrees 20 minutes) to 172 degrees 40 minutes east longitude. The position of judge for this country of immensities is no sinecure. The greatest hindrances to the prompt administration of justice are the lack of transportation facilities, the great distances, want of means for communication, and the difficulty of securing competent and reliable juries.

Judge Johnson was born in a cabin in Jones County, Iowa, in 1854; educated in the high schools of Clarinda,

CHARLES S. JOHNSON.

Agricultural College, and State University of Iowa, graduating from the law department of the latter institution in 1877. He removed to Nebraska and engaged in the practice of law, was elected to various offices, among them member of the Legislature of that State in 1882, prosecuting attorney for his district in 1885, and re-elected in 1887. He resigned in 1889 to accept an appointment as United States attorney for the district of Alaska and served in that capacity four and one-half years, being the only attorney who ever served a full term in Alaska. After the expiration of his term he settled in Juneau, Alaska, and continued the practice of law. He was elected a delegate to the Republican convention at St. Louis in 1896, and was chosen national committeeman for Alaska.

LINES ON THE FACE.

They Tell the Life Story of the Individual with Remarkable Accuracy.

Everybody who possesses character of any sort is laying a system of railway lines on his face which, as old age approaches, will tell his life story and the kind of man he is more clearly than he could tell it himself.

Look at the "cash lines" in sketch No. 1. A constant hypocritical raising of the forehead has made those forehead lines, V-shaped under the eyes, on the baggy chin, mouth and cheek semi-circles, and those little upward curves in the eye-corners.

Face No. 2 has not made the best of things. Everything is wrong, say the drooping lines at either side of the mouth. And the chin itself is a study in woebegone irritability.

No. 3 is a man who persistently makes the best of things. Life with him is a perpetual circus, and the lines in his face have gradually formed themselves into a network of jollity and good-humor.

No. 4 is the Bill Sykes type of face. Bill's hand is against everybody when it isn't in anybody's pocket. If you are getting any of these lines look out or you will find yourself enjoying the hospitality of the Government.

House-to-House Housekeeping.

Why should not a staff of servants be organized to do, at any rate, the rougher part of the domestic service in, say, fifty or a hundred federated households, just in the same way that a single staff could be organized to cook their meals? Why should I not pay so much a year, either to a bona fide co-operative society, or to a private speculator, to have my beds made, my floors scrubbed, my knives and boots cleaned, and other similar work performed at stated hours every day and every week? The agency which undertook to perform this service would organize its workers just as do other agencies which at present undertake to keep our gardens in order, to clean our boilers, sweep our chimneys, or clean our bicycles; and the labor difficulty which meets us in domestic service as at present organized would consequently be eliminated.—London Truth.

A Sensation.

That the world is coming to an end suddenly at a given time is not what is here referred to. There are different kinds of sensations, as very many people know who feel sharp twinges of pain in the big nerve of the thigh. Sciatica is a very painful sensation, and the torment of it makes one think something is come to an end. But just at the first sensation or twinge is the best time to use St. Jacobs Oil. The less pain the more easily it is cured, and the Oil prevents its development by soothing the nerve. At any stage it will cure.

She Proves It.

"How about the cook?"

Then Sleep Soundly.

You can't afford to lie awake o' nights. Nothing compensates for loss of sleep. Eight hours of good sleep every night is what you need if you hope to keep healthy nerves in your body and a clear head on your shoulders. Yet you cannot get rest enough while you persist in drinking coffee. No habitual coffee drinker can depend on his sleep. Why not break off the coffee habit and drink Grain-O in place of it? Grain-O is made from pure grains, has the rich seal brown color of Mocha or Java, is nourishing and palatable—a food drink—without any of the noxious properties of coffee. Having used it a short time you will prefer it to the best coffee that was ever set on your table. Two points gained—health promoted, money saved. All grocers. In packages at 15c. and 25c.

A Valuable Franchise Secured.

The franchise of easy digestion—one of the most valuable in the gift of medical science—can be secured by any person wise enough to use Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, either to suppress growing dyspepsia, or to uproot it at maturity. Bilious, rheumatic and fever and ague sufferers, persons troubled with nervousness and the constipated, should also secure the health franchise by the same means.

They New Ma.

The train had stopped for a few minutes at a station out on the plains, and two or three bare-footed boys and girls had their backs against the depot and their fingers in their mouths, while they stared at the passengers.

Suddenly a boy of about ten years dashed around a corner at the station and called to his brother and sister;

"You, Joey! Ma says if you an' Maggie don't come right straight home she'll—she'll—well, I fergit what, but she'll do it, sure, for you know what ma is when she gets started; so you had better git home straight off!"

Joey and Maggie evidently knew what ma was when she "got started," for they started homeward as fast as their bare little feet could carry them.

Merit Means Money Made.

You cannot advertise money out of people's pockets all the time; you may do it now and then, but if you don't give them something of absolute merit in return, advertising will never prove successful. The kind of advertising that pays is advertising a good thing. As it has merit the people will use it again and again. Never has this been better illustrated than in the great success of Cascarets, candy cathartic, that we have been lately advertising in this paper. All druggists call Cascarets repeaters, that is, people buy them, like them, and buy them again and recommend them to their friends. Cascarets are guaranteed to cure constipation or money refunded, and are a delightful laxative and liver stimulant; the best medicine ever made. We recommend all our readers to try them.

The Destiny of the Negro.

What is the destiny of the American negro? Extinction, emigration or amalgamation? In answer to this question Bishop W. J. Gaines, who is no mean authority on the subject, says:

"The black race is surely and gradually becoming absorbed by the white; that, in the run of years, the black face will disappear, the evolution being reached through a process of graded mulatto tints and constantly lessening African characteristics.

AFTER THEY ARE DIVORCED.

THE eleventh annual report of the Commissioner of Labor contains in tabulated form, reduced to exact percentages, a statement showing the occupations of divorced women. The divorced women constitute nine-tenths of 1 per cent. of the female population of ten years of age or over in the United States, and they are distributed throughout various occupations, which the statistical experts have endeavored to state with undeviating exactness. Of the total number of divorced women employed, it seems that .21 per cent. are bookbinders, .98 are shoemakers and .60 are corset-makers. A much smaller proportion, .42, are saleswomen, while .60 are telegraph and telephone operators. Stenographers and typewriters make up .67 per cent. and .58 are mill hands; 1.23 of the divorced women of the United States who have any business occupation are merchants, 1.04 are carpet-makers and .40 are hat and cap makers. Milliners come under a separate division, their percentage of divorced women being 1.32. Of seamstresses there are 1.35, and of clerks and copyists, 51. Moreover, .29 are boxmakers, .68 printers, .31 cigarette and tobacco makers, .64 in the confectionery business, 1.43 dressmakers, .46 paper mill operators and 1.5 silk mills. The professions have a considerable number of divorced women, 1.24 being music teachers and 1.18 teachers of art. There are 3.33 per cent. described as hotel, restaurant and saloon keepers and barkeepers, and a somewhat larger proportion as boarding or lodging house keepers; 1.62 as laundresses, 1.80 as nurses and .51 as agricultural laborers.

Woman Golf Champion.

An 18-year-old girl, Miss Beatrix Hoyt, holds the title of woman golf champion of America. She has held the title for more than a year, although it is only two years since her first appearance on any link. During the summer of 1896 she made the woman's record over both the short and the long course, which record stood until this summer, when she herself lowered that of the shorter course to 38. Her second success was in winning the ladies' championship of the Shinnecock Hills Golf Club, but this was only a preamble to her greater triumph in the national championship of 1896 at Morristown. In the tournament at Manchester Miss Hoyt again upheld her prestige with the lowest of all scores. She defeated Miss N. C. Sargent on Friday, Aug. 27, thereby securing the woman's amateur golf championship for 1897. Miss Hoyt lives at Westchester, N. Y., and learned the game on the grounds of the Country Club there.

MISS BEATRIX HOYT.

No Waltzing Nowadays.

The dancing congresses and the dancing teachers may consider the waltz in all its aspects and send forth rules and regulations as to how and when and where it is to be danced, but as a matter of fact the waltz is not danced at all, says the New York Evening Sun. The dodo is hardly more extinct. It is two-step, two-step, two-step nowadays. A ballroom orchestra may now and then, at judiciously long intervals, strike up a waltz, but only to have the floor remain deserted until they resume the quicker tempo that has become so dear to dancing feet. The one or two pairs who may gyrate a few times while the waltz is in progress are sure to belong to an elder era, and the eyes of the youngsters follow them wonderingly as the waltzers might the mazes of an ancient minuet. It is the two-step or nothing nowadays. Any up-to-date pair that deigns to indulge in the waltz does so with a sort of two-step adaptation; the old-time gliding motion has been discarded altogether. Smart cotillons nowadays are always danced to the two-step.

Stowaway in Petticoats.

Stowaways are generally accredited to be boys, but when the steamer Eugene was thirty miles away from Portland, Ore., on her voyage to the Klondike recently, a woman was found stowed away in the engine room. She was Mrs. H. E. Stetson, the wife of a man aboard the steamer, who was going to look for a fortune in the gold fields. Her husband had decided to leave her at home, believing that she could not withstand the dangers and hardships of life in Alaska. She thought otherwise, and, accordingly, hid herself away in the ship. The husband was dumfounded when his wife was brought on deck. He gladly forgave her for hiding herself on board, and paid her fare.

To Mend Mackintoshes.

To men mackintoshes procure a small tin of pure India rubber cement, or dissolve some strips of pure India rubber in naphtha, then apply a little of the cement to the surface of a strip of the material of which the mackintosh is made; this can be purchased by the yard from the waterproofers'. Also apply a little of the cement on each side of the torn part and bring the edges together, and place over them the patch, which requires to be kept in position for a few days, until quite hard, by placing a weight over it.

Dangerous Slang.

There is something of a moral in this story, and, to reverse the usual order of things, the moral is given at the beginning of the story. This is it: Never use slang before children.

A lady was arranging her toilet before a mirror. Her boy, aged 8, had never discovered that his mother wore false bangs, really more than bangs, for the hair made almost a toupee, if that's what they call it.

He saw her removing the false hair, and asked her what it was. She was surprised, and as she feared he might give away his discovery in public she said:

"Oh, any old thing. Don't ask so many questions."

The day following she was getting dinner, or rather bossing the job.

"Run in and ask your father what he wants for dinner," she said to the boy, who was hanging around in the kitchen.

The head of the family was engrossed in the evening paper and paid but little attention to the boy when he said:

"Paw, maw wants to know what you want for dinner."

"Oh, any old thing will do," he answered, without looking up from his paper.

"Well, all I've got to say is you'll have a dern good time pickin' the hairs out of it if maw cooks that thing fur dinner," said the youngster, as he started for the kitchen to tell his mother. All was clear enough, however, when the mother recalled her answer made the day before.

To Market by Trolley.

An English trolley line, plying between Bessbrook and Newry, through a rich farming district, makes a substantial addition to its receipts by hauling farm wagons over its lines attached to the motor car, in the place of the trailer which is sometimes seen. In order to keep the wagons on the track a second pair of rails is laid inside the working tracks and slightly higher.

The towns at either end of the line are both market towns, and the line runs directly to the business center, where the wagons are drawn aside and run into their places by a half-dozen sturdy men, who are paid a few pence each by the countrymen for this service. It is, therefore, possible for a farmer to bring his produce to market and dispose of it without the aid of his horses. It is not an uncommon sight and always a rather amusing one, to see a lumbering farm wagon loaded with hay or produce flying along behind the motor car on its way to market. The farmers take kindly to this scheme, as it is a saving of money as well as horseflesh.

CROKER WITHOUT FEAR.

The Tammany Leader Once Swam Out Among a School of Sharks.

It is said that Richard Croker, the Tammany boss, is a man absolutely devoid of physical fear and to prove it a story is told of his great nerve.

Some years ago a New York newspaper printed an article which stated that the talk of sharks eating human beings was all rubbish; that they were afraid of men and would swim away in consternation if a man were suddenly to appear before them. Among those who became interested in the matter was Mr. Croker and he declared the only way to settle the controversy which the article started was to put a live man in front of a shark and watch the result. He further remarked that some day he would find out for himself.

One winter or two later Croker decided to spend a few weeks in Florida and he was accompanied on the trip by Andrew Freedman, now president of the New York Base-Ball Club. Not far from St. Augustine there is a place where sharks may often be seen lying motionless in the space between the shore and the bar. The water is almost always as clear as glass, and the huge fish are plainly visible. The first time Croker saw the sharks at this point he told Freedman he was going to find out whether they would eat a man if they got a chance. Next day he and Freedman went out there again, taking with them two good-sized chunks of raw beef, one of which they put on a big hook, intending to use the meat as a bait and haul in the first unlucky fish that should venture on a nibble. But owing to the powerful though smooth and quiet ocean swell, it was impossible to throw the bait out far enough to attract the attention of the sharks. This was tried and tried again, but to no purpose; every time the baited hook was cast it was brought back by the irresistible force of the long swells. Finally Croker got tired, and seizing a piece of beef in his hands he ran out as far as he could, then gave a dive, and with half a dozen impetuous strokes swam out to the group of alleged man-eaters, and dropped his burden before them.

Freedman was dumfounded, and shouted to his friend to come back at once; but almost before he could get the words out of his mouth Croker was again standing on shore, dripping and breathless, having got away from the sharks with all possible speed.

"But the sharks hurried away as fast as my friend Dick did," Freedman always says in winding up the story, "from which I conclude that they were worse frightened than he; in fact, he didn't seem frightened at all."

Croker thinks the incident proves that sharks are afraid of man. There are probably few, however, who would believe this evidence conclusive.

lined by the tiny green leaves. Many people visit Mr. Hughes' house to find out how the strings are arranged, but it would take an exceedingly fine memory to retain the plan so as to produce a similar effect. Some of the visitors have made a sketch of the entire vine, but as yet none has reported his success in copying the oddity.

A TALK WITH MRS. PINKHAM

About the Cause of Anemia.

Everybody comes into this world with a predisposition to disease of some particular tissue; in other words, everybody has a weak spot.

In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the weak spot in women is somewhere in the uterine system. The uterine organs have less resistance to disease than the vital organs; that's why they give out the soonest.

Not more than one woman in a hundred—nay, in five hundred—has perfectly healthy organs of generation. This points to the stern necessity of helping one's self just as soon as the life powers seem to be on the wane.

Excessive menstruation is a sign of physical weakness and want of tone in the uterine organs. It saps the strength away and produces anemia (blood turns to water).

If you become anemic, there is no knowing what will happen. If your gums and the inside of your lips and inside your eyelids look pale in color, you are in a dangerous way and must stop that drain on your powers. Why not build up on a generous, uplifting tonic, like Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?

MRS. EDWIN EHRIG, 413 Church St., Bethlehem, Pa., says: "I feel it my duty to write and tell you that I am better than I have been for four years. I used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, one package of Sanative Wash, one box of Liver Pills, and can say that I am perfectly cured.

"Doctors did not help me any. I should have been in my grave by this time if it had not been for your medicine. It was a godsend to me. I was troubled with excessive menstruation, which caused womb trouble, and I was obliged to remain in bed for six weeks. Mrs. Pinkham's medicine was recommended to me, and, after using it a short time, was troubled no more with flooding. I also had severe pain in my kidneys. This, also, I have no more. I shall always recommend the Compound, for it has cured me, and it will cure others. I would like to have you publish this letter." (In such cases the dry form of Compound should be used.)

War with Spain.

A vivid picture of the stirring scenes which would follow a declaration of war with European Powers is given under the head "A Brief History of Our Late War with Spain" in the November Cosmopolitan. The writer has undertaken to apply the knowledge gained from the late war to the conditions prevailing to-day, with modern ideas of bigness and modern methods of organization. He assigns posts in the war to prominent men now before the public, and touches as well upon the political, mechanical and financial problems involved. November Cosmopolitan, price 10 cents.

While discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules recently, in a conversation with a friend, a surgeon who is employed by the Long Island Railroad, and who has a large private practice among people of social and business prominence in Brooklyn, the City of Churches, expressed himself quite forcibly, saying: "I don't wish my name to appear as an indorser of a medicine that is advertised to the public at large, but there are several of my private patients who have not required my services as much this spring as has been usual, and two of them I found had been taking Ripans Tabules, and were said to have been so much benefited by their use that I became very much interested in their cases, because the illness from which they had suffered was of a sort from which a doctor is no more free than other people are. It was dyspepsia, and I knew by my own experience just what that was and how difficult it is to treat it successfully. I finally tried Ripans Tabules myself and, 'by ginger,' they are all the circular pretends them to be. They are a first-class article. I can heartily indorse them. The formula is an old one, but with one or two slight changes that seem to add an effectiveness that was never before to be relied upon with so much certainty."

A new style packet containing TEN RIPANS TABULES is a paper carton (without glass) is now for sale at some drug stores—FOR FIVE CENTS. This low-priced sort is intended for the poor and the economical. One dozen of the five-cent cartons (120 tabules) can be had by mail by sending forty-eight cents to the RIPANS CHEMICAL COMPANY, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York—or a single carton (TEN TABULES) will be sent for five cents.

THE McINTOSH CASE.

The following from the Auburn Gazette is so fully in accord with our own view of the matter that we copy it as showing the general trend of opinion.

The conspiracy trial against W. H. McIntosh so far has developed nothing to show that the defendant had any part or knowlenge in the robbery of our county, but as we have said time and again, many thought that Mr. McIntosh could no have been about the court house as much as he was without some knowledge of what was going on but now with the most thorough sifting not a suspicion has been proven against him.

GIRARD FAMILY THEATER.

One of our exchange in speaking of the Blaisdell & Brown Comedy Company says: They gave a fine performance of "The Soldier's Sweetheart," a play characterized from the well-known novel of the same name.

The main plot is still retained and a number of situations added in order to keep up the interest. The company appear at their best in this production and it is a pity that repetition of it will not be given during the engagement. Mr. Thomas H. Sewell appears to advantage as Teddy O'Malley and displays a side of Irish character that shows a familarity with Charles Lever's works. Charles W. Guthrie as Victor Belmont makes all he can out of the character. In the hands of Mr. Frank Long, the part of Benjamin Locel is well instusted, the actor showing a fitness for "old man" characters. Joseph Canterberry as Thomas, and J. H. Slater as Joseph Sprackling are both good, and the female roles well sustained by Maude Selden and Nellie Long.

The above company will be at Henry's Opera house for one week commencing Nov. 29.

hibit E." These I had given to Miller and then took them back on that note when told they were good good. These orders were also compared with the list of orders on the commissioners record, that had been decided by the Board to be good, though listed by Ernst in "Exhibit E." as "unauthorized orders." These orders were offered in evidence.

Friday's Daily.

Some of the orders he took back from Miller on the note turned out bad. A list of orders the Commissioners had finally decided bad was published in the COURIER and treasurer ordered not to pay them. As to the Alwood order. He had worked for Borst 11 days at $2, making $22. I took this $48 order and paid Borst the balance in cash. When I found the order was bad, I went to Borst, and we examined the stub. I said "That is your handwriting, Frank. It is a grave matter. It is forgery." He said, "yes," I did not tell him to scratch it out, but afterward, Prosecutor Davis when we were going over my list of orders, saw this one, and told me that Alwood's name on that order, was scratched out. This was the name I accused Borst of writing illegally. I was before the grand jury a number of times but was first arrested on this charge, March 24. I sometimes staid in the auditor's office when both Borst and Dills were absent. It would be for a half day or day. Never worked for Coffinberry. Nettie Chamberlain came in while I was working in the auditor's office and wanted to buy $500 in orders. I told her I had just that morning sent her a letter that I had no orders to sell. She said she could put the money back in the bank. I said may be the treasurer has orders to sell. She said she did not know him. I went in with her and Fair said he would see, and took out a lot of orders and said there would be some interest due. He gave me the orders and time they had run, and asked me to compute the interest. I found the amount I was reckoning on was over $500. She said that was too much and some orders were taken out and when it was less than $500, she was satisfied and took them, and I went out. None of these orders were mine. I was in no way interested in them. I did not examine them, I had no interest in them. Had no private conversation with Fair. She was at the tax window and I on the inside about 5 feet away. I never had the orders in my hand. None of them are on my list of orders that I have bought and handled. Judge McClellan came in just as I came out. Witness said he always had entire confidence in Mr. Borst and never dreamed anything was wrong. Always paid 100 cents for orders. There was nothing on any order I had, that looked suspicious. But I found at last I had about $700 in bad orders, mostly ditch orders. When I made the contract with Miller, did not know what orders were good and what were bad, and I arranged to have him take up all I had. I never entered into any agreement with any of the men as to any illegal orders, I never knew anything about it.

Cross-ex. by McBride. I assisted Hague some, when he was auditor and also Albert Robbins a few days when he was in that office. Never helped Coffinberry except on his annual settlements. Helped Borst in same way. Sometimes filled out orders for them. Some of his evidence before the grand jury was read to him, and he thinks he did not remember saying that, but possibly he did. He said he never sold an order to Nettie Chamberlain, but that two or three years ago, he had sold some to her mother. Much of the ground already gone over, was discussed, and then court adjourned to 1:30 p. m.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

McIntosh continued. Was shown several orders that had been changed, and was asked if he did not see the change when he was copying the list into the book. Said he did not. Besides it often happened that some one held the book with the stubs and read them off for him to copy and he then would not see the stubs. Attention called to an order entered in his handwriting in the protest record. I do not know as to that order having been raised. Same said as to other orders of the same kind, the entries. Another shown, he thinks in Jennie Showalter's handwriting, and others in his hand. I never left money in the treasurer's office but have in the auditor's office. Never left money with Coffinberry.

Geo. W. Gordon, editor of the Dispatch was called. He testified to the good repution of McIntosh as to honesty and integrity which he said were good.

Judge McClellan here read a letter from Miss Nettie Chamberlain, in regard to the orders she held, thanking McIntosh for favors, and expressing her high regard for him. It was dated at Waterloo January 6, '97.

At 3:20 after a recess of a few minutes to rest the jury, the pleadings began. It was agreed that each side should have 3 hours to speak, and then the case should go to the jury.

D. R. Best, of Angola, spoke first for the prosecution making an able plea. He was followed by Judge McClellan in a masterly and clear, statement in favor of Mr. McIntosh.

FRIDAY MORNING.

Mr. Bratton made the first speech of the morning session speaking for the prosecution. He made a clear and lucid statement of his side of the case. He believed they had proved Mr. McIntosh's guilt, by showing that he had been often in the offices in which forgeries were done, and had even helped copy records, draw orders, make reports and do other work in those offices. Various circumstances were called up and commented on. At 9:30 he concluded and was at once followed by Judge Best.

Judge Best very clearly laid down the law and the rules that must guide a jury in this case. If there is a doubt in the minds of the jury, the defendant should be given the benefit of the doubt. Then he took up the points of the case, one at time, and step by step, made every transaction clear, showing showing that no connection could be shown between McIntosh and the forgeries of the several officers now being punished for their wrong doing. When McIntosh went to make Borst, through Miller, pay back all the bad orders he held, would he have done this, if he had been in the ring?

Judge Best's whole effort was one of rare eloquence clearness and ability. The entire bar, spectators and many old-time friends listened with the greatest pleasure to the rounded sentences and unanswerable logic, and as point after point was disposed of, it is plain that Judge Best has lost none of the vigor of his earlier years. He closed at 11:30 having occupied two hours. The court adjourned till 1:30.

AFTERNOON.

The only remaining speech was that of Judge McBride, who closed for the state. He is always an earnest, able, and impressive speaker, and being a lawyer of ability, he made a good plea and a good impression in spite of the fact that the great bulk of his hearers believe in the defendant's innocence.

At the close of this speech at 2:40, Judge Adair gave his charge to the jury. It was an able and impartial statment of the case, and a clear setting forth of the law. It did great credit to the head and heart of the Judge who had sat eleven days so patiently and held the balance of justice between the contending parties. At 3:10 p. m. the jury retired.

WORTHY TRIBUTE

To Dr. Wheeler and the Product of His Life's Labor and Research.

Dr. WHEELER'S NERVE VITALIZER

If you seek for a reason for the unquestionable popularity of Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer, you learn that it is due wholly to the merit of the preparation in making sick nerves strong and vigorous and through them the organs active and healthy.

It has reached the pinnacle of success in the science of medicine and is without a rival. This fact is proven by the thousands who have regained health by it after thorough tests, and failures of other Nervines, Compounds and Sarsaparillas

No claim is made for Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer that is not accompanied by convincing evidence. In this case Geo. S. Beck, River Styx, O., furnishes the proof. He says: "Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer is certainly a wonderful remedy. Less than one bottle cured my wife of sleeplessness and nervousness of a very serious nature. I, myself, had a very uncomfortable time from the effect of LaGripp, which was an aggravating nervous trouble. Sometimes I felt as if I would rather be dead than alive to endure it. One bottle of Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer cured me and I gained twenty-five pounds in a very short time. I could add several pages to this stating the merits of the remedy from my own observation. I would not be without it in my house if possible to get it."

It is a specific for sick nerves.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

The Numbers of Harper's Weekly during November will contain letters from Tappan Adney, the Weekly's correspondent to the Klondike; an account of the recent fleet manœuvres, entitled "With the North Atlantic Squadron," with four full-page illustrations, by R. Howells will also resume his department of "Life and Letters."

VOLUNTARY TESTIMONY.

I feel that money is not enough to pay Dr. Nusbaum for the good he has done me. I have been afflicted with catarrh and a growth in the nostrils for 34 years. He has taken it out and given me great relief. I heartily recommend him for your benefit who are troubled with similar complaints. I write this without the Doctor's knowledge or request.

SUICIDE.

SPECIAL TO COURIER.

ANGOLA, IND., Nov. 11, 1897.—Wm. F. Williamson, one of Angola's young men, committed suicide in a hotel at LaGrange, Ind., this morning by shooting himself in the right temple with a revolver. He had just started out to travel for the Grand Rapids Bicycle Co. He clerked in the hardware store of E. A. Carver in Angola for 12 years, but was discharged last spring, since which time he has been out of work and very despondent at times. He leaves a wife and two bright little children. He was the son-in-law of Landlord Kemery, of the Russell house His remains will be brought here this afternoon for burial.

NOT ALWAYS UNDERSTOOD

A fact often overlooked, or not always understood, is that women suffer a much from distressing kidney and bladder troubles as the men. The womb is situated back of and very close to the bladder, and for that reason any distress, disease or inconvenience manifested in the kidneys, back, bladder or urinary passage is often, by mistake, attributed to female weakness or womb trouble of some sort.

The error is easily made and may be as easily avoided by setting urine aside for twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling is evidence that your kidneys and bladder need doctoring. If you have pain or dull aching in the back, pass water to frequently, or scanty supply, with smarting or burning, these are also convincing proofs of kidney trouble If you have doctored without benefit, try Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy. The mild and extraordinary effect will surprise you. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures. If you take a medicine you should take the best. At druggists fifty cents and one dollar. You may have a sample bottle and pamphlet, both sent free by mail. Mention AUBURN COURIER and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. A BEE HUNT.

Judge Best, Clerk Long, Sheriff Stroh, D. A. Garwood, W. H. McIntosh and Deputy Platter went out to Stroh's farm this morning to cut a bee tree. It was a big oak 4 feet through, but they got 25 pounds of honey, and Clerk Long came near getting under the falling tree. It possibly reminded the Judge of fox hunting here, years ago.

TRIBUTE TO THE PARLOR.

(Lagrnge Call)

Reformation day and the anniversary of Rev. Gaff's two years' pastorate on LaGrange charge occurred last Sabbath. In the morning Rev. L. S. Keyser preached a very able and instructive sermon, subject: "Luther."

At 2 p. m. the church was again filled with Lutherans to celebrate the anniversary. The roll was called and fully 200 answered to their names.

The statistical reports were very flattering. During the two years over $1,800 have been raised by this church for current expenses and benevolences, besides wiping out an ugly debt, except the bringing up of this year's salary, which will be due Saturday. It is not necessary to say it will provided for.

The increase in membership has been 116; many of them being heads of families, and from among our most influedtial men. Rev. Gaff began work with 149, and now has 265 members in his church. This shows the value of earnest, quiet work without much noise.

The Endeavor young people presented their pastor a fine Bible at the C. E. service, which was highly appreciated by the recipient. Rev. Keyser preached a very interesting sermon on "Contentment" in the evening.

The future of this church is very promising. Perfect peace and harmony exist among the members and it must succeed.

A Peerless Liniment.

As a pain destroyer and cure for rheumatism, Salvation Oil is the peer of all liniments. Mr. Wm. H. I used Salvation Oil and soon was up and about. As a pain destroyer this liniment has no equal." Salvation Oil is sold everywhere for 25 cents. Try it and be convinced.

POSTAL BANKS IN CAMPAIGNS

(Chicago Record.)

In the 6th Illinois district a campaign for congressman is in progress to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Congressman Cooke. The sentiment for postal savings banks is so strong in Chicago that both party platforms pledge the candidates to work for them if elected. In a recent speech Henry S. Boutell, the republican candidate, said:

"The people demand that congress at its next session shall provide for the establishment of postal savings banks under the control of the postoffice department, and a measure looking to this end would have my hearty support. Postal savings banks have given satisfaction to the people whenever they have been tried. Their existence in all parts of the country is a constant invitaion to thrift and economy, and whenever thrift and economy prevail poverty, ignorance and crime disappear. The establishment of such a system of agencies for the reception of the smallest deposits would be in exact accordance with the principle which should characterize all our legistation—namely, the protection of the weakest. If we protect the weakest, we protect all."

CAPT. N. L. HANSEN, CHAS. REICHARDT, E. T. MILLIGAN.

To those desiring to secure a share in the wealth of the wonderful Gold Fields of Alaska and the Klondike, the Merchant's Alaska Mining Company offers an unequaled opportunity.

WHILE all cannot go to Alaska, there are many who realize the opportunities that have been opened up there, and would make an investment if they could be assured that their money would be honestly handled, and that they would receive their proper share of the profits.

The MERCHANT'S ALASKA MINING COMPANY offers such an investment. It is a reliable, honest enterprise, directed by responsible men of business standing and character. It has associated with it mutually the firm of Atkins & Milligan, Mining Engineers and Operators, whose long experience and success in the mining business is a guarantee of the investments of its funds in the most renumerative manner, and whose reputation and business standing among mining circles is second to none. Their thorough acquaintance with the Northwest Mining Regions enables them to grasp opportunities others would overlook, and keep out of those ventures their experience has shown to be unsafe. The engineers and prospectors who will go to Alaska for the Company will be men of reputation for honesty and capability.

What the Company Will Do.

The lines upon which this Company will operate are novel in many particulars, and particularly adapted to the conditions in Alaska, and are sure to acquire for the Company large interests and reap immense profits for the stockholders.

First.

It will prospect and locate mines in mining claims through agents and prospectors, and by grubstaking reliable miners to stake and operate claims on shares.

Second:

It will develop, operate, buy and sell mines and mining property.

Third:

It will acquire interests in claims already staked out and partly developed, whose owners are out of supplies and money, and who are unable to proceed with work, but who have good claims; by advancing money, supplies and labor to such owners in consideration of an interest in their property.

Fourth:

It will conduct a general mining and mercantile business in Alaska, British Columbia, Northwest Territory, the United States and elsewhere in accordance with the terms of this charters, as opportunities may present

The Company is now the owner of the "CELTIC" Mineral Claim located in the famous Big Bend District in the rich Kootenay Country, British Columbia. Late reports from this property give promise of rich developments. The camp in which it is located is a thriving one, rapidly building up. The assay on this property shows an average of from $10 to $15 per ton in gold. Every stockholder in this Company becomes on receipt of his stock a part owner in this property in addition to the interests he will acquire in every investment of the company in Alaska. This property will not be developed at present, all the effo ts of the Company being directed towards Alaska, the land of such wonderful opportunities.

A limited amout of the stock of the company is for sale at Fifty Cents per share. The stock at this figure is very low, and should advance in price at an early date. Subscriptions should be made at once to secure it at that figure. The Directors reserve the right to advance the price of stock or withdraw the same from the market without notice

Almost a Temperance Town.

ANGOLA, IND., Nov. 19,1897.

SPECIAL TO THE COURIER.

Hon. S. E. Nicholson, author of the Nicholson liquor law, spoke here last evening on "Christian Citizenship." The M. E. church was crowded from choir box to gallery, with both annexes filled with an enthusiastic audience. Angola is the only town in Steuben county that has a saloon, and the speaker's words were so convincing against the liquor traffic that steps were at once taken to blot out the saloons of Angola. Never before in the history of Steuben county was the interest of the temperance question so manifest as at present.

PROBABLY TRUE

The Dispatch says that Judge McBride was allowed $250 for coming up from Indianapolis to aid three other lawyers to prosecute an imaginary case against W. H. McIntosh. It also says $250 was allowed Bratton and Best, for the same services. Then the county has to pay the salary of the prosecuting attorney proper, though we do not remember that he said a word in the eleven days. We shall look into this matter and if it is true, we propose to denounce it as it deserves.

A TALE OF TWO CHAIRS.

Elijah on his Lizzie calls
When chores are done and evening falls.
Elijah's bashful, Lizzie's shy,
But then her parents sit near by.
"Good night, Elijah—Liz, good night,"
And paw and maw, by candle light,
Go off to bed, and leave to bliss
Their daughter, and her beau, with chairs arranged like this

Elijah 'lows "This weather'll do
Fur hayin'," Lizzie thinks so too.
"Went coonin' 'long with John last night."
"Get any coons?" "No moon wa'nt bright."
And so they court; naught goes amiss,
And Lige and Liz have aimed respective chairs like this:

With Spartan will you do or die
Elijah seems to grow less shy,
And chairs become bewitched, I wis;
They hitch and hitch and hitch until they stand like this:

"D'you like me Liz?" "Oh, Lige," they kiss.
Then round gets in round, and chairs resemble this:

THE CORNER STONE LAYING.

This was a big affair, even for a town like Ft. Wayne. All the people there took a pride in it, and as usual, the newspapers more than any others. The Journal was especially industrious in its efforts to get up an interest in the occion and make it a success. Its issue of that day, Nov. 17, is a monster and must have cost the Journal a pretty sum. They had an illustration of the new court house which shows it to be an immense building, and fine specimen of arctitecture. The picture is frame a drawing by Tolan, the Fort Wayne, so that the entire structure is the result of Fort Wayne plans and work. The Journal is to be congratulated of its enterprise. And it should not be omitted to mention the many pictures of prominent Ft. Wayne men, of the past and preeent, including those of A. P. Edgerton and J. K. Edgerton, F. P. Randall, M. S. Robison, Jesse L Williams, Oscar, A. Simon, Louis Peltier, Hugh McCulloch, Samuel Hanna, Wm. Fleming, Mayor Scherer, Charles McCullough, Col. D. N. Foster, Hon. J. M. Robinson, R. C. Bell, J. M. Barrett, C. L. Centliver; L. J. Robilyea, John Orff, Judge Ed. O'Rourke, C. M. Dawson, Col. R. S. Robertson, Judge John Morris, W. P. Breen, Wm. Rock hill, Allen Hamilon, Francis Comparet, John H. Bass, R. T. McDonald, Father Benoit, the founder of the Catholic church interests in the city and others. This edition of the Journal will be a valuable one for the people of that city and Allen county to file away as a matter of history.

GOOD IDEA

Postmaster Forkner is going to put in an improvement that will please many patrons. He is having another window made from which to sell postage stamps, and after this week will have a girl employed whose duty will be to sell stamps. no matter what work is going on inside. Heretofore, it has often caused a tedious wait for stamps, if one called for them at a time mail was being distributed inside, or even when mail was being handed out at the general delivery window. In most cities the size of Auburn they have this extra window and the mail business of our town has now reached a point at which we need it. We are glad to note the improvement.

Ex-Postmaster Brandon has closed his work in the postoffice and today subscribed for the COURIER, that he may keep posted on the news of the town and county. He will divote his attention to his farm now.

ABOUT PENSIONS.

After the Revolutionary War, the first pensions were granted by federal judges, but after the war of 1812, the list suddenly became so great that a separate buaeau was provided for it. The first list of pensioners was published in 1820 and contained 16,163 names drawing $3,208,376 a year, the lowest on the list being $2 a month and the highest $45 a month. The list grew smaller till 1860. Then increased till 1893 it was highest being 161 million dollars, Ohio has the largest list of any state, 103,471. Indiana is fifth having 68,213, and receives 10½ millions annually. The smallest number is 26 for Alaska. NERVY BURGLARS

This Time Break Into the Freight House

OF THE LAKE SHORE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Car Opened at the Junction. Boy's Caught in Snell's Grocery.

Monday's Daily.

There was all kinds of robbery going on in Auburn last night. The freight house at the Lake Shore depot was entered and after a careful search they left without molesting anything. An entrance was effected by raising one of the windows. The suppositition is that the same gang broke into the box car at the Junction. Freight was scattered in every direction. Two shotguns and a pair of socks. Several cases of shoes belonging to A. N. Wilson and R. Shull, were opened but none of the goods are missing. Some boxes for Hicksville parties were also opened and the contents scattered promiscuously. This stock consisted chiefly of small trinkets, safety pins, etc., and it is said that Agent Burns was on his knees all forenoon, gathering up these goods. As yet there is no clew to the robbers.

MOST DARING ATTENPT.

For several weeks past it has been noticed that strange things had happened in Chas. Snell's grocery at night. The small amount of change left in the money drawer had been tamperered with and in some instances it had all been taken. Saturday an investigation of all the doors and windows was made and it was found that the lock on one window was not securely fastened and the window could be let down from the top easily. Mr. Snell and his clerk, Ollie Clay then placed a stick in the window and out side scattered ashes all around and by this method they discovered that some one had again made the attempt to enter the store. They said nothing but Sunday removed the stick from the window and Sunday night Ollie Clay with Marshal Potter, watched for the thieves. They went up stairs and looked out of the window of the room formerly occupied by Steele & Son. Soon three boys appeased, crawled up to the window and entered the store. Marsnal Potter went down and watched the window while Bill Stimely and Ollie Clay unlocked the door and enter the store from the front. Two of them made their escape through the window and landed safely in the Marshal's arms. They were the two Crum boys who live in Gas addition and the third made his escape through the front door which was left open by Mr. Stimely and Mr. Clay. Deputy Sheriff Platter was called up and they were placed in jail. They said the other boy's name was Graves and also from Gas addition. After a time Deputy Prosecutor Welsheimer was found and a warrant sworn out for the arrest of young Graves. None of the lads are over 15 years old and they confessed to having entered the store at various times during the past. They have secured in all over $15 besides tobacco and cigars.

DOINGS OF THE DAY.

SUMMARY OF THE NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Eventful Happenings in Every Known Hemisphere—Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Politics, Religion, Commerce and Crops, Sandwiched with Minor Affairs.

OLD LONDON SCORCHED.

Britain's Capitol Devastated by a Disastrous Blaze.

London special: A most disastrous fire started in a large block eastward of Alderagate street, between that and Red Cross street, at 1 o'clock Friday afternoon. There was a strong wind. Highly inflammable stocks of Christmas fancy goods and flimsy dress materials of all descriptions filled every floor of six buildings in the old street. The conflagration gained headway soon beyond a possibility of being checked by the engines on the spot. For four and one-half hours the flames had their own way, and only after a hundred engines worked for hours was the fire gotten under control.

The district ravaged includes part of Australian avenue, Paul's Alley, Cripple Gate churchyard, Wood Streets Square, Monkwell street, Nicholl Square and Fore street. It is officially reported that one hundred and fifty warehouses were gutted. Later estimates of damages done place the amount at about $25,000,000. The area of the fire is at least 100,000 square yards.

FRANTZ ELECTROCUTED.

Bessie Little's Murderer Pays the Penalty of His Crime.

Albert J. Frantz, the murderer of Bessie Little of Dayton, was electrocuted in the annex of the Ohio Penitentiary at 12:22 Friday morning. He took his place in the chair at 12:18, without an apparent tremor. The officials were slow in fastening the straps and adjusting the electrodes The first shock did not cause death, and the current was applied again three times before his life was pronounced extinct at 12:22. The crime for which Frantz paid the penalty was the murder on August 27, 1896, of Bessie Little, a young girl whom he betrayed. Her body was thrown into the still water of the river, where it was found by E. L. Harper, Jr., while bathing. The unraveling of the crime and the trial furnished one of the most exciting chapters in the criminal history of Ohio.

Indian Girls Resort to Arson.

Fannie Eagle Horn and Eliza Flander, Indian girls, have been arrested on complaint of Superintendent Pratt of the Indian School at Carlisle, Pa., and lodged in jail on the charge of arson. A mysterious fire broke out in the girls' quarters of the school recently, but was extinguished before much damage had been done. It was afterward learned that the two girls, who were pupils, had started the fire with the intention of burning down the school because they had been refused permission to go home.

FOR NATIONAL UNIVERSITY.

Patriotic Women Planning to Carry Out Washington's Project.

The oft-agitated question of establishing in the city of Washington a great national university on the lines suggested by President Washington has taken definite form, and a number of representative American women have taken hold of the project with a determination to push it to a successful conclusion if possible. They have started out in a practical manner by seeking to raise the first $250,000 necessary for the erection of an administration building to form the nucleus of the university, and hope to be able to lay the corner stone Feb. 22, 1899. Their purpose in the interim is to urge the matter continuously on the attention of women all over the country. They intend likewise to interest all the school children in the work. As a first step for awakening interest in the undertaking they will assemble in convention in Washington Dec. 14 to decide on ways and means for arousing public sentiment. Many prominent Eastern ladies are active in the project.

BLIZZARD CAUSES A WRECK.

Blinding Snowstorm Rages in Nebraska—Collision Near Chadron.

There has been a blinding snow storm in Nebraska. As a result of the inability of engineers to see ten feet ahead of their engines the east-bound express and a freight on the Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley Railroad collided seven miles east of Chadron. The engineers and firemen all jumped. Engineer Charles Connors of the freight was seriously injured. Engineer Cooley of the passenger train fell down a sixty-foot embankment, but escaped with slight injuries. The passengers were badly shaken up, but none hurt. The two engines are wedged together and the baggage and mail cars are badly wrecked.

Proposed to Extend Benefits of the Agricultural Department to Farmers' Wives.

Secretary Wilson proposes to extend the benefits of the Agricultural Department to the farmers' wives and daughters. He claims that what has been done for the boys by agricultural colleges can be done for the girls in schools which will teach them the handicraft of the needle and other domestic sciences. The department can help them by its investigations on food products.

Envoy Insulted President.

The threatened rupture between Germany and Hayti has been amicably settled, thanks to the mediation of United States Minister W. F. Powell, though it is still understood that Germany intends to make a naval demonstration in Haytian waters. The German version of the trouble has already been published. Following is the Haytian side: The dispute arose out of the imprisonment of Emile Lueders. Up to a short time ago Lueders was a Haytian citizen, but having been concerned in various duels, he deemed it wise to change his nationality and registered his name at the German consulate. For an assault upon a cab driver, Lueders was sentenced to one month's imprisonment. He appealed and the sentence was altered, he being sentenced to one year's seclusion and a fine of 500 francs. A further appeal was pending when the German minister interfered without invitation, and, it is claimed, forced his way into the private apartments of Tiresias Simon Sam, president of the Haytian republic, and in a rude and peremptory manner demanded the release of Lueders, apologies and indemnities. Naturally the president resented the insult and firmly but politely referred Count Schwerin, who is charge d'affaires of the German empire at Port au Prince, to the minister for foreign affairs. The matter thus came before the diplomatic departments of the governments, and was settled.

Queer Legal Complication Arises.

An interesting legal question is presented by the lynching of three of the Spicer murderers at Williamsport, N. D. Two of the men, Holytrack and Ireland, were the State's witnesses, and without their testimony the State has no case against the two surviving murderers. There is, therefore, now no possibility of convicting them before any tribunal, for the reason that the State's witnesses, self-confessed accomplices of the murderer, are dead.

Deny Having Confessed.

A special from Lamar, Mo., reads as follows: Sheriff Livingstone and Marshal Rice went to Boston, Mo., with a warrant for W. L. Simpson and William Kaderly, charging them with aiding and hiring the parties who assaulted Mrs. Jacob Rock one night recently. On the way to this city at night their carriage was stopped about six miles south by a mob of about thirty masked and armed men. The officers were disarmed and taken to a near by corn field by members of the mob, while the others blindfolded the prisoners, put a rope around their necks and strung them up to a tree. They were let down and in a few seconds pulled up again. This was repeated till the prisoners were too weak to stand, when they were called on by the mob for a statement as to the crime and the parties implicated. Kaderly admitted writing a letter to Harry Monkstar, employing him to commit the crime, for $25. Simpson admitted paying the money in gold to Monkstar. Officers and prisoners were then put in the carriage and ordered to drive to the county jail, which they did. The prisoners now deny having made a confession.

SULTAN ON HIS KNEES.

Promises to Give Austria Complete Satisfaction and Indemnification.

A special dispatch from Vienna to London says that a telegram has been received there from Baron de Calice, the Austrian ambassador at Constantinople, saying that the sultan had declared his willingness to give Austria full satisfaction for the Messina incident and in regard to the disputes in connection with the Oriental railroad growing out of the transportation of Turkish troops during the recent war between Turkey and Greece. A special dispatch from Constantinople, confirming the special dispatch from Vienna, adds that the vali of Adana and Mutossariff of Messina have been deposed, says that the victim of the outrage, Herr Brazzafelli, will be indemnified, and asserts that the sultan has consented to pay the claims of the Oriental railroad, which is operated by an Austrian company, paying the $1,250,000, being the balance due the company for the conveyance of Turkish troops during the recent war with Greece.

PLANNING BOOMER MOVEMENT.

Scheme to Force Opening of the Wichita Reservation.

George M. Hughes of Anadarko, I. T., has arrived in Wichita, Kan., on a trip to secure 20,000 colonists for the Wichita country to settle in and about the Wichita Mountains before Jan. 7 and by sheer persistency and force of numbers compel Congress to open the country to settlement. Hughes is one of twenty men who are now making a systematic canvass in Oklahoma, Kansas and Arkansas for "boomers" to locate in the new country. The plan is to inaugurate a promiscuous immigration into the Indian country at once and begin to hunt for gold, demanding of Congress, at the same time, the opening of the Wichita reservation. The movement promises to surpass the famous colony expedition into Oklahoma by Captain Payne.

HAS A PLAN FOR ALASKA.

Senator Perkins Favors Dividing It Into Districts with Commissioners in Charge.

Senator Perkins of California declares that he is opposed to the granting of a territorial form of government to Alaska at present. When Congress convenes he proposes to introduce a joint resolution providing for the appointment of a commission to prepare civil and criminal codes for the government of Alaska. The Senator favors the plan of Louis Sloss, to divide Alaska into convenient districts, each to have a United States commissioner, empowered to enforce the laws.

A panic was caused in St. Xavier school in Cincinnati by the upsetting of a stove. GRAIN CROPS ABROAD

RUSSIAN WHEAT YIELD GREATLY REDUCED.

All Accounts Agree that There Is a Deficit, but Much Difference of Opinion Exists as to the Amount of the Shortage.

Condition of Foreign Crops.

The Agricultural Department, in its monthly review of the foreign crop situation, devotes much attention to the grain crop of Russia, especially wheat, on account of its magnitude as a factor in the European supply. The review says that all accounts agree in representing the wheat crop as deficient, but much difference of opinion exists as to the extent of the deficiency. After quoting many dispatches painting the crop situation in various provinces in very black colors, and the statement of the American consul at Odessa that this year's crop has proved a failure, the review calls attention to the fact that since harvest Russia has exported grain "very freely." The report continues:

"The exports of wheat from Aug. 1 to Oct. 23 amounted to 4,152,840 quarters, against 2,855,040 quarters, and 3,383,780 quarters during the corresponding period in 1896 and 1895 respectively. Those very large exports have led commercial papers to withhold their credence from the more pessimistic of the reports which have been published. That the crop was deficient was admitted, but that the failure was so serious as such reports implied few of the grain dealers of western Europe believe.

"Recently, however, some change of attitude is becoming apparent. Stocks in the ports are not increasing in the manner usual for this time of year, and the opinion is freely expressed that after this month Russia can be relied on for only very moderate shipments.

"It is generally understood that Russia had large stocks of wheat left over from the crops of the preceding year, and this fact, coupled with the good prices which have prevailed, may account for the large exports which have taken place, even though the crop failure in large parts of Russia has been extremely serious."

The review says the estimates of the Russian crop are so uncertain that their reproduction would be of doubtful utility. The preliminary official figures for France show a reduction of 26 per cent below 1896 and 17 per cent below the average for ten years. As for five years France and Russia produced 26 per cent of the world's crop, the review says a heavy shortage in both countries would, therefore, be sufficient in itself to produce a very sensible effect on the world's supply, independent of the short crops in Austria-Hungary, the Danubian and Balkan countries and elsewhere, and the shortness of the last crop in India, Australia and Argentina.

The various estimates for Austria-Hungary are more or less conflicting, but there is no doubt as to there being a heavy deficit in the wheat crop. The wheat crop of the United Kingdom is estimated a little short of 51,000,000 bushels. The preliminary estimate of the Italian wheat crop makes it 85,131,000 bushels, against 144,722,700 bushels last year. The Roumanian wheat crop is estimated at 37,134,720 bushels. The Bulgarian wheat crop is estimated at 40 per cent, rye at 35 to 40 per cent, and barley at 25 per cent less than last year. The wheat crop of Turkey has been estimated at 50,800,000 imperial bushels.

As regards crops now growing in the southern hemisphere, the news continues to be favorable on the whole. In Argentina drought, which for a time in some provinces threatened serious injury, seems to have been generally broken, and danger of any serious loss from such a source seems now, in the advanced state of the crop, to have passed. The Indian wheat crop has been sown under favorable conditions, and the same is in general true of the winter grain crops of Europe, and both in India and in Europe the weather seems, in the main, to have been very favorable to the growth of the seed.

FEELING AKIN TO PANIC.

Dreyfus Case Developments Create Fear in High Circles.

Paris is greatly agitated over the Dreyfus case. The insinuations that high officials are involved in the conspiracy, of which Captain Dreyfus is a victim, has caused almost a panic in Government and society circles.

Count Esterhazy, who, strange to say, when the finger of suspicion pointed at him, rushed at once into print to defend his reputation, has not created an impression in his favor, and his new charge, that he possesses papers inimical to Dreyfus, leads people to ask why the count did not make them public before the charge of treachery to the Government had been preferred against himself.

Racial and creed bitterness has been excited by the controversy, and the animosity toward Germany is intensified. The recent withdrawal of the German military attaches has also tended to arouse the dormant chauvinism in the breasts of Parisians.

There is an inclination toward the belief among the socialists and radicals that secrets of state are held lightly by certain officials and understrappers in Gen. Billot's department and also in that of M. Hanotaux. It is likely that the affair will yet lead to a sensational interpellation and debate in parliament. Investigation of the charge affecting high officers has already been secretly begun in the war office by Gen. Billot.

DIE FROM HUNGER.

Frightful Mortality Among the Reconcentrados in Cuba.

It appears now that nearly 75 per cent of the 400,000 helpless women, children and non-combatants in Cuba affected by former Captain General Weyler's policy are dead. Despite the orders issued by Gen. Blanco to feed the starving, the daily mortality of the remaining "reconcentrados" is frightful.

The rabid Spaniards, who believe that only by extermination of the race can the Cuban war be won, openly challenge the good faith of Gen. Blanco's statements as to his intention to feed and find work for those whom Gen. Weyler has not killed.

They jubilantly claim that the new captain general is enforcing the barbarous "concentration" of the country people exactly as his predecessor did. The Havana press no longer prints the news from the small towns. In one of the last articles upon the hunger situation it was called "one of the most awful spectacles ever presented to humanity."

Girls for Gold Fields.

Charles Carrington of Seattle, Wash., has created no little stir among the young women of Auburn, N. Y., during the last week. Carrington announced his business there to be the selection of 300 healthy women whom he proposes to take to Alaska in the spring for the purpose of equalizing the disparity between the male and female population that it is supposed will exist in the gold regions next season. The matrimonial agent is an ex-miner and proposes to pay the expenses of the party, getting his remuneration out of the sums that will be paid for wives on his arrival.

FEW BIRTHS REPORTED.

State Board of Health Unable to Get Satisfactory Statistics.

For the year ending Oct. 31, 1897, there was reported to the State Board of Health by the county boards of health:

Total number of deaths	16,244
Total number of births	32,274
Total number of marriages	20,419

According to the reports the mortality of the following diseases was:

Diphtheria	943
Pulmonary phthisis	1,974
Pneumonia	1,181
Scarlet fever	55
Typhoid fever	635
Measles	92

"Counting the population of Indiana at 2,250,000, the death rate from the above reported figures would be 7.21 per 1,000 of population, a figure certainly one-half too low, for the rate cannot be less than 15 per 1,000, more likely 17 or 18 per cent," says the report. "Even the number of births and marriages are not accurate, the former being probably one-tenth greater than reported, and the deficiency in the latter is unknown. The question, Why is this so? is most pertinent. One county, Parke, has made no report for the year, and for the last quarter no reports have been received from Lake, Scott and Warren counties.

"The incompleteness of the statistics is increased by the further fact that many physicians refuse or neglect to report deaths and cases of contagious diseases to the county or other health officers.

"In regard to the reported figures, if we accept the estimate that the reports are deficient by 50 per cent, the corrected figures would be:

Total deaths	32,488
Diphtheria deaths	1,886
Consumption deaths	3,948
Pneumonia deaths	2,362
Scarlet fever deaths	110
Typhoid fever deaths	1,310
Measles	184

"In 1890 the United States census enumerators reported 24,180 deaths as having occurred in Indiana. The population of the State at the same census was reported as 2,192,404. This gives a death rate of 11.03 per 1,000, which was unquestionably below the truth. In 1880 the census enumerators reported 31,213 deaths, or 15.78 per 1,000 of population. The average death rate for the whole United States in 1880 was 18 per 1,000. It is impossible from Indiana's vital statistics to calculate the true death rate, and the expectation of life at each age in each sex. We do know, however, when certain diseases have prevailed, but no comparison can be made between different localities in this regard. Accepting the deaths from consumption to be 3,948, twice the number actually reported, then out of every 1,000 deaths in Indiana during the year ending Oct. 31, 1897, 121 are to be attributed to this disease. The corresponding figure in the whole United States in 1890 was 121.5. It therefore appears that as far as this disease is concerned we are no worse off than other States. The same method of calculation applied to typhoid fever shows 40.3 deaths out of every 1,000 deaths. The corresponding figure for the whole United States in 1890 was 32.2. This difference does not speak well for Indiana, for typhoid fever is a filth disease. A proper up-to-date health law is badly needed."

A Delicious Oyster Omelet.

For an oyster omelet purchase twenty-five nice fat oysters, then put them into a saucepan, stand over a moderate fire and cook slowly until the gills are thoroughly curled; drain, saving the liquor. Put a tablespoonful of butter and one of flour in a saucepan; measure the liquor; add sufficient milk to make a half pint. Stir until boiling; add a teaspoonful of salt, a dash of pepper, and the oysters. Stand over hot water while you make a plain omelet, using six eggs with the proper proportion of water and butter. Turn the omelet on to a good-sized hot meat-dish, and pour upon it the oyster sauce and serve at once.—Mrs. S. T. Rorer, in Ladies' Home Journal.

Mrs. Rorer's Welsh Rarebit Receipt.

Mrs. S. T. Rorer, in the Ladies' Home Journal, gives this receipt for making Welsh rarebit: "Put into a saucepan a tablespoonful of tomato ketchup, a teaspoonful of Worcestershire sauce and one pound of chopped soft American cheese; add half a teaspoonful of salt, a dash of red pepper and a gill of water. Stand this over the fire, stir and beat rapidly until smooth. Pour at once over toasted bread and serve."

CRADLE OF A FAMOUS FAMILY.

The Celebrated Harrison Homestead Down in Old Virginia.

The Berkeley home of the Harrison family of Virginia is one of the interesting landmarks of the nation. It has been a birthplace of a governor of Virginia and signer of the Declaration of Independence; of a revolutionary general and of a President of the United States. The estate is mentioned in colonial annals as long ago as 1622, when it was the scene of a terrible Indian massacre. It was then owned by a prominent settler, George Thorpe, who was killed during the uprising by an Indian whom he had befriended. Berkeley soon afterward passed into the hands of Benjamin Harrison. His descendants lived there until within the last twenty-five years, during which time, we are told, the place never lacked an inmate of the name of Benjamin Harrison.

Berkeley is an unpretending building to have been the home of so many great men. The house is of brick, two stories and a half high, with a quaint sloping roof and dormer windows. A modern porch has been added to two sides of the structure in recent years. To one room in Berkeley pertains especial interest. When the hero of Tippecanoe, Gen. William Henry Harrison, was elected to the Presidency he left his Ohio home and came to his birthplace, Berkeley, to write his inaugural address "in his mother's room."

During the civil war Berkeley was known in the North as Harrison's Landing. It was occupied by Gen. McClellan after his "change of base," July, 1862, and was the place to which he retreated and fortified himself after the battle of Malvern Hill, the last of the seven days' battles.

GO-WAN-GO MOHAWK.

The Noted American Indian Actress Who Has Won Distinction Abroad.

Go-Wan-go Mohawk, says a writer in the Puritan, is an American Indian woman who has recently attracted attention on the English stage. She is a daughter of the chief Ga-ne-qua, known to Americans as Dr. Allen Mohawk. She was born at Gowanda, N. Y., on the Cattaraugus reservation, is a descendant of the old and famous chief Red Jacket, and belongs to the Six Nations. That she should have won success in a play of her own creation, especially in conservative England, is a matter of comment even in these days of progressive women.

When Miss Mohawk was last in New York, she headed a great parade of Tammany braves which occurred there some six years ago. Off the stage she is quite as interesting as upon it. She was educated at a girls' seminary at Painesville, Ohio, and besides speaking English fluently she knows something of French and German. Physically she is remarkable. Graceful as the deer of her own forests, she possesses strength which in a woman is phenomenal. She is a splendid horsewoman, has won several prizes with the rifle and is a dead shot with the bow and arrow. Most remarkable of all, Miss Mohawk makes all her own gowns. She is the wife of a Mr. Charles, a former officer in the United States army.

Domestic Scene in 1950.

"Say, pa," inquired little Johnny Sprockett, "what is a pedestrian?"

"A pedestrian?" repeated Mr. Sprockett, scratching his head in a thoughtful manner. "Pe-des-tri-an," he mused. "Let me see! Oh, yes, of course. Why, that is what they used to call people when they walked."—Ohio State Journal.

Worked Both Ways.

Author—This is an unappreciative world. Why, if I had written what Faddest has written I wouldn't be famous.

Critic—That may be true, and if Faddest had written the stuff you write he wouldn't be famous, either.

A Progressive Woman.

Ryder—What makes you think so?

Walker—Last Sunday when she returned from church she repeated the text, and never said a word about what the other women had on.

INDIANA INCIDENTS.

RECORD OF EVENTS OF THE PAST WEEK.

Coal Miners Crushed by Falling Rock—Scipio Youth Kills His Father—How Edwards Come to His Death—Indianapolis Man Dies in Church.

Two Coal Miners Killed.

An accident occurred in a mine of the Brazil Block Coal Company, at Perth, in which August Vanso and Dominick Ulick, two miners, were killed while at work. The men were buried under over ten tons of falling slate, and their bodies were crushed to a shapeless mass.

Duel to Death.

William Edwards, formerly of Sheboygan, Wis., was found at the Halfway house, near South Bend, July 22 in a dying condition from the effects of a bullet wound in his chest. He died a week later after conflicting stories as to his fatal wound. It is now claimed that Edwards died from a wound received in a duel with a fellow freight robber with whom he had quarreled.

Bank Failures Nearly Caused Riots.

Riots were started in Leavenworth, Marengo and English by the failure of the banks in each city. The mobs that gathered in front of the bank buildings were made up of merchants and farmers who discovered that they had been robbed. It is understood there is not enough money in sight to pay rent. All three banks were under the control of R. H. Willett.

Suicide in a Church.

With words of gospel song ringing in his ears, Charles M. Spencer drew a revolver in the Methodist Episcopal Church at Westville and without a word of warning sent a bullet crashing through his brain. Not a word escaped his lips, and the only motive assigned for the deed is despondency resulting from financial troubles.

Dies Suddenly in Church.

J. M. Tilford, 88 years old, died in his pew in the Irvington Christian Church in Indianapolis. The preacher had just announced the opening hymn, when the old man was seen to fall forward. He was at one time the owner of the Indianapolis Journal, and was formerly prominent in State affairs.

Boy Kills His Father.

Charles Keifer, aged 19, shot and instantly killed his father, aged 55, at Scipio. The son was cleaning a shotgun, when a quarrel ensued, caused by the father accusing the son of stealing some wood. This so enraged the son he raised the gun and fired. He gave himself up.

All Over the State.

Attica has been granted free mail delivery.

The law on quail in Indiana has expired. Birds are reported plentiful.

Adam Cox, a wealthy LaGrange farmer, committed suicide by hanging.

Elwood has taken the first steps toward holding a gas belt exposition next fall.

Judge Vaughn of the Blackford Circuit Court has decided that the city of Montpelier cannot sell its public square.

W. C. McKeller, manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company at Kendallville, committed suicide by shooting.

W. H. McIntosh of Butler, charged with having defrauded De Kalb County out of $50,000, has been found not guilty.

A tank containing 250 barrels of oil at the Harry Carrell oil well, a mile and a half west of Hartford City, exploded. No one was hurt.

The forging departments of the Buckeye Manufacturing Company at Anderson were destroyed by fire. The loss amounts to $20,000.

W. T. Wicker, a farmer, living near Shelbyville, was fatally scalded by falling into a barrel of boiling water while engaged in butchering hogs.

The new Presbyterian Church of Elwood was damaged by fire, the heaters becoming overheated. Loss, $1,000; fully covered by $1,500 insurance.

At Brazil, the wife of "Denver Ed" Smith committed suicide by taking arsenic. Despondency over domestic troubles is assigned as the cause.

At Shelbyville, Stephen Colvin will die from being struck on the head with a stone by one of a number of boys who were serenading his newly married sister.

St. Paul's Catholic Church, a magnificent building, was dedicated at Marion. Bishop Rademacher was the celebrant, and the sermon was delivered by the Very Reverend Andrew Morrissey, president of Notre Dame.

Assistant Postmaster General Heath has made arrangements for the consolidation of postoffices in the vicinity of Indianapolis, in conformity with the greater Indianapolis plans. Fifteen additional carriers will be allowed.

Clarence Richwine, a mail carrier dismissed from the service with others by Postmaster Albert Small of Anderson, was reinstated by the civil service and postoffice commissions, and it is understood that similar action will be taken in the cases

THY BROTHER.

When thy heart, with joy overflowing,
Sings a thankful prayer,
In the joy O let thy brother
With thee share.

When the harvest sheaves ingathered
Fill thy barns with store,
To thy God and to thy brother
Give the more.

If thy soul, with power uplifted,
Yearn for glorious deed,
Give thy strength to serve thy brother
In his need.

Hast thou borne a secret sorrow
In thy lonely breast?
Take to thee a sorrowing brother
For a guest.

Share with him thy bread of blessing—
Sorrow's burden share.
When thy heart enfolds a brother,
God is there.

—REV. THEODORE C. WILLIAMS.

The Widow Thomson's Thanksgiving Dinner.

By Hope Darling.

Mrs. Thomson laid down her crochet work and glanced nervously across the table at Martie Trask, her maid and distant cousin.

"Martie, I am going to give a dinner party Thanksgiving."

"What?"

At that single word, clear-cut and aggressive, the courage of the mistress visibly waned.

"Don't you think it would be nice, Martie, for us to ask some of our relatives to eat dinner with us that day—your ma and Tillie, you know, and Flora's folks?"

No sound broke the stillness for the space of two minutes save the ticking of the clock on the mantel, and the crackling of the open wood fire. Evidently Martie was considering the matter.

She was a tall, buxom girl of twenty with a round, freckled face, blue eyes, and an abundance of curly red hair. For four years she had been an inmate of the Thomson home, and had come to look upon her cousin and all her belongings, especially those that pertained to the kitchen, as under the command of Miss Martie Trask.

"Yes," she said, nodding her head vigorously, "we'll do it. I do git so awful tired cookin' for jest us two. We'll git 'em up a right good meal," and Martie pushed back the cuffs of her red calico dress, as if about to begin operations at once.

Mrs. Thomson flushed with pleasure. She was a little woman whose dark face was still untouched by time. A rose-pink dyed her cheeks, her brown eyes were limpid, and the gray hair brushed back from her brow made a quaint frame for the expressive countenance.

"I'm real glad you approve, Martie, though, of course, it needn't have made any great difference," she added, hastily, for she was always asserting her independence in a half-hearted way that deceived no one.

Martie chuckled wisely. "No, course it needn't, but—" and she paused significantly. The next moment she went on in a more gracious tone, "Howsomever, 'bout the party. Sixteen is all that can set down to the table when it's stretched, without crowdin'. There's you and me, ma and sister Tillie and her man Tim, and little Tim. That's six. Then I s'pose you'll want Flora Campbell and her family, though I don't know what you see in her, mor'n your other relations. There's five of the Campbells, five and six, 'leven. Who else?"

"Uncle Leander and Cousin Cyrilla."

"Course. Thirteen. S'pose Ben Burton and his stylish wife would come clear from Lawton if we should ask 'em?"

"I think so. At least we will try. That is fifteen, and I don't know of anyone else, do you?" and the flush deepened on the cheek of the widow, while she steadily avoided meeting Martie's eye.

"Well, I guess I do. You don't mean to tell me, Cousin Sary Thomson, that you'd be mean enough to give a Thanksgivin' dinner and not ask Dave Merchant, and him your third cousin, and a miserable old bachelor at that!"

"I, I—do you really think we ought to ask David?"

"Well, I should say so. You write your invites to them as lives off, and I'll see 'bout the folks here. One thing, Sary, one turkey won't be 'nough."

"We will have two turkeys and four chickens. We shall want two chicken pies."

"Course, and some kind of cold meat. Might have pickled tongue."

"And a veal loaf. We will have that, for I remember Da——, oh, ah, what was it, Martie?"

"Why, I believe you air gittin' flustrated over this," and Martie eyed her companion suspiciously. "You needn't. I'll tend to things. Have veal loaf if you want it, though I don't set no great store by it. It's lucky we made them fruit cakes last month; they'll jest be prime. I'll make that new chocolate cake I learned of Mary Long. That'll be cake 'nough, won't it, with doughnuts and crullers?"

"I will make a pound cake after mother's old recipe," Mrs. Thomson's said dreamily. "We always had one for Thanksgiving when we were young."

"Dreadful old-fashioned," Martie retorted, sniffing contemptuously, "but I don't care. Then there must be mince pies and pumpkin pies and cranberry tarts. Oh, we'll have a good dinner. Well, I guess I'll go to bed now, so's to git up early in the mornin' and begin things. You'll want to write your letters, I s'pose."

"Yes, I think so," was the absent reply.

Martie lighted another lamp and retired into her own room, leaving the mistress of the farmhouse alone. She manifested no desire to set about letter-writing, however, but leaned back in her comfortable rocker, and, as her eyes rested on the mass of glowing embers in the grate, her mind went back to the days of her youth, when she had plighted her troth to this same David Merchant.

That was twenty-five years ago. How happy they had been! But, in a few months, they had quarreled over a trifle, and David went west. For two years she waited, hoping for a word or sign, but hoping in vain. Then she married James Thomson.

She sighed as she remembered the years that followed. There had been no unkindness from the man whose name she bore. Still there had been a narrowness about their life that had almost stifled her, and at times her heart had cried out for congenial companionship. Ten years ago James Thomson had died. Sarah had remained on in the old home alone, save for hired help.

A few months ago David Merchant had returned to that community—a wealthy man. He had never married. The home of his ancestors had passed into his hands, and he was rebuilding and improving the house.

The years had not greatly changed him. He was erect, and the Western sun had bronzed his once fair face. His head was silvered, although the heavy mustache was of the same golden brown hue that Sarah remembered so well.

She rose suddenly. What had started her on such a train of musing? It was too late for letter-writing now, the old clock was striking ten. She hurriedly prepared for bed. As she entered her own room, she lifted high the lamp and gazed long at the picture of James Thomson, which she dutifully kept hanging over her bureau. She shuddered a little; in the keen gray eyes there was surely a mocking light.

"I 'most wish I hadn't decided to give the dinner," she thought. "Maybe David won't come, anyhow."

No scruples troubled Martie, however. She was up early the next morning, and entered gayly upon the preparations for the coming feast. The letters were written and despatched. Martie reported the acceptance of each of the verbal invitations.

A few days later, Mrs. Thomson was returning to her home after calling upon a sick neighbor. The early dusk of the short November day was fast gathering around her, and she quickened her steps. As she turned a corner she came face to face with a man. She was startled, but one glance at the broad-shouldered, compact form and her fears fled.

"Did I frighten you, Sarah?" David Merchant asked, turning and falling into step with her. Then without waiting for a reply, he went on hurriedly, "It was so kind of you to ask me to meet those of my blood and yours at your table. At first, Sarah, I thought I must decline."

"But Martie said you were coming," she said wistfully, stealing a look at the strong face that the shadows were fast hiding.

"Yes, I'll come. You see, Sarah, it was something like this. When I first knew that you were married to James Thomson, I hated him, and I fear I have cherished a bit of that old feeling all these years. At all events, Martie's words called up something strangely like it. I thought I could never eat a Thanksgiving dinner in his house, his and yours. Then I remembered how the years had changed us both, and felt that I was a villain, not to let bygones be bygones and begin again as cousins."

She made no reply, and they walked on in silence until they reached the gate of the Thomson farm. Mr. Merchant opened this for his companion, saying as she passed through:

"You understand, don't you, Sarah?"

"Oh, yes, I understand perfectly well," she said in a voice hoarse with pain. Before he could speak again, she had passed up the walk.

David Merchant stared blankly after her. Not until he had heard the door open and shut did he turn and retrace his steps down the road. He drew a long breath and shook his head. "I was an old fool," he murmured, "to think it could make any difference. Don't know but I might just as well have stayed in Nevada."

Mrs. Thomson found Martie chopping mincemeat and singing hymns. The girl stopped both proceedings long enough to ask:

"Wouldn't make mor'n a dizen pies, would you?"

"Oh, I don't care," was the testy reply. "I almost wish I had never heard of Thanksgiving."

"Land sakes! What ails you?" and Martie held the chopping knife suspended in both hands. "You air clean tuckered out, runnin' round lookin' after sick folks. You better go to bed early to-night, and I'll steep you some boneset."

Mrs. Thomson passed on into her own room without another word. She laid off her neat black hood and shawl, tied a gingham apron around her waist, and smoothed her hair, all the time keeping her back turned to the picture of her dead husband. Somehow she felt that she could not meet that direct gaze just then.

The preparations for Thanksgiving went on apace. Acceptances came from the Burtons and the Campbells. Uncle Leander had not replied, but Martie declared there was no danger of his missing a chance to get a good meal for nothing. As these guests must come by train, they would remain all night. So Martie and her mistress labored on, and the pantry shelves groaned under the weight of delicacies.

It was not until the Monday morning before Thanksgiving that the first cloud appeared upon the sky of Mrs. Sarah. Two letters came; one from Cousin Cyrilla, saying that her father was too ill to attempt even the short journey, the other from Ben Burton. He wrote that since accepting his cousin's invitation his wife and himself had been bidden to a dinner given by an uncle of Mrs. Burton's.

"And as he is a man of wealth and position," the letter ran, "one whose friendship will be of real value to me, you will readily understand that I must withdraw the acceptance previously sent you."

"Glad to hear it," Martie exclaimed crisply, when Mrs. Thomson had finished reading the letter aloud. "If that's all Ben Burton cares for us, let him spend his Thanksgivin' with his wife's rich relations. We can leave one leaf out of the table, that's all."

By Tuesday evening the house was in perfect order. The massive family silver had been duly polished, and the rose-wreathed china that had been Sarah's mother's, as well as the quaint old blue delft of the Thomsons, had been taken down and washed. Martie departed at an early hour that same evening for choir practice, leaving Mrs. Thomson to spend the time alone. fully two hours after her usual time

It was eleven when Martie returned. She lingered a moment at the door before entering, and Mrs. Thomson heard the heavy tones of a man's voice.

"Cousin Sary, I've got somethin' to say," Martie began as soon as she opened the door. "It's somethin' surprisin', so you better be prepared."

Mrs. Thomson looked up questioningly. The girl sat down, unbuttoned and threw back her jacket, took off her hat, and, holding it in her hand, went on in a slow, hesitating way that was utterly at variance with her usual abrupt manner of speaking.

"That's Tom Kester waitin' out there. He came home from York State to-day, and he is goin' back Friday. Him and me's been engaged to be married nigh 'bout two years, but Tom had bad luck 'bout work, and so we waited. Now's he's got a good place, and I'm going to marry him Friday mornin' and start back with him on the noon train, that's all."

Martie was right. Her news was surprising, so much so that her cousin sat staring at her in speechless astonishment.

"Yes, that's all," the prospective bride repeated, evidently displeased at the quiet manner in which her information had been received. "I went home and told ma and Tillie, then I thought I'd have to let you know that I'd quit. I'm goin' back home now, 'cause ma and I air goin' to town right early in the mornin'. Two days hain't long to buy your weddin' clothes and have 'em made, but we'll have to do the best we can."

"Why, Martie, I can't get along without you," Mrs. Thomson cried. "There's our Thanksgiving dinner and—"

"Oh, yes, that makes me think. Ma and Tillie's folks can't come, 'cause we'll have to work every minute. There won't be any one but the Campbells and Dave Merchant. You can git along. You wouldn't have me give up Tom and all our happiness toge'her for your Thanksgivin' dinner, would you?"

"No, no, dear child," and Mrs. Thomson's resentment vanished before the unusual softness of the other's voice. "I am glad, so glad that woman's dearest joy has come to you—that of loving and being loved!"

She forgot her own disappointment, and bustled about, aiding Martie in her preparations for departure. The clock struck twelve before the girl was ready. Even Martie was a little affected at the leave-taking, and she shed a few tears when, in addition to her wages, Mrs. Thomson pressed into her hand a shining eagle.

"For a wedding gift, Martie," she said.

Then she went back to her lonely fireside, and mused over the disastrous fate that seemed to attend upon her plans.

"I do hope Flora's folks will get here before David comes," she thought. "It would be so embarrassing, especially after what he said the other night. The train does not reach the village until half-past ten. Well, all I ca do is to tell Will to drive fast. Now I must go to bed, for I will have plenty to do to-morrow."

Thanksgiving morning dawned, clear and sunny. The bare branches of the trees that surrounded the Thomson farmhouse were outlined in a delicate silvery tracery against the brilliant sky, while their russet foliage lay heaped along the drive.

Within Mrs. Thomson was moving briskly about. By the time she began to look for the return of the team she had sent to meet the Campbells, all was in readiness. The chicken pies were in the warming closet of the stove, potatoes, cabbage and squash were ready for the kettles, and the two great turkeys were browning in the oven which they had shared with a huge Indian pudding, golden-hearted and spicy. Pies, cakes, platters of cold meat, pickles—all were waiting, while the long table in the dining-room was gay in snowy damask, china, silver and glass.

Mrs. Thomson, in a brown merino, cherry ribbons and a large white apron, stood looking eagerly up the road.

"They will be here soon now. Dear me; there will be only seven of us, and there is enough cooked for fifty. Perhaps I can coax Flora to stay until next week. Then I—why, there is Will, and he is all alone."

She ran breathlessly to the gate to meet the hired man. He tossed her an envelope, saying laconically:

"This come, but the folks didn't."

It was a telegram from Flora's husband. With loudly-beating heart, Mrs. Thomson read:

"The children have scarlet fever. Not dangerous, but disappointed.

"FRANK CAMPBELL."

She re-read the few words, then looked imploringly around. Will had driven on to the barn, so she was alone. What could she do?

"I can never entertain David Merchant, and no one else," she said to herself. "Think of our sitting down to those two enormous turkeys, to say nothing of all the rest. It's too ridiculous, or would be if it was anybody else. It may be that something will happen to keep David at home. Oh, but that would be worse than to have him come!"

She went slowly back to the house. Here the sight of her waiting dinner was too much, and sitting down on the roomy lounge, she buried her face in a cushion and let the tears have their way.

"Why, Sarah, what's the matter?" a voice asked a few minutes later.

She glanced up to find David Merchant at her side. He had passed in and then, as the hall door stood open, had entered.

At the sight of him, her tears flowed afresh, while his distress increased.

"What is it, Sarah?" he again inquired, taking one of her hands in both his own sinewy ones. "Tell me what is troubling you, and where are all the folks?"

"Oh, David," she cried hysterically, "there are two turkeys, and food enough for a regiment, but there is no one but you. I would be all alone were it not for you."

Mr. Merchant's eyes mirrored something of the pleasure that filled his heart. "Tell me all about it," he said, soothingly.

She did so. When she had finished, the tears still stood on her lashes but a smile was lurking around the corners of her mouth.

"So I am the sole guest at this Thanksgiving dinner," he exclaimed. "Well, Sarah, I shall go straight home and leave you to dispose of those two turkeys yourself, if you do not make me one promise."

"What is it?" she asked shyly, and the hand he still held trembled.

"Promise to marry me, Christmas."

"I—oh, I—oh, the turkeys are burning, David; I smell them. Let me go."

"Promise me first."

Mrs. Thomson was powerless. One arm of her old lover encircled her waist, and his eyes were reading the secrets of her heart—besides, the turkeys really were burning. So she laid her head upon his broad breast and whispered:

"I promise."—The Housewife.

AMATEUR PIRATES.

Sir Francis Drake's First Attempt in the Art of Piracy

Frank R. Stockton will contribute to the coming volume of St. Nicholas a series of articles on "The Buccaneers of Our Coast." The series begins in the November number. In his characteristic vein, Mr. Stockton says:

"Spain was not at war with England; and when Drake sailed with four small ships into the port of the little town of Nombre de Dios in the middle of the night, the inhabitants of the town were as much astonished as the people of Perth Amboy would be if four armed vessels were to steam into Raritan Bay and endeavor to take possession of the town. The peaceful Spanish towns-people were not at war with any civilized nation, and they could not understand why bands of men should invade their streets, enter the market-place, fire their calivers, or muskets, into the air, and then sound a trumpet loud enough to wake up everybody in the place. Just outside of the town the invaders had left a number of their men; and when these heard the trumpet in the market-place, they also fired their guns. All the noise and hubbub so startled the good people of the town that many of them jumped from their beds, and, without stopping to dress, fled away to the mountains. But all the citizens were not such cowards; and fourteen or fifteen of them armed themselves and went out to defend their town from the unknown invaders.

"Beginners in any trade or profession, whether it be the playing of the piano, the painting of pictures, or the pursuit of piracy, are often timid and distrustful of themselves; so it happened on this occasion with Francis Drake and his men, who were merely amateur pirates, and showed very plainly that they did not yet understand their business.

"When the fifteen Spanish citizens came into the market-place and found the little armed body of Englishmen, they immediately fired upon them, not knowing or caring who they were. This brave resistance seems to have frightened Drake and his men almost as much as their trumpets and guns had frightened the citizens, and the English immediately retreated from the town. When they reached the place where they had left the rest of the party, they found that these had already run away, and taken to the boats. Consequently Drake and his men were obliged partly to undress themselves and to wade out to the little ships. The Englishmen secured no booty whatever, and they only killed one Spaniard, and he was a man who had been looking out of a window to see what was the matter.

"Whether or not Drake's conscience had anything to do with the bungling manner in which he made this first attempt at piracy, we cannot say; but he soon gave his conscience a holiday, and undertook some very successful robbing enterprises. He received information from some of the natives that a train of mules was coming across the isthmus of Panama, loaded with gold and silver bullion, and guarded only by their drivers; for the merchants who owned all this treasure had no idea that there was any one in that part of the world who would commit a robbery upon them. But Drake proved that they could hold up a train of mules as easily as some of the masked robbers in our western country hold up a train of cars. All the gold was taken; but the silver was too heavy for the amateur pirates to carry.

Coal Statistics.

American coal is an important item in the supplies of outward-bound Atlantic liners. Formerly a large amount of coal was taken from British ports in American bottoms. Over a million and a half tons of American coal are now used per year for this purpose. The coal area of the principal countries of the world is enormous. Japan and China have over 200,000 square miles of coal fields. The United States has nearly as much. India, 35,000 square miles; Russia, 27,000 square miles; Great Britain, 9,000 square miles; Germany, 3,600 square miles, with France, Belgium, Spain and other countries about 4,000 square miles. It is estimated that the coal districts of five of the largest European nations would yield something more than three and one-half billion tons of coal. Grumblers who sometimes worry lest by the prodigal waste of coal the supply should be exhausted may be reassured by the statement that there is coal enough in the world to last over a thousand years, at which time they probably will have little interest in mundane affairs. Pennsylvania has the credit of mining fifty million tons of coal during the year 1895. This is the largest production given in the United States. Reports of any coal-producing state. North Carolina furnishes 25,000 tons, which is the smallest amount reported for any State. During the year 1895 the value of the coal production was nearly 108 millions of dollars for bituminous coal, and anthracite about 78½ millions.—The Ledger.

Useful Games.

Frobel was a great advocate of games which would develop the acuteness and discrimination of the senses in children. Autumn fruits may be made to play an important part in this respect. The children of a kindergarten or of a nursery may be taught to name, compare and draw such with colored chalks. Then one child may be blindfolded, and another child hides one of the fruits. If the blinded one guesses which one is missing he is cheered, if not, he tries again. Another way is, to have all the children guess the names of the fruits by the feel of them.—The Housewife.

ELIJAH P. LOVEJOY.

THE MONUMENT TO HIS MEMORY AT ALTON, ILL.

History of This Remarkable Man's Fight Against the Evils of Slavery—Thrilling Events that Culminated in His Assassination.

Died a Martyr.

Over sixty years ago, on the night of Nov. 7, 1837, Elijah P. Lovejoy was shot down in Alton, Ill., while with a few stanch friends he was defending his printing press against the blind fury of a pro-slavery mob. This is the incident upon which was based the appropriation of $25,000 by the Illinois Legislature for the erection in Alton of a monument to the memory of the martyr, the dedication of which took place on the recent anniversary of that famous tragedy.

The man whose brief career is thus commemorated in marble and bronze, Elijah Parish Lovejoy, was born at Albion, Kennebec, Me., Nov. 8, 1802. He was the eldest of a family of nine children, the son of a Congregational minister. The early years of his life were spent upon the little New England farm, and were distinguished only in his abnormal desire for knowledge. His spare time was always occupied in study, and by his own thrift he was enabled to enter the sophomore class in Waterville College in 1823, where he graduated with honor three years later. He then taught school a few years, but was seized with the mania for migration to the West, and landed in St. Louis in 1827. Here he began writing for the local press. His first newspaper work was done as an attache of the St. Louis Times, which advocated the election of Henry Clay to the Presidency. He had a seemingly brilliant opening here, but during a religious revival that followed the election he embraced the Presbyterian faith, and his purpose in life was suddenly changed. He entered the Princeton Theological Seminary in 1832, and was licensed to preach a year later by the Philadelphia Presbytery. Returning, however, to St. Louis, he was assisted by friends in the founding of a weekly newspaper, which he called the St. Louis Observer. The first number appeared Nov. 22, 1833.

RESIDENCE OF LOVEJOY.

The slavery question was then agitating the community, and it was impossible for a man of his positive convictions to keep still on such a vital subject. During the summer of 1834 he formally announced his opposition to the whole system of slavery, and thereby began his troubles. His editorials soon began to be talked about, yet they would read as very mild utterances today. They are significant also in that they prove that Lovejoy was not an abolitionist. He said in his own columns: "Gradual emancipation is the remedy we propose. This we look upon as the only feasible and, indeed, the only desirable way of effecting our freedom from the thralldom in which we are held. In the meantime the rights of all classes of our citizens should be respected, and the work proposed, carried on and finished as one in which all classes are alike interested, and in which all may be called upon to make sacrifices of individual interests to the general welfare of the community." On another occasion he said that emancipation should be effected "by the masters and no others." He hated slavery, but appreciated the position and feeling of the slaveholders, and frequently stated that it was a national and not a sectional evil. Yet even this line of argument was bitterly resented, and under date of Oct. 5, 1835, a letter was sent to him by a committee of St. Louis citizens commanding that he cease talking of slavery in his paper. He refused flatly and in an editorial said: "The free communication of thoughts and opinions is one of the inalienable rights of man, and any person may freely speak, write or print on any subject, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty." In the closing paragraph he thus declared himself: "I do, therefore, as an American citizen and Christian patriot, in the name of liberty, law and religion, solemnly protest against all these attempts, however and by whomsoever made, to frown down the liberty of the press and forbid the free expression of opinion. Under a deep sense of my obligations to my country, the church and my God, I declare it to be my fixed purpose to submit to no dictation. And I am prepared to abide by the consequences. I have appealed to the Constitution and laws of my country; if they will fail to protect me I appeal to my God, and with Him I cheerfully rest my cause." This brought a request for Lovejoy to resign as editor of the Observer. He did so at once, but the paper was in debt and the stock was turned over to a Mr. Moore, who replaced him in charge, and they decided to bring the plant to Alton. This was reconsidered, however, and the paper continued. In April, 1836, a negro was lynched. The Observer denounced the lynching as a disgrace to the community, and when the judge of the local court quashed proceedings against members of the mob, characterizing the act as "beyond all human law," his action was in turn attacked as disgraceful and demoralizing. A few days later the Observer office was entered and the plant ruined. The press was not destroyed and was shipped on Sunday to Alton. The same night it was wrecked and dumped into the river. A public meeting followed in which the people promised to secure another outfit for the paper. The publication of the Observer was resumed Sept. 8, 1836. It was uninterrupted until the following August. Lovejoy wrote without intermission on the subject of slavery, and meantime continued his religious work, being moderator of the Alton Presbytery when he died.

LOVEJOY'S OFFICE.

The St. Louis opposition, however, soon manifested itself there, and on July 11, 1837, a public meeting protested against the course of the paper and appointed a committee to intercede with Lovejoy. He received the delegation politely, but in cold disdain of their mission. The trouble culminated as usual. The plant was totally destroyed on the night of Aug. 21. The same night a committee of vigilantes waylaid Lovejoy on a lonely road and informed him that they had decided he was a nuisance in the community and proposed to tar and feather and set him adrift on the river. He listened calmly, and then said: "Gentlemen, I am in your hands, with neither the power nor the disposition to resist. I have, however, one request to make. My wife is dangerously ill and I was on my way to town to have a prescription filled. If one of you will pledge his word to take it and have the medicine prepared and deliver it at my house without letting my wife know what has become of me you may do with me what you wish." There was profound silence for a moment, and then the leader said: "Boys, I can't touch him. He is too brave a man." And he was allowed to go in peace. On Sept. 21, another press arrived. It was destroyed the same night. Then Lovejoy thought of removing either to St. Charles, Mo., or to Quincy. But he was not disposed to run away from trouble, and on the advice of friends he remained and ordered a new press.

LOVEJOY'S DEATH SCENE.

In anticipation of its arrival another public meeting was held, with the object of persuading the editor to take a new course. Then it was that he made his dying declaration, which rings yet as the keynote of his life and of American independence: "But, gentlemen, as long as I am an American citizen, and as long as American blood runs in these veins, I shall hold myself at liberty to speak, to write, to publish whatever I please on any subject, being amenable to the laws of my country for the same." On Nov. 6 the fourth press arrived and was placed in the warehouse of Godfrey & Gilman. It was successfully defended that night by a committee who tendered their services to Mayor John M. Krum as a peace guard. On Nov. 7, they were there again, with Lovejoy, and saw him killed. This roll of honor is as follows: Elijah P. Lovejoy, Thaddeus P. Hurlburt, Royal Weller, James Morse Jr., Edward Breath, J. C. Woods, Reuben Gerry, Enoch Lang, Samuel J. Thompson, D. F. Randall, Amos R. Roff, William Harned, John S. Noble, George H. Walworth, George H. Whitney, Winthrop S. Gilman, George S. Brown, H. D. Davis, D. Burt Loomis, Henry Tanner. Of this committee the last one, D. Burt Loomis, passed away at his home in Minneapolis one year ago. About 9 o'clock the mob surrounded the warehouse again. The attack came promptly, accompanied by many shots. Capt. Long ordered one shot fired in response. This killed a man, and the mob dispersed, but returned later to the attack with greater fury. An attempt was made to fire the roof, and during a lull Lovejoy went out to see if the blaze had taken hold. Then five shots rang out from behind a woodpile and Lovejoy fell dead. That ended the trouble. The mob at once retired and no further demonstration was made. Lovejoy was buried two days later, and by coincidence a colored man dug his grave and cared for it for years while others knew not even its location. Later Thomas Dimmock, a St. Louis journalist, procured a lot in the city cemetery, had the remains removed there and placed upon the grave the present stone, a scroll of New England granite, bearing the words: "Here lies Lovejoy. Spare him now that he is buried." In August, 1886, Mr. Dimmock transferred by deed to the colored people of Alton all right, title and interest in the lot and its contents, and they are now its legitimate custodians. Such is the history of the man whom the people of Illinois have thus commemorated in imperishable stone. History has vindicated his work and his principles—the essential point of which, after all, was based not on abolitionism, but upon the maintenance at all hazards of the right of free speech and the liberty of the American press.

MONUMENT OF LOVEJOY.

ANCIENTS VALUED GOLD.

Antique Mining Implements Discovered Near the Red Sea.

Gold was probably the first metal observed and collected, because of the instinctive understanding of its intrinsic value. About it superstitions grew, religious and ceremonious rites and strange crimes were committed for its possession in the days when it was believed that it was of such stuff that the sun itself was made and the halls of Valhalla paved. Rock paintings and carvings of Egyptian tombs earlier than the days of Joseph indicate the operation of washing auriferous sand, and a subsequent melting in furnaces by the aid of blow pipes. Less than twenty years ago the old mines of Nubia, so graphically described by Diodorous, were rediscovered on the shores of the Red Sea, together with a line of ancient wells across the desert; the underground workings where ore veins had been followed with the pick, the rude cupelling furnaces for assaying, picks, oil lamps, stone mills, mortars and pestles, inclined warming tables of stone, crucibles and retorting furnaces of burned tile, by which the entire process could be traced.

Here slaves and hapless prisoners of war exchanged their life blood for glittering dust to fill the treasuries of their captors. In India and Asia Minor the powdered ore was washed down over smooth, sloping rocks and gold caught in the fleeces of sheepskins sunk in the stream. It was literally a golden fleece that Jason brought back from the Caucasus. Further north and following the eastern foothills of Mount Ararat to the southern slope of the Ural mountains in Russian Siberia, where last year millions were taken out of the old mines, the ancient Scythians broke up rock and gravel with copper implements, scraped out the glittering dust and nuggets with the fangs of wild boars, and carried their gain away in bags of leather. All through this region miners of today know that one of the chief dangers to be avoided are the Scythian pits, sixty feet deep in the gravel, and shaped like a well. The remains of thousands of small furnaces of burned clay testify to the long period over which the workings of the mines extended.—Modern Machinery.

AMAZING ESCAPE FROM DEATH.

Whirled Around a Shaft Nearly Ten Thousand Times.

Nine thousand three hundred and seventy-five times did Engineer James L. Grander, in a mine at Bourne, Ohio, revolve rapidly in a fly wheel. It was a twenty-foot wheel, making 125 revolutions every minute, and the unfortunate man was in its coils for an hour and a quarter. It was while he was at work in the mine that he fell into the wheel, which was going at full speed at the time. It continued to whirl. There was no one at hand who witnessed the accident, and consequently no effort was made to stop the whirling of the wheel. The man mercifully lost consciousness almost immediately. In the course of about an hour some one discovered Grander's plight and the wheel was stopped as soon as possible. He was not seriously hurt.

Victoria's Favorite Pose.

Soon after the birth of the Prince of Wales, Victoria's picture dandling the infant heir to the throne on her knees was displayed in shop windows throughout the land. It was received with enthusiasm. Something of the motherliness of this royal woman touched the hearts of her people and Victoria, quick to see the hold that it gave her upon them, has maintained the practice of presenting them at regular intervals with a photograph of herself dandling something in the shape of a descendant upon her knees. First her own children, then her grandchildren, and later still her great-grandchildren all have served as ties to bind her more closely to her subjects.

A Theory.

"What do you think of the escape of Miss Cisneros from that Spanish prison?"

"I think some of our ex-policemen must be down there acting as jailers."

THE AUBURN COURIER.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.... November 1897

MAY MEET.

The legislature of Indiana have a voluntary meeting and banquet Dec. 30. There is also talk of holding an extra session in order to make a few laws that seem necessary to fit the new conditions in our newly developed oil fields. It is thought also that some new law is needed to repair the damage done by the law of last winter, that stops the labor in the Michigan City prison.

THE OULD SOD.

Dec. 4, the Irishmen of Chicago, will have a great fair at "Battery D" ond the Lake Front. It is gotten up by the Ancient Order of Hibernians, and this date is taken in order to commemerate the excution of the leaders of the last great Fenian uprisings. A novel feature is the outline map of Ireland, in real Irish earth, showing its hills, valleys, rivers, bogs, etc., exsotly as in the make up of the island itself. They sent an agent over to Ireland, and he went to each of the thirty two counties and got a ton of earth from each, and had it shipped over here. So in this map, each county represented will have its own earth, or in other words, the Irish can actually walk over the real "Ould Irish Sod," while in the coming fair. The proceeds go to build the Hiberian societies a new hall.

A POOR LAW.

The law made by the last legislature that puts a stop to labor in the state prison, is no doubt a serious mistake. It was enacted at the request of several labor unions who claimed that prison labor comes into contact with free labor. So the law was fixed up to the effect that no more contracts for prison labor should be made. And when present contracts expire, as several will soon, the prisoners will be idle. This idleness will be very distasteful to the prisoners themselves, as it will make their confinement all the harder to bear when they have no hing to do. Besides it will compel the state to go down into its pocket to support them in idleness. It is no doubt a foolish law and ought to be repealed. In talking with the guard who brought Borst, Sawyel ane Dills to the McIntosh trial, he says the best plan would be to have the state itself employ the men, then their service would not be so hard. As it is, a convict who is employed at so much a day, is expected to work whether he feels able on not, and often does work when he ought to be in the hospital. And when he works he must do a certain fixed amount, each day.

CARD OF THANKS.

Mrs. Wm. Ice desires the COURIER to assist in thanking several parties who helped greatly to lighten her burden of grief on the occasion of the sad death of her husband. She wishes the neighbors to know how grateful she feels to them, and also to Dr. Sparling for many favors. And also especially to the Greenler Co., that made a handsome donation toward paying the funeral expenses, and the employes of the Greenler Co who also made liberal cash donations.

THE BAZAR.

The ladies of the Presbyterian church will spen ther bazar Dec. 10, to continue two days. In connection with it there will be an anniversary dinner and a market. Further announcements will be made as to location etc.

DEPEW...DEAL

Wm Madison DePew, of Jackson township and Mrs. Sarah Deal, of La-Otto were married in the city this afternoon by Rev. W. L. Meese. They have the best wishes of the COURIER for their future happiness.

ARE THANKFUL.

And The Greenler Co. Made Donations to Their Employes.

The Greenler Co. is progressive and wide awake and not only keep business booming, but they do not forget the men whose faithful service help to do the booming. This is the thanksgiving season, and they made it a point to give a fine turkey to each head of a family in their employ. It took 48 turkeys to go around and there will be that number of families in Auburn, who will have a day of rejoicing. The Greenler plant will be popular, as the Greenler Co. is also a popular company in Auburn.

FIFTY FEET OF TFSTIMONY.

The COURIER has exhibited in the show window the string of testimonyas given in the DAIYY COURIER during the trial of W. H. McIntosh. The length is just fifty feet. It will be seen that the report as given in the DAILY far exceeded that given in any other paper in the county.

FROM PENN'S STATE.

We have a most interesting letter from John H. Hornberger, who is at Pentz, Clearfield Co. Pa., which we would like to publish as it is full of the meat of political wisdom. But as he says "Nay," we omit it, except to say they are well and getting along all right. The weather has been fine down there in general, though we suppose the cold wave has reached them by this time. He speaks of the COURIER being irregular in reaching him. We shall do our best to get three in good shape. It leaves the office here without fail every Wednesday evening or Thursday morning.

Honesty and Virtue.

There is more honesty and virtue contained in a bottle of Salvation Oil, than in any other liniment known. "Mrs. A. Fiedler, 2864 Palethorp St., Philadelphia, Pa., confirms this truth: She found Salvation Oil to be an excellent remedy for rheumatism, stiff joints, bruises, etc., and thinks it should always be kept in the house." Don't listen to the dealer's arguments in favor of a substitute. Insist on getting Salvation Oil, it costs only 25 cts.

Boats Carried on the Heads of Men.

The achievement has often been referred to of the carrying of steamboats on the backs of men. The expression is not quite accurate, for the Congo natives are trained from infancy to carry burdens on their heads. When a European on the lower Congo sent his black boy to a store to buy some cigarettes, he was surprised to see the servant return with the tiny package on his head. When a Congo woman has smoked her much-loved pipe the treasure is likely to repose on her head until she again requires it; and if her husband, unfortunately, has been able to procure a bottle of rum, he walks home with it nicely balanced on his head, throwing stones at the stray dogs and cats in his way, without the slightest idea that he is really an expert equilibrist. Most of the many thousands of pieces of steamboats were carried on the heads and not on the backs of men.

The 50,000 natives of the lower Congo who have been carrying these steamboats and all other freight around the cataracts are the very men who could not be induced, eighteen years ago, to give a helping hand to Mr. Stanley. He wished to carry 1,830 man-loads, and he had only 190 Zanzibar and Loango porters for the work. Some of the natives would sell him a little of their time, but they would not carry his goods more than two or three miles beyond their homes. Stanley's failure to secure the carriers he needed along the river delayed his work on the upper Congo for more than a year, and the labor question was the most perplexing problem with which he had to deal. He brought his carriers thousands of miles, from Zanzibar and other coasts of Africa.—Harper's Round Table.

ONCE A ROYAL SPORT.

In England cock-fighting, perhaps the least manly of all the sports, has been for many generations associated with Shrove Tuesday, the explanation given being that the crowing of a cock prevented the Saxon ancestors of the Englishmen from massacring their conquerors, the Danes, on the morning of a Shrove Tuesday while asleep in their beds. It is said cock-fighting was invented by the ancient Greeks.

According to one account Themistocles, the great general, while leading his army against the Persians came across some cocks fighting. Calling his troops he said: "These animals fight not for the gods of their country, nor for the monuments of their ancestors, nor for glory, nor freedom, nor for their children, but for the sake of victory and that one may not yield to the other." It is said this speech had an inspiring effect on the Athenians and annual cock fights were thereupon established as an act of thanksgiving.

It was only natural that the Romans should copy the sport from the Greeks, but with them it was only a brutal amusement. The Romans brought the idea to Great Britain, though the date is unknown. About the middle of the twelfth century, however, this sport was indulged in at Shrovetide; schoolboys brought gamebcoks to school and spent the whole afternoon watching them, the schoolroom serving as a pit, the schoolmaster as director of the sport. An interesting survival of this remained in England until a recent day, when children brought a "cockpenny" as a present to the school teacher at Shrovetide instead of the live cock of former days.

Two royal names stand out as especially associated with this sport—those of Henry VIII., who built a royal cockpit, and James I., who ordered a cockfight twice a week. There were also pits at Drury Lane, Jerwin street and Shoe street. Charles I. was also favorable to the sport and appointed a "cock-master general," with a salary of $100 a year.

Fresh Air and Consumption.

A French physician has recently expressed the opinion that, with proper regulations, tuberculosis may be restricted within the narrowest bounds and perhaps almost exterminated. This is a conviction founded upon the most thorough and conclusive experimental investigation, confirmed by practical experience. In France a strong effort is being made toward the restriction of the spread of the disease by working on consumptive children through the fresh air treatment, and an institution has been carried on for several years, known as the "Fresh Air Cure for Consumptive Children." Two hospitals for this purpose are situated—one at Ormisson and the other at Villiers-sur-Marne. The medical men interested in this work consider it the most promising method yet employed in trying to reduce the rate of mortality from consumption in France, which in some cities—Paris, Rouen and Havre, for example—is exceedingly high. Medicine forms no part of the treatment, except the occasional use of cod liver oil in the cold season. The work of cure is, therefore, left entirely to fresh air and to the hygienic living of the patients. With the exception of a very few cases, where persistent fever keeps them in bed during the first part of their stay in the hospital, all the patients are obliged to follow the regular system of living. They rise early, bathe well, and are dressed in linen garments, loosely fitting. Twice a week, unless otherwise ordered by the physician, each patient is bathed and vigorously rubbed by an attendant. After the toilet the patients eat a light breakfast; this is insisted upon for each child, for suitable and regular meals have proved most necessary in aiding the treatment. After breakfast the children are sent into the garden or park or covered playground, where they enjoy games and exercises, varying with the season. The most serious cases are kept indoors, lying in reclining chairs, well wrapped in warm coverings, and breathing the fresh air admitted into the room. Except for the two principal meals of the day, the entire time is passed in the open air, and the rooms are also ventilated with the greatest possible amount of fresh air. For the last five years the reports as to the condition of the patients have, without the least variation, shown the most satisfactory results, surpassing even the hopes entertained by the founders.

—Angola Republican:—The Auburn COURIER has moved into new quarters and now occupies the Sebring block on North Main Street, and is located on the ground floor. It is getting to be quite a fad nowdays, and a just one too, for printing offices to be on the ground floor. The time has passed when first-class printing establishments are found in the dingy garrets or some other out-of-the-way place, They deserve more prominence. We are glad to note that Bro. Barns has "come down" to an "up-to-date" attitude, and may his spicy little daily get to Angola the same day it is printed.

—Angola Herald:—Our friends Hon. A. Eugene Davis and Miss Elizabeth M. Barr, both well known to many of our readers, were quietly married in Chicago on the 2nd inst., and are now comfortably located and "keeping house" in the Powers and Waller addition to Angola. This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.
